The hero, Karl, is an escaped convict who takes to the hills for refuge. He returns to the valley and finds employment on the farm of Halla, the richest woman in the province. But a passer-by recognizes him and informs the constable. The latter is determined to hang Karl, but Halla effects his escape. And she follows. Together they make their way to the hills as man and wife. Years pass by and they are happy until the law gets in its dreadful persecution. The sweethearts are willing to die as they have lived—contented in love. The picture presents a world of color and drama and picturesque appeal.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ———— theatre are certain to be genuinely entertained when the Swedish Biograph production "You and I" appears at the ———— next ————. This drama, adapted from the Scandinavian of Sigor Johnson, is acknowledged to be one of the most powerful offerings ever presented. It is a picture of self-sacrifice and romance tempered with unusual depth and feeling. The scenes are taken in Iceland—that far-off country of rugged beauty and against them this drama takes on a force, the power of which is tremendous. "You and I" is adapted from "Eyvind of the Hills," which at the present time is being presented upon the New York stage. It is a drama of simplicity, pathos, heart-throbs and vital and vivid with reality. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

If you played the previous Swedish Biographs and advertised them extensively there is no reason why you shouldn't attract a healthy patronage with this one. Your folks should remember "A Man There Was," which featured Victor Seastrom. You can tell them that this sterling actor is coming in "You and I," adapted from Sigor Johnson's powerful drama, "Eyvind of the Hills." You can tell them that this play is being presented now in New York. Bill it as a tremendous drama of the heart. Tell that it is staged in Iceland and that patrons are certain to be feasted with a treat pictorially as well as dramatically. This picture is worthy of patronage and if you advertise it properly you can get box-office receipts. Once in, the crowd will advertise it by word of mouth.

"THE WITCHING HOUR"
(Paramount)

Weak Adaptation of Rich Melodrama

PROBABLY no stage play of the last twenty years has offered the picture producer richer or more spectacular opportunities than Augustus Thomas' "The Witching Hour." This drama, one of the first to make use of the latent dramatic possibilities in that mysterious fact of hypnotism—a fact which still to some remains a theory and is therefore the more fascinating—seems to have been molded in the exact form or mold so dear to the scenario writer and director. Considering the essentials of the play, its theme, its involved but always gripping plot (a plot certainly possessing a murder puzzle, the solution of which is beyond the average patron), its dual love interest and its powerful melodramatic highlights, it is peculiar that a director of the skill of William D. Taylor did not make more of it.

What strikes us as the most obvious flaw of the production is the too abundant use of subtitles. Subtitle writing is an art only as long as the author of the printed words seeks to clarify or emphasize the pictured action. When the author of the subtitle finds it convenient to supplant the action with references to important complementary scenes, the result is a give-away to the spectator that the scenario writer or director has not done his business in the way of picturing the drama itself. In other words, "The Witching Hour" is poorly adapted for the screen. It seems hurried, careless—the possibilities of the original have not been grasped—not even suggested. The psychology of characterization, the rich and vital action, the tense situations and climaxes—these are missing.

The picture carries some fine lighting and some extravagant settings. These cannot compensate for the lack of drama. Elliot Dexter heads a cast composed of many of the most reliable members of the Lasky stock company. But even Dexter seems to be wandering a bit. Even in the famous dramatic scene, when he tells the villain to drop the gun, that he "can't pull the trigger," he seems more inclined to emphasize the attractiveness of his own profile than the actual force of the situation itself. "The Witching Hour" will attract patronage—that is certain what with its various advertising accessories of the production. The question whether it will please its large houses is another matter, however. The original material is so well known that it seems exceedingly difficult to judge the picture on its own merits—the ghosts of the play and the initial picture production made from it stalk about and are inclined to mock the various scenes and sequences in the present adaptation—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is probably one of the best known of all Augustus Thomas' stage plays, "The Witching Hour," a Paramount-Artcraft special production, is scheduled to come to the ———— theatre beginning next ————. At the time that Thomas, the dean of American playwrights, prepared this subject for the speaking stage, it was one of the first attempts to dramatize what has since become a world discussed topic—that is, thought transference or hypnotism.

How the playwright develops his message and how he proves a point that recently has become vital with the majority of the American public, will not be disclosed here. It is sufficient to say that the picture was produced under the direction of William D. Taylor, a man whose productions have long been noted for their peculiar excellence. Added to the talents of Mr. Taylor there are the services of Elliott Dexter, who essays the role of Jack Brookfield, the Kentucky gambler, in whose hands lies the matter of clearing the murder charge against his protege, the fiance of his neice, the young Clay Whipple. A large cast of favorites appears in support including Winter Hall, Ruth Renick, Robert Cain, Mary Alden and Fred Turner. The same accurate detail which characterizes all of Mr. Taylor's productions is a marked feature of "The Witching Hour."

PROGRAM READER

"The Witching Hour," one of the most famous of all American stage plays, is the coming attraction at the ———— theatre beginning ————. "The Witching Hour" is regarded as one of the classics of the American stage, as it was one of the first plays to deal with the now widely discussed topic of hypnotism. Since Augustus Thomas wrote the play the subject on which he discoursed has become of universal moment. Especially since the war have matters of hypnotism and thought transference come under general observation. It is not likely then that patrons of the ———— theatre will overlook the opportunity to see this production. Added to the timeliness of the theme there is the presence of an excellent cast headed by Eliott Dexter. A picture that is powerfully dramatic and DIFFERENT—that is "The Witching Hour." Don't miss it.

CATCH LINES

The powerful drama of hypnotism—of a certain jewel that caused a man to commit murder. Was he guilty? See "The Witching Hour"—one of the most unusual pictures of the day.

"WHILE THE DEVIL LAUGHS"
(Fox)

An Unconvincing Underworld Story With Louise Lovely

IT would take a more appealing star to put this one across as a really popular picture. Louise Lovely presents an attractive appearance on the screen, but only the most exceptional personality could raise the production out of the sloughs of mediocrity. Its place on the screen is simply that of a feature meant to fill a program for people who want to see a movie of the ancient variety, and who are not used to anything great in theme, production, or acting. It is manufactured for them out of a theme of a poor girl struggling to be honest, with incidents of the most familiar type filling it out to feature length.

The story is laid in the underworld, but it is not primarily a crook story, as it is generally understood. There are no hounding detectives and no mystery. The girl is a thief in the beginning. She is in love with an honest taxi driver who has invented a patent washing machine. But she has a helpless brother and sister to support and a father for whom to buy booze. So, at the pleading of her lover, she decides to go straight. She makes this promise to the Lord when her young brother lies dying. It proves to be a fair bargain, for the little fellow recovers immediately. Then a robbery is "framed" with the result that her sweetheart is sent to prison for six months. Then comes the struggle. Her old employer, the crook, seeks to re-obtain her services and she tries to find honest employment—which she cannot do. Meanwhile, the sub-titles state, the devil is laughing most hilariously. To make matters worse, her sweetheart believes that she is untrue to him.

At the end there is a fire scene for a climax, with a last minute rescue which grows quite exciting. These somewhat hackneyed incidents, developed in a manner in nowise original, are not convincing to a screen-educated audience. Louise Lovely helps a lot to put interest in the fire sequence, but it is in pictures of a lighter and more romantic type that this star would make the most friends. Playing opposite her is William Scott, a capable actor, in a part of few opportunities. The rest of the cast is adequate.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Louise Lovely, pretty Fox star, plays the leading role in "While the Devil Laughs," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This is a thrilling screen drama with its story laid in New York's underworld, which contains plenty of romantic and comedy touches as well as thrilling action.

Louise Lovely, though young in years, is not a tyro in screen work. She has played a leading lady with many of the most popular male stars, and because of her success and popularity William Fox decided to place her in pictures in which she should have the leading role.

"While the Devil Laughs" is such a picture. It narrates the story of a girl of New York's world of crime forced to become an accomplice of crooks in order to provide for her smaller brother and sister. When a crisis in her life comes, she vows she will never more do anything wrong. But she finds that an honest livelihood is easier to speak of than to earn. Fate turns his hard hand against her, and the devil truly laughs at her valiant struggle against such overwhelming odds.

This picture will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days. In the cast are William Scott, G. Raymond Nye and Edwin Booth Tilton, and others equally capable.

PROGRAM READER

"While the Devil Laughs," the feature picture which will appear at the ———— theatre on ————, is a screen production you will enjoy. It was built by masters of their art for your enjoyment. No element has been omitted. There is red-blooded action, thrills, heart interest, romance and comedy. Louise Lovely, dainty and pretty Fox star, is seen in the stellar role. Although a recent arrival at the sacred heights of stardom, Miss Lovely is by no means an inexperienced actress. She has played opposite some of the most popular male stars on the screen today, and her reward is that she is now appearing in pictures starring as the star.

The story of "While the Devil Laughs" is laid in the underworld of New York. It tells the tale of a girl who struggles against environment to reach a place in the sun. And all during the struggle, when success seems well-nigh impossible, the Devil sits and laughs, confident that he has gained another victory. But the little girl, weak and inexperienced as she is, does not quit and a time comes when success and victory are achieved.

SUGGESTIONS

The best point of appeal in this picture is the star. She is somewhat new to stardom, but a long and varied career in pictures has made her known to thousands of movie lovers. She has played opposite a number of Fox male stars. Her previous starring picture was "The Little Grey Mouse." She presents an appealing appearance on the screen, and her photograph in the lobby would be attractive. You can advertise this as a "thriller of New York's underworld." At the same time you might emphasize that it is not melodrama of the cheapest sort.

"PRINCESS JONES"
(Vitagraph)

Light Offering Affords Fair Entertainment

IF a bit light, it is clean and interest holding entertainment. It is a likely vehicle in which to show off a recently promoted star in the stellar role. There was a fair story to go on. The director, with the evident support of his company, made the best of it, beginning by casting the production with apparent care.

There is an unusually smooth continuity and the sub-titles helped a lot. They were of particular merit. The photography, too, is well above the average, exteriors well selected and a noticeable consideration for detail throughout.

Alice Calhoun as Princess Jones is girlish, natural and radiates an unlooked for amount of charm. Vincent Coleman, opposite the star, is splendid and shoulders a deal of the burden with ease. He is sure, in this instance particularly, to please the feminine element. The supporting cast is adequate and withal the picture is one which might not live long in one's memory after the final fade out, but for the time it is being viewed is entertaining, a bit humorous and restful.

Princess Jones, the niece of a country storekeeper, lives with her Uncle and acts as general supervisor of the store. Between sales Princess reads and dreams. She longs to become a society girl and live in the atmosphere of wealth and social position. So, when a long promised vacation is about to materialize, she prepares to spend two weeks at a fashionable resort. A young man puts in appearance. He meets Princess.

At the same time a real princess with a name beginning with Jones and ending in obolofsky appears. Detectives are on her trail. The country girl is mistaken for the Russian princess. The latter, seeing the way open to further baffle her pursuers, applies to Princess Jones for a position as maid. The father of the artist is informed that his son has become infatuated with a woman and, hoping to buy off the adventuress, the father seeks out the bogus princess, but instead of banishing her from her erstwhile kingdom, falls a victim to her charms. —Length, 5 reels.—Lillian R. Gale.

Directed by G. V. Seffertitz.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Princess Jones" is the title of the Vitagraph picture which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week with Alice Calhoun as the star. This production marks the debut of Miss Calhoun in the stellar ranks of screen players and the photoplay by Joseph Franklin Poland, a scenarist of talent, is said to be an ideal vehicle for the display of her personality. "Princess Jones" is a clean, wholesome narrative of human interest, pulsating with love and adventure. It tells the story of a simple country girl, who longed to be a princess and received her wish in a strange manner.

At the opening of the story Princess Jones is serving as her uncle's sole assistant in his general store and dreaming of the time when she may justify the name "Princess." She finds an opportunity to spend a vacation at a beach resort and her name attracts attention because it is known that a real princess of a Balkan kingdom is in the country incognito. Princess and the real princess meet and become friends. Complications enter in which the identities of the two princesses are mistaken. But the picture ends with romance triumphant. The offering is well acted and produced.

PROGRAM READER

She found that if she could get her uncle to smoke his pipe she could induce him to give her a vacation. She was only a country girl, but she wanted to be a real lady for two weeks. Her dream came true in a most unexpected manner and with it came strange adventures and excitement. She wished and her wish came true. Such is the brief outline of "Princess Jones," the Vitagraph picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with Alice Calhoun. The picture is filled with delightful surprises, heart interest and humor. Miss Calhoun has been elevated to stardom because of her magnetic personality and the fact that she possesses abundant talent. In "Princess Jones" she rises to new heights. The picture is finely adapted by Sam Taylor and Van Buren Powell and directed by G. V. Seffertitz.

SUGGESTIONS

You can play this up as a delightful fancy—a delightful romance or adventure. Bring out that it presents Alice Calhoun as a star—a star because of her magnetic personality and abundant talent. Impress upon your patrons that the chance is theirs to see a new star and a mighty attractive one. Play up the picture as an offering of charm and simplicity and heart interest in which the characters live real lives and become real friends. What of the title? Surely it can be exploited in a number of ways. What about the good old name of Jones? Surely it can be advertised in several ways. You can have a Jones matinee day for every family of that name, giving them free admission. You can advertise it as a picture of delightful adventure.

CATCH LINES

She longed to be a princess and her wish came true. Come to the ———— theatre and follow the adventures of "Princess Jones," starring pretty Alice Calhoun.

See Alice Calhoun in "Princess Jones," a Vitagraph pictures which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. A picture of charm, heart interest and romance.

"THE TIDAL WAVE"
(Stoll Film Corp.)

Has Interest, But Is Rather Long Drawn Out

ALTHOUGH "The Tidal Wave" is a decided improvement in every way over "God's Good Man" which we reviewed last week, it is a long way from what might be called a good program picture.

And there are several reasons why.

In the first place the story, although it has plenty of action, is not strong enough or interesting enough, being of the foreign variety to give an American audience what they expect.

True enough it has action, but there is nothing in it which would raise it above any of our ordinary features.

There is one thing which sticks out like a house afire, in these features and which if corrected would add to the interest and a decided improvement in production. It is the continual habit of the actors to get out of position when they are playing on or near the edge of the camera line, causing the players to be cut in halves, as it were and the scenes to appear wanting.

And the actors will persist in explaining everything to the audience before the action is given. The probable reason for this is that English actors accustomed to the stage have two hours or so in which to deliver their dialogue, while in a five-reel picture which runs about an hour, the action has to be condensed in order to make up for time. If this were corrected a lot of time could be saved which could be used to better advantage.

The story tells the tale of a young girl who is sent by her dying father to his sister in a little Cornish village to be taken care of. The young lady is of the flighty sort and doesn't hesitate to change lovers when opportunity presents itself. First she is in love with a young fisherman, but when she sets eyes upon a handsome artist she throws her former lover down for the new one. But she learns in the end that her former sweetheart is the truest and bravest, and the finish shows them in each other's arms.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Adam Brewster.....Judd Green
Aunt Eliza Peck.....Annie Esmond
Matt Brewster.....Sydney Seaward
Gerald Knight.....Pardoe Woodman
Carmen Hale.....Poppy Wyndham

Adapted and produced by Sinclaire Hill.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Tidal Wave," another Stoll Film Corporation production, will make its appearance at the ———— theatre on ———— of next week.

It is another one of those beautifully written stories of English life with the heroine in the character of a pretty girl of Spanish extraction, Carmen Hale, who is sent by her father to his dying sister, Aunt Eliza.

Eliza's brother Adam, joint owner of the inn and his son, Matt, were disturbed, each in a different way. Matt, honest, courageous, unromantic, soon found a rival in Carmen's favor in Gerald Knight, an artist.

And when the honest Matt remonstrated with Carmen for posing for Knight, it only made her inflame into anger and on the spur of the moment she threw herself into the arms of the too eager Knight.

But a day comes when she bitterly repents of this, recognizes the true worth of Matt and learns to forget the other.

The picture is well directed, has a splendid cast and plenty of wonderful exteriors.

PROGRAM READER

She thought she loved him because he was good looking and an artist only to be terribly disappointed. But then there was the other young man whose honesty and courageousness made him stand out, in the opinion of the beautiful girl as a lighthouse in the sea—after she had found out and compared the two rivals for her hand.

How many young girls have been placed in this predicament and how many have loved the wrong young man only to discover their mistake when it is too late?

But then is it ever too late?

See "The Tidal Wave," the late Stoll Film Corporation production which will play this theatre on the ———— of next ————.

It will interest, amuse and at the same time instruct, for it points a moral which shows the light to those who are too anxious to select a life partner.

The story deals with a young girl of Spanish extraction who is sent by her dying father to his sister, Aunt Eliza. Eliza's brother Adam, joint owner of the inn and his son Matt, were disturbed, each in a different way.

The young girl falls in love with an artist treating lightly the love of Matt who is honest and courageous.

In the end she learns the truth. Was it too late? See "The Tidal Wave."

SUGGESTIONS

This is just an ordinary production which will amuse and fairly interest if your patrons do not expect too much.

If you book it play up the story in your newspapers and run as many stills as you can of the scenes.

These scenes were taken on the rocky coast of England and are something new, especially when the action is played around them.

There are two big scenes, one when the hero rescues the heroine from a raging sea and another when he rescues the villain.

These scenes are very good and can be played up without any comeback.

CATCH LINES

She thought she loved him and then—well what did she find out about him? See "The Tidal Wave," it will interest you.

Don't fail to see "The Tidal Wave." It is a picture with many strong thrills and plenty of action. It will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

If you care for strong thrills, dramatic moments and a heart interest story, don't fail to see "The Tidal Wave" which will be played at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

"AN AMATEUR DEVIL"
(Paramount)

A Decidedly Mediocre Comedy With Washburn

THE public has been used to far better Bryant Washburn pictures than this latest Paramount production. Based upon the lukewarm idea of an idle rich young man trying to disgrace his blue blooded family by going to work, it never rises to any heights of comedy by any surprise twist or novel incident. Nor is it possible to forget that the comedy situations are all forced—the result of a strenuous effort. It runs along to absurdities without being humorous.

This is not Washburn's fault. He has proven his ability to get a great deal out of humorous situations in the past. But here, try as he will, he cannot get a laugh by peeling potatoes while wearing a high hat and cutaway coat. And the titles do not help him any.

The production might have been a great deal more appealing if the premise for the hokum was stronger and more plausible. Endicott Jr., is in love with a girl, and has so much dignity that his love making lacks the "pep" to please the young lady. So she breaks the engagement and plans to marry Endicott Sr. This has a strange effect upon the younger man. He decides to "do something," and also to disgrace his family. But working as a farm hand fails to bring down opprobrium upon his head, so he labors in the scullery of a large hotel, only to find that the press insists upon making him a hero for so doing. His next "devilish" act is to act as bus boy in the dining room. Again he is not disgraced. In despair, he becomes involved in an affair with a musical comedy queen, expecting to be sued for breach of promise. But a friend of his burns all of his amorous epistles and he is tricked out of disgrace again. The end comes rather suddenly. Endicott Sr., marries the musical comedy vamp, although no reason is given for his desertion of the leading lady. The star, having "done something," wins the heart of the girl.

It appears as if the picture went through considerable re-editing and retitling before it found its way to the screen, and possibly this is the cause of the unsatisfactory development of the story. Opposite the star is Ann May, a winsome leading lady.—Length, 4464 feet.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bryant Washburn has scored another sure-fire comedy hit in "An Amateur Devil," which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— for a ———— days' run. This is the Paramount star's latest and best production. It is an adaptation of a magazine story, and was directed by Maurice Campbell. The star is supported by a capable cast, his leading lady this time being pretty Ann May, who will be remembered by all those who saw "Paris Green."

"An Amateur Devil" concerns a very blue-blooded aristocratic father and son, who for generations have looked down with gentle condescension upon the rest of mankind. Carver Endicott, Jr., played by Mr. Washburn, is above all things, proper. So much so, that his wooing of the girl of his heart is carried on in a lukewarm, mild sort of way, much to the annoyance of the young lady in question. But even a blue blood can show some "pep" when the occasion requires. Carver, goaded on to desperation, sets out to ruin the name of the noble family to which he belongs. And this is where the comedy comes in. Of course, there is a reconciliation at the end, but only after the most amusing complications.

"An Amateur Devil" will remain at the ———— for ———— days. It is expected to prove one of the best drawing cards of the season.

PROGRAM READER

Carver Endicott was a ble book. He was so blue and his love making was of such a lukewarm nature that his best girl went back on him. For even among the elite of Boston a girl likes kisses with a little pep. So Carver Endicott (Bryant Washburn is Carver) decides to be devilish even if he has to disgrace the proud name he bears. But Carver has had little experience and so he was very much of an "Amateur Devil." And this is the name of the entertaining comedy which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. "An Amateur Devil" is Bryant Washburn's latest Paramount Production, and one that is just as funny as its predecessors. It will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days, beginning ————.

SUGGESTIONS

It would be pretty dangerous to promise a sure fire comedy hit on this one. You can appeal chiefly to the Washburn following, and recall "Burglar Proof," "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" and "A Full House," if you have shown them. State that Ann May, who plays opposite the star, was the leading woman in "Paris Green," a popular Charles Ray picture. The title, of course, allows opportunities for street and lobby displays, which can be made as elaborate as your pocketbook warrants.

CATCH LINES

A real man can live down almost anything—even being born into an aristocratic family where it was just as necessary for the young heir to wear dignity as it was for him to wear pants.

Being a devil is not as easy as may be imagined. Just come to see Bryant Washburn in "An Amateur Devil" and you will find out why.

Bryant Washburn's latest comedy—a story of an elite Boston family, and how its youngest member decided to bring disgrace to its honored name.

A RITCHEY EXAMPLE

WHEN a star so universally known as Otis Skinner is to be featured in such a production as "Kismet" it is doubly essential to obtain posters that are beyond criticism. The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. executed the entire set, which consisted of a twenty-four sheet stand, one six sheet, two three sheets and three one sheets. The twenty-four sheet stand is reproduced above.

They are every one of them typical RITCHEY posters. Every one of them is a work of art. Every one of them is a powerful box-office adjunct. As to color, design and workmanship they stand unrivalled in American poster production. They are posters of which even the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is proud.

"O'Malley of the Mounted"

"O'MALLEY of the Mounted" is the biggest money-maker Hart has ever appeared in.

It started out in New York by breaking all Hart records—at the Rivoli it took in, on the week, $5,037 more than "The Testing Block" did.

And it's going the same way the country over.

A PERFECT CRIME

A Comedy-Drama from the Saturday Evening Post story by
CARL CLAUSEN

Personally directed by Mr. DWAN

Five years ago when Allan Dwan both wrote and directed swift-moving, human comedy-dramas for Triangle he personally set a fashion for the type of story that actually made the reputation of at least three of the biggest male stars of the screen.

In his newest production for release through "A. P."—"A Perfect Crime"—he is again setting a fashion for a new and popular type of story done in the best Dwan manner—a picture with speed, suspense, romance, beauty and simplicity.

Attention: Mr. Switzler.

Dear Mr. Switzler:

When the services of your corporation were engaged for the picture which I am making at the Selznick Studios, under the working title "Why Girls Leave Home", I am frank to tell you that I was somewhat dubious about their value.

The only point which appealed to me was the fact that you undertook to provide for a definite fixed sum. labor, materials, properties, technical supervision etc. so that we could accurately estimate the cost of production.

Having tried out your service thoroughly for the past two weeks, I want to say that in efficient, time-saving qualities and in economy of operation, I have never seen anything in any studio where I have worked which approached it.

If my recommendation is of any value to you I shall be glad to have you refer anyone to me at any time.

Very truly yours,

Wm Nigh.

We are in a position to give you the best in artistic settings, correct in every detail.

Let us have your script.

We will then show you plans, sketches and models and will submit price for which we will perfect them in any studio you may select, OR—

Let us know what sum you can allot for settings and we will show you what you can get based on your figures.

What some of your Neighbors think—about Realart Pictures—"clean entertainment for the whole family."

"Twenty-six verdicts on films" in the March 5th issue of EXHIBITORS' HERALD—and in all Realart is found guilty of pleasing the exhibitor and his patrons.

She Couldn't Help It, with Bebe Daniels.—More dramatic than previous pictures, but even better because of it. Bebe a comer here.—O. W. Jastram, Strand theatre, Pecatonica, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Something Different, with Constance Binney.—They like Connie and the picture will please, particularly the ladies. —O. E. Pierce, Theatorium theatre, [illegible], Ind.—Neighborhood patron-

You Never Can Tell, with Bebe Daniels.—This is a very clever picture and my patrons enjoyed it. It is a good picture to book with a comedy.—Edwin [illegible], Lake theatre, Baker [illegible]

The New York Idea, with Alice Brady. Brady's best for Realart and pleased people.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Miss Hobbs, with Wanda Hawley.—This is a little slow in getting started, but people just can't help but like it. We used an Arbuckle comedy to get the crowd and now I think Wanda Hawley can draw her own audience next time. —A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

The Law of the Yukon, with a special cast.—Very good, as you can get all the men out to see this, and some of the ladies. A right good feature. Sure some snow scenes. Acting good. Photography good, also direction.—McClure & Faulkner, Comique theatre, Jamesport, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Cumberland Romance, with Mary Miles Minter.—Our box office receipts are larger on this than any previous Minter picture. She is improving, but I give Monte Blue some credit for drawing for this. He is especially liked here.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

Oh Lady, Lady, with Bebe Daniels.—Bebe Daniels is the best ever, and Harrison Ford also. Others are mighty good support and production is first class. Realart surely scores again. I don't want any better pictures or a better star than Bebe Daniels.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

Miss Hobbs, with Wanda Hawley.—Very good comedy drama.—John Steichen, Aurora theatre, White Lake, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Soldiers of Fortune, with a special cast. Great picture. Pleased all. Realarts good. Anyone not using them is not getting the best. Book them all.—C. H. Merriman, Merriman theatre, Merriman, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Her First Elopement, with Wanda Hawley.—Miss Hawley is sure making good. This picture a safe play for any theatre. Will stand boosting.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Her Beloved Villain, with Wanda Hawley.—Best program picture for months. Laughs and giggles all the way through. Starts good and gets better every minute. Boost it and it will back up all you say.—O. W. Jastram, Strand theatre, Pecatonica, Ill.—Small town patro[illegible]

Anne of Green Gables, with Mary Miles Minter.—This is one picture that will please the majority of people. Played to full house on stormy night.—H. J. McBeth, Gem theatre, Ord, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

You Never Can Tell, with Bebe Daniels.—This was Bebe's first attempt and she made a hit. Let's have lots more just as good. Many good comments. Business good.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.—General [illegible]

Nurse Marjorie, with Mary Miles Minter.—Good as are all Realarts I have shown.—O. O'Kelly, Majestic theatre, Reedsburg, Wis.—Small town patron[illegible]

You Never Can Tell, with Bebe Daniels.—Our first from Realart for some time. A very good picture with a clever star. Drew poor business, however, on account of bad weather.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

With all these Voices—

all over the country commending Realart Productions, it is only necessary to add that the exhibitor who testifies above "good, as all Realarts I have shown" —will have no cause to change his opinion in the future!

Realart's ambition is to furnish clean entertainments that pay box-office dividends.

Sweet Lavender, with Mary Miles Minter.—Have seen reports where exhibitors have been disappointed in this. However, it is a good, clean picture and my box office report shows that my patrons are looking for this kind of entertainment. Mary Miles Minter is as good as Mary Pickford ever was.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy theatre, Winchester, Ind.

She Couldn't Help It, with Bebe Daniels.—Not so good as previous efforts. Comedy-drama for Bebe, and this is not a comedy-drama.—O. E. Pierce, Theatorium theatre, Portland, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Food for Scandal, with Wanda Hawley.—Wanda is making good as a star. Picture pleased all. Business only fair on account of star not being known.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.—General patronage.

Her Beloved Villain, with Wanda Hawley.—Good picture but not quite as good as Miss Hobbs. Star draws well.—H. J. McBeth, Gem theatre, Ord, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Something Different, with Constance Binney.—Another fine Binney picture. She is a prime favorite here, and her pictures so far have been excellent.—A. S. Widaman, Centennial theatre, Warsaw, Ind.

"A Big Surprise Package"

Motion Picture News

What the Experts say:

WILL CLEAN UP

"Charles Ray certainly offers a big surprise package in this picture. A total absence of sub-titles and a wealth of incident. Ray and Chaplin do not need titles to express their art. Both are superb pantomimists, so that every gesture, every expression is caught and understood. A classic. If this picture don't clean up for the exhibitor, then nothing will."—Motion Picture News.

GET IT QUICK

"Charles Ray at his best, and even better than that, he's great. A real picture. Everyone will want to see it. If any one doesn't like it, they never can be pleased. Tell your patrons if they ever have been a lad, they'll live it over again. Don't miss it. Get it quick and give your patrons a treat."—Wid's.

A REAL NOVELTY

"Exhibitors have a real novelty to offer in this picture. It is a screen classic and it marks an important epoch in picture making."—Exhibitors Herald.

REMARKABLE PICTURE

BIG DRAWING CARD

"My congratulations on 'Man-Woman-Marriage.' It is the greatest box-office attraction, smashing to smithereens past performances of record attractions of the Syracuse Strand. It is a woman's picture from every angle, and greatly pleased my audiences. My congratulations to Allen Holubar, Dorothy Phillips and the officers of the First National for putting out such a picture."

Edgar L. Weill, Manager, The Strand.

A Report From Indianapolis, Ind.
Man-Woman-Marriage played a week's advance run at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, one of the biggest theatres of the country. It began by breaking all attendance and box-office records on the first day. Crowds jammed the theatre and lined up in the street outside. Throngs struggled to gain admission all day. At closing time there were so many clamoring to get into the theatre, that an extra midnight performance was held to accommodate them.

Random Thoughts

WE shall see this year the invasion of the studio and theatre by the foremost painters, illustrators, colorists, mural decorators in the country—men whose names are not only held high in this country but in Europe as well, men whose work, in some instances, has not thus far been attracted to the stage.

We shall see their hand in studio sets, stage sets and theatre decorations and in film noveties, title drawings, etc.

This is not guesswork. We give the opinion because of conferences we have held with those engaged in just these movements. The outlook is illuminating.

We can only see the motion picture theatre of the future as a reflector of the highest form of modern art. The masses want it.

The little theatre, too, is meant. The time will come when the house will be able to send the stage dimensions, a photo of the interior, perhaps, and ask the very best artists: "What can we do for a few hundred dollars?"

Women and the Censorship

WE have often spoken on the subject but we can't repeat it too often—the fact that the women of the country, if they are so minded, can lay censorship forever low.

It seems to us that if we were to offer exhibitors one bit of advice it would be this: Go to your local women's organizations. Explain censorship to them. What it is and means. Tell them it is pre-publicity censorship; that it takes control from the public where it belongs; and gives it over to the politicians; that already our penal code and police powers are ample to cope with any picture situation. Tell them you want to work with them. Tell them that you consider the motion picture a public servant and your house a community center. You want their understanding and their help. Tell them how censorship will destroy this industry at once and this art for a generation to come. Tell them you will help them enforce local police powers. Get them interested. And once they start fighting for you, your cause is won.

But the point is: Go to them now before they come to you. They're coming eventually. But they're apt to come with misinformation and impossible plans. Go to them and inform them first.

Foresight Needed

WE are in receipt of a confidential letter from a man at the head of a big publishing firm and whose word carries much influence with the press of the middle west.

He says that censorship is a wrong and impossible solution, but—

The motion picture is the servant of the great public, and—

Education and control of the industry by men of sufficient breadth and vision to look clearly into the future is the only solution to present condition.

He is right, right as a compass, on all three counts.

On Their Merits

WRITES a Western exhibitor: "We have recently gone to a selective booking system, and every picture which we buy is reviewed and bought solely on its merits. I believe this is the only system for any high class house, as it has been demonstrated in this theatre that people will not only attend in greater numbers but they are willing to pay an advanced price for superior productions."

This is the kind of theatre that is making money today. And it makes money on a basis of better pictures and selective booking.

Its situation is a true indication of the future, as respects theatres, pictures and booking policies.

THE industry cannot seek too much self-gratification on the success of its Hoover drive. We cannot heap too much praise on exhibitors throughout the country, both big and little, for the whole-hearted manner in which they carried out the industry's pledge to starving children.

Every head of a local committee, every individual exhibitor who put his brains and time to the cause has a memory worth cherishing.

And in particular let us add our humble word of tribute to Charles C. Pettijohn, whose able executive ability and untiring zeal guided the industry's first concrete, unanimous, overwhelmingly successful demonstration of its great power for good.

Personalities

Off-Hand Introductions by Robert E. Welsh

Let it be known and proclaimed that "The Naked Truth" is hereafter synonymous with a "heluvagoodtyme."

Which statement has been duly audited, certified, A. B. C'd and Q. E. D'd.

Speaking of the subject brings up the thought that it's a rattling good audit that can get a whole alphabet of attention.

Just because we set out to talk about the A. M. P. A. affair alphabets are ringing in our ears. We got a hearty laugh out of Paul Lazarus' explanation that his boss thinks the initials mean: "Abrams Must Pay Always." But after four hours hearty enjoyment of the Biltmore affair we're here to register one thing that the monogram DOES NOT stand for: "All Mighty Poor Actors."

Starting somewhere near the beginning—it's a habit we've never acquired—let us say that we'd like to turn loose a shower of glory and credit if we were sure that we wouldn't overlook somebody. Harry Reichenbach can't be presented with too many Thorleys. Harry must have worked unceasingly and his clever showman's hand was evident at every turn of the evening's events. Never have we seen the peerless Silver King so quick on the trigger.

Then, starting with President Lazarus and through the various committees and each and every individual contributor to the evening's entertainment we'd like to hand a few more bouquets. A. M. P. A. can deservedly be-token "All Mighty Proud Advertisers."

We don't think there was a person in the hall who laughed more heartily at Jerome Beatty's speech delivered "as Adolph Zukor" than that same Mr. Zukor himself. In fact, during the whole evening Zukor seemed to relish happenings with all the zest of a small boy playing hookey.

It's too bad that all the bosses were not there to hear what good opinions they hold concerning their advertising brains. Bill Yearsley would probably acquire a few choice franchises dirt cheap while Vivian Moses, Paul Gulick and Howard Dietz could probably retire on their bonuses. P. A. Parsons brought his boss along. Playing safe.

The thought comes struggling to us that Worthy Butts is a worthy rival to Fatty Arbuckle as "The Life of the Party."

Just before going to press we sought Paul Mooney for confirmation of the rumor that Tom North possesses a baritone of professional timbre. (Wonder what that is?) In response the Louis Mayer advertising department issued a statement denying the rumor.

Lewis Selznick got a good laugh out of Harry Reichenbach's clever introduction and a heartier one when Charlie Pettijohn expounded on advertising, trade paper concentration, and selected media.

Charlie handed us a laugh, too. Eventually—why not now?

Nursery Rhymes, illustrated in corking fashion by Anthony Gablik and told by Landy and Rose, started the stage proceedings with a bang. The line that remains in our memory is: "Ma, what is a Press Agent?" "S'sh, my child, good little boys don't use such language."

Paul Sarazan's songs brought a hearty response. His parody on "Avalon" is too good to go unrecorded. It can be used to good purpose in many a way. Here it is:

The Blue Laws have hit Avalon
No movies there.
A man can't smoke in Avalon
Or comb his hair.
The Blue Laws stayed in Avalon
Almost one day.
'Cause the town packed up in Avalon,
And moved away.

Record among the "histrionic" hits of the evening; Nat Rothstein as the exhibitor who "made four hundred dollars last year from the junk man for baled press books." Herb Crooker as Father Time with a real professional comedy sense, and Maurie Meyers as Sammy, the table-cloth secretary.

And don't forget to mention Arthur Brilant, Vic Shapiro, Irving Greene, Claude La Belle, Vincent Trotta, Walter Eberhardt and Bert Sarazan.

Now pause to call attention to the classic beauties of Paul Gulick in bearskins, P. A. Parsons surrounded by a toga, Bill Yearsley hiding behind a Quaker Oats make-up, Jerry Beatty "barking" 'em in—and Harry Reichenbach as "himself"—and slipping on his lines.

Then close with a word of tribute to the Green Room Club which once more showed itself a fraternal ally of the picture folk by contributing one of the best skits we have ever seen and acting in another.

Suppose it wouldn't do any harm to note that Joe Dannenberg stole enough of the show to deserve a few kind words. Very clever stunt, Joe, very cleverly worked.

Travelling around the social calendar brings us to Sunday evening and the eclat of Metro's opening. "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" certainly brought out a distinguished gathering. And this, despite the fact that the original showing at the Ritz must have "skimmed some of the cream." But the Ritz showing sent an army of boosters up and down the highways and the result was seen Sunday night.

We saw Adolph Zukor in the shadows of a box, rubbed shoulders with Marshal Neilan in the lobby and borrowed a match from Winnie Sheehan. Joe Engel was here and there looking as young after his sojourn on the coast as the boy magnate who promoted Paul Rainey's African hunt pictures. Dick Rowland, who missed the Ritz showing, must have heard that "The Four Horsemen" is a good picture for he was on hand Sunday.

General Manager Atkinson whispered some box-office figures to us on Tuesday and took our breath away. It's one thing to be a knockout to an opening night audience and still another to pull in the real cash and a husky advance sale. "The Four Horsemen" is coppering both bets. The Lyric's fate is settled for many months.

Met Jack Meador a half hour later and got the same figures. Play that bet double.

Eddie MacManus is back from Syracuse reporting a clean-up week with his Thomas Mott Osborne prison picture. Grabbed everything the newspapers didn't have nailed down, played the picture as propaganda, and broke records at a dollar and a half against such competition as "Man, Woman and Marriage." Planning to "road show" the attraction now with the personal approval and appearance of the famous prison reformer.

Earl Gulick is back on the job. The doctor turned him loose on his promise to confine the diet to prunes. (Personal: This line pays the interest on that four buck touch, Earl.)

Tim Coop, who successfully invaded this market two years ago, is once more in our midst with more product of deah old England. Saw "By Berwen Banks," a worth while comedy drama and "Little Dorrit," faithful to the Dickens original.

Wish that Al Lichtman would come back from the coast. These long distance rumors are irritating.

What Is a First Run?

"WHAT is a first run?"

This question has been all important to Portland exhibitors since announcement was made by C. S. Jensen, senior member, that the firm of Jensen and Von Herberg had contracted for all super-production released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for exclusive rights in the business section from Couch to Taylor streets and from Second to Eleventh streets. Mr. Jensen was frank to admit that this agreement with First National is but a forerunner of an exclusive purchase for the City of Portland of super-productions released by all companies. Jensen and Von Herberg own and operate the five strictly first run theaters of the city.

Lack of cooperation by Portland suburban exhibitors amounting to what is said to be absolute intentional pirating of expensive film exploitation done for each of the super-productions shown at the large first run theatres at advanced admission is, according to Mr. Jensen, responsible for the new purchasing policy. He expects the new policy to result in contracts of the more elaborate photoplays providing for a period of from 90 days to two years before the film can return to the city for its second run.

Mr. Jensen has already purchased with such a provision in the contracts the three features: "Isobel," or "The Trail's End;" "The County Fair" and "Kazan" and the Associated First National release of Charlie Chaplin's "The Kid." He hopes to bring all other ultra big productions to his houses on a similar plan but he is indifferent to such protection for the average photoplay with its average exploitation.

C. S. Jensen Is Mad

"Elaborate super-productions should be sold just as contract goods are now sold in the mercantile business," declared Mr. Jensen. "When a certain store offered everything in the house at half price I went over to purchase a trunk at which I had looked before but which was priced more than I thought necessary. I deliberately waited for the approaching sale. But when I went to get the trunk I found it the same price as before, the salesman explaining that the trunk was one of a contract line selling at all times for the same amount in Portland, Chicago or New York. The trunk was recognized as a standard article and the public has been educated to appreciate its worth and know that it can not be obtained by waiting a week or so for the next sale.

"In Portland I put super-productions at the Columbia theatre. This is because producers have come to demand that first showings bring higher prices than the 25 and 35 cent admission which is customary at other first run theatres. Therefore to meet this demand I have segregated the super-productions to one house where with the higher admission prices I must do more expensive exploitation work.

"A picture runs at the Columbia theatre a week or more at advanced admission. Then sometimes after a lapse of but a few days, a second run theatre directly across the street or but a few blocks away, buys and plays the same picture. This condition has been aggravated by second run houses which have deliberately run slides on their screens telling the public a picture having its first run at that very moment in another house is coming and advising the public to wait one or two weeks when it may be seen for 10, 15 or 20 cents.

"Then, too, suburban theaters buy and contract for service in advance and in their house programmes advertise features as coming to them long before they have had their first run in the larger houses. It is also sometimes difficult for the exchange men to give the first run theatres proper protection after the first run because the suburban houses change three or four times a week and some catch up on the first runs.

"Film producers have forced up the rental price and in so doing have forced up admissions. A greater share of the income derived from films in this northwest territory comes from the first run exhibitor. I am willing to pay additional money which will cover second run rentals, if I am assured the protection of exclusive first runs.

Rough Stuff

"Times are stringent and the public is more and more guarding its purse strings. Cheap eating houses which formerly were hardly making expenses are now reaping profits while the better restaurants and grills are less crowded. With car fare increased to eight cents many persons take the advice of the suburban screens which have been running slides to this effect: 'Why pay car fare to the business section to see a film costing 50, 75 cents or $1 when the same picture may be seen here a few days later for 20 cents?'

"The time has come, due to the ill advised, pirating suburban exhibitors, when super film productions will be circuited just as the better vaudeville acts are today. Fifteen years ago a vaudeville troupe played a territory, going first to the highest priced theatres in the city, then to houses out in the state and later coming back to the smaller city amusement places. Today unless one goes to the Orpheum each week he forfeits the chance of seeing the same shows any other time during the season.

"When they are allowed to show in such houses it is an insult to the artistry of the man who produced them. The producer has the right to demand that his work be given a fitting background enabling its audiences to best interpret the message he has worked into the film."

On the Defense

When first announcement of an exclusive first run policy for super-productions in Portland was announced by Jensen and Von Herberg suburban exhibitors were highly indignant. Knowing that contracts on such a policy had been submitted for the purchase of "Kismet" and "The Devil" they decided to band together, offer a larger price and show these pictures in the municipal auditorium, a huge hall not primarily intended for motion picture exhibition and not attainable more than three or four weeks in the year for such a purpose. As a result the Jensen and Von Herberg offers submitted were declined and the second run theatres proudly announced through the daily press that the films would be shown independent of the first run houses.

Mr. Jensen was then out of the city and did not learn of this action until his return a week later. He has since made new offers for the pictures agreeing to pay the aggregate rental which would be derived from the suburban exhibitors for the second runs in addition to the price for the first run rights. Disposal of the two pictures is now pending.

An extract from a letter written by Mr. Jensen to Elmer Pearson, director of Pathe exchanges, concerning purchase of "The Devil" gives perhaps a more inti-

Hitting the Hard-Boiled

EXPLOITATION with a virile news angle—exploitation that forced a potent argument in the fight against censorship—was provided by a picture exploiteer in the showing of "The Inside of the Cup" before members of the Washington State Legislature at Olympia in the House chamber at a combined evening meeting of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The picture produced a tremendous impression. Coming as it did, in the midst of a strenuous fight on the censorship question that is being enacted in the Washington State legislature it proved a vital factor in the weighing of arguments that are rapidly being brought to a close.

The inside of the story on "The Inside of the Cup" showing dates back to the appointment of A. M. Vogel as exploitation representative for Paramount Pictures in the Seattle territory. The exploitation man had intended to show the production before the House and Senate as an exploitation stunt but when he arrived in Olympia he found himself in the midst of a healthy censorship hearing.

Rats for Censors

Taking rebuffs by the forelock he arranged for a special showing of "The Inside of the Cup" to which the state executives and members of the two branches of the legislature were invited. Every guest was supplied with a printed card on which two questions were asked: "Do you think 'The Inside of the Cup' is a strong moral force?" and "What is Your Opinion of the Picture?"

About one hundred replies were turned in. Of these all except one answered "Yes" on the first question; and opinion was unanimous, in favor of the picture, on the second. This opinion was all the more valuable because the picture had been extensively advertised to the members as a typical example of what the motion picture industry is producing today. The legislators accepted it as a criterion; and although the censorship arguments are being continued in Olympia, it is safe to state that the showing of "The Inside of the Cup" has done a great deal towards refuting the arguments of overzealous reformers as to the salacious tendencies of modern films. The opinions expressed by members of the Washington legislature to Vogel speak for themselves.

The day after the showing Lieut. Gov. William J. Coyle, who in the absence of the governor presided at the session, wrote Mr. Vogel, expressing his appreciation in the following words:

"It was with a great deal of pleasure that I witnessed the showing of 'The Inside of the Cup' by Winston Churchill in the Chamber of the House of Representatives in Olympia last evening. In my opinion it is a picture that should be seen by all classes of people, as it teaches a story of life as it really is.

"Such pictures as these show the high standards to which the moving picture industry has been developed and I wish to congratulate your Company upon giving the members of the Legislature an opportunity to witness the class and character of the pictures you are presenting before the people."

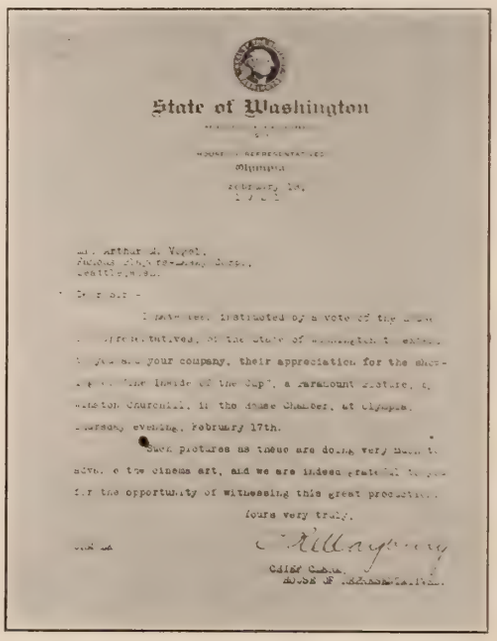
From the Senate the following message was sent:

"Resolved, that the thanks of the Senate be and are hereby extended to Mr. Arthur Vogel for his invitation to the Senate to witness the motion picture film, 'The Inside of the Cup,' in the House chamber on the evening of February 17th."

C. R. Maybury, chief clerk of the House of Representatives, sent the following appreciation on behalf of the House:

"I have been instructed by a vote of the House of Representatives of the State of Washington to extend to you and your company, their appreciation for the showing of 'The Inside of the Cup,' a Paramount Picture, by Winston Churchill, in the House Chamber at Olympia, Thursday evening, February 17.

"Such pictures as these are doing very much to advance the cinema art, and we are indeed grateful to you for the opportunity of witnessing this great production."



State of Washington

Olympia

February 1st.

Mr. Arthur M. Vogel,
Paramount Picture Exchanges,
Seattle, Wash.

Dear Sir -

I have been instructed by a vote of the House of Representatives of the State of Washington to extend to you and your company, their appreciation for the showing of 'The Inside of the Cup', a Paramount Picture, by Winston Churchill, in the House Chamber, at Olympia, Thursday evening, February 17th.

Such pictures as these are doing very much to advance the cinema art, and we are indeed grateful to you for the opportunity of witnessing this great production.

Yours very truly,

Chief Clerk.
House of Representatives.

What Is a First Run?

mate view of the Jensen and Von Herberg stand.

"Some days ago I contracted through your branch office in Portland for the first run showing of the following pictures: 'The Devil,' 'The Sage Hen,' 'The Killer,' 'The Girl Montana,' 'The House of the Tolling Bell' and 'The Devil to Pay.' The reason the contract was not acceptable to your office, I am informed, was through the efforts of the suburban and smaller exhibitors who when they learned I had purchased the exclusive right for the City of Portland for one of the six pictures, viz., 'The Devil,' flooded your office with telegrams protesting this exclusive showing which they claimed would put their theatres out of business.

"If you will remember, out of the six pictures I asked for the exclusive showing of only one and for that exclusive showing I paid an additional $500.00, that being the amount your representative, Mr. Normand, informed me he thought he could derive from second run theatres. My reasons for wanting this exclusive right are that it is a big production, that we intend spending extra money advertising the same and we plan to exhibit said picture at an advanced admission price.

"In cases where we have played up big pictures on similar scales we have learned that smaller theatres have exhibited slides calling the attention of their audiences to the fact that it was not necessary to go into the heart of the city and pay advanced prices as well as stand in line waiting their turn, for this same picture would be shown within a short time in second run houses at the regular admission which is in some cases 15 cents and never more than 20 cents.

Tough Sledding

"I wish to call your attention to another example. The Goldwyn picture, 'Earthbound,' was run at my Columbia theatre at a top price of 75 cents. This same picture was exhibited by a nearby theatre which is located only three blocks away from the Columbia (it has practically the same seating capacity) for an admission price of 20 cents, and I have the information from the Goldwyn company that the second run theatre did more business than the Columbia.

"I have no desire to monopolize the showing of any picture in this city but I do want to protect my own business from piratic methods. If smaller houses would raise their prices accordingly or if they would make one of their houses a higher priced theatre and there show the more expensive productions, it would be absolutely agreeable. For instance, we have the Columbia theatre with a 75 cent admission, the Star with a 25 cent admission. We do not attempt to put the Columbia attractions in the Star theatre, but, the suburban exhibitor, on the contrary, runs all pictures alike with no distinction in admission prices.

"The producer and distributor, as you know, are directly responsible for the high admission price.

"I say to you right now, Mr. Pearson, that it is up to the producer and distributor to protect the exhibitor who is willing to exhibit pictures at advanced admission prices.

"We have to meet competition and if there is no change, everything considered, a decrease of admission in the best theatres will be necessitated. In these times when nickels are scarce a contract article should be the same price in one store as in another or in one theatre as in another. And this should apply to films in each individual city."

Boosting the Dull Days

WERE a referendum to be taken among all the exhibitors in the United States as to what the most perplexing problem encountered in the conduct of a motion picture house really is, it is more than probable that the question as to what to do to distribute patronage equally throughout the week would win hands down. In other words, the big problem of the average showman is the finding of some method that will cause patrons to come to his theatre on the days which local conditions combine to make theatre going undesirable or unattractive.

"Light attendance" days are the ones that cause the worry to live wire managers. Heavy business four or five days a week do not compensate for the remaining one or two days when vacant seats are the rule in the house. Nothing is more discouraging to a manager than to know he is running a good show when the house is half empty. His weekly business may show a good profit but the days that don't do their share in supplying the weekly gross are the ones that occupy his mind more than the most signal success he may have.

With such a problem a live issue with the majority of the exhibitors in the United States, it is inevitable that many managers have solved it as far as their own theatres are concerned. Conditions that confronted these managers probably will be found to be common to other localities and for the purpose of aiding exhibitors who are still confronted with the problem the Motion Picture News has arranged for a series of interviews giving in detail the methods employed by the men who have banished the bug-a-boo of light days.

¶Many an Exhibitor Will Find Dollar Value Suggestions in This Interview With a Showman Who Took the Blueing Out of Washday.

Introducing Pontiac

The methods used by Hal Opperman, manager of the Crescent theatre, the subfranchise holder in Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is selected for the first article, not only because of the unqualified success which has met his efforts, but because the conditions he had to combat probably are general in thousands of exhibiting territories.

"Pontiac is a city of 7,000 population, with a rural population of probably half as many more to draw upon," said Mr. Opperman. "The population is an important point in explaining the situation. Monday was the day that used to be greeted with a corporal's guard in the theatre. The reason was not hard to find and it is a condition that probably exists in every city of 15,000 or under in the whole country.

"Monday is washday, and that has a vital influence on the theatres serving the smaller communities. In the larger cities where family laundries exist the wash is sent out from the home and it doesn't interfere with the routine, but in exhibiting territories similar to Pontiac the weekly wash is done at home. The housewife does the hardest work of the week on Monday. She is dead tired when evening comes and just sitting around for a time and an early hour to bed is far more attractive than the ordinary show offered by the motion picture theatre.

"Washday affects the men folks also as far as their inclination to go to a theatre is concerned. The menu for the day is made up from the standpoint of expediency and it usually means a stew, a boiled dinner, corned beef and cabbage or some such other dish predominating in vegetables or something that will cook with very little watching. The result is the men folks overcrowd their stomach and they are in a lethargic condition after the evening meal when it comes theatre time.

Tried 'Em All

"That is the situation on Monday, the women tired and the men overfed. In addition to that Pontiac is one of those cities which still struggles under a law prohibiting the showing of pictures on Sunday so in addition to having the general disinclination to move out of their homes on the part of the population, the exhibitor has to bridge over the Sunday gap, in order to do a big business on Monday.

"Monday was a bad day. I tried all the stuff that I had heard of, some of which I couldn't quite agree with such as cutting prices, offering double features in fact everything that would make Monday a bargain day but the residents of Pontiac did not want Monday bargains or at least not enough of them did in order to make the Monday exhibition of pictures an exhilarating pastime.

"All the time the patrons were trying to show me the method I should adopt, but I was too blind to see it. It finally did occur to me that on Fridays and Saturdays, my two biggest days, I would receive more inquiries as to what was coming the following week than at any other time. In other words, my patrons proved to me that on the days they turned out in the largest number, they did so because they were interested in entertainment. That observation gave me the basis of the plan that has built up patronage on Mondays so that it will compare favorably with every other day in the week.

"I believe in advertising, and decided that if my prospective patrons were in a mood for entertainment on the last two days of the week they would be most receptive to advertising on those days. So the heaviest advertising I do during the entire week is on Friday and Saturday and it is all devoted to the Monday and Tuesday bill except for a small reader line at the bottom given over to the current feature attraction. I also use a mailing list of about 1,000 names and send out cards on Friday so that they will reach the homes on Saturday.

"These cards vary in wording but they all refer to the Monday attractions. To explain the basis for the wording it is necessary to go into my booking policy for the beginning of the week. When I first started to build up the attendance on Monday and Tuesday, I booked pictures for those days that would create talk—sensational stuff if you want to call it that—anything that would make the people that saw it talk to others. Any kind of talk, praise or criticism, will create a disappointed feeling in the person who missed seeing it.

"So in my first cards I would mention the previous bill and state that the approaching one was just as interesting. I tried to create the impression that the Monday and Tuesday shows would be extraordinary ones and by means of the heavy advertising and the mailed cards I succeeded pretty well.

The Meeting Place

"Now, however, I use other little devices to keep interest in the shows at the beginning of the week. Monday is a favorite night for lodge meeting in Pontiac and frequently the cards call attention to the fact that father, or husband, can meet the family in the rest room of the theatre on his way home from lodge. The churches use Monday nights for committee meetings and that sort of thing, and sometimes I suggest that the men folks while away the evening at the Crescent while they are waiting for the time to call to take their women folks home.

"I pay more attention to the pictures I run on these two nights than to any of the other showings of the week. The feature

Wire Briefs From the Coast

A NEW company now being formed by Los Angeles capitalists, with a quarter of a million dollars fully subscribed, is to take over professional special picture contracts and produce two two-reel comedies monthly for distribution through Educational. The production will be under the management of Warner Brothers. The contracts effected are those of Louise Fazenda, Chester Conklin, John Henry, Ford Sterling, and "Teddy," the big Dane. Earl Kenton and Reggie Morris are the directors. Jean Havez heads the scenario department. Special Pictures are negotiating to dispose of their distributing contracts.

It is reported that Los Angeles bankers are behind a concerted movement to finance production on a big scale and bring distributing organizations to Los Angeles. Numerous conferences have been held and others are scheduled for the near future. The movement was started because the bankers appreciate that San Francisco, Jacksonville, and other cities will finance production, taking the industry away from Los Angeles, unless financial aid is given by local bankers.

Morris Kohn, president of Realart, has approved of the enlargement of the Realart studios. A new office building will be erected, as well as a 7,000 foot stage. Other improvements will double production efficiency. Mr. Kohn left for the East on Thursday.

Report Allens Fail to Buy Empire Theatre in London

A cable from London, England, on March 2 indicated that the Allen Theatre Enterprises of Toronto, Ontario, had failed to complete the purchase of the Empire Theatre, London, and that the Allens had forfeited a deposit of $150,000. Announcement was made that the company controlling the London Empire intended seeking other prospective purchasers for the famous theatre.

At Toronto, announcement was made that the deal to purchase the Empire Theatre was still under negotiation and it was intimated that the Allens had not dropped the proposition.

Four Companies Incorporated in New York

Four companies filed the necessary papers in the secretary of state's office in Albany, N. Y., during the past week, permitting them to engage in the motion picture industry in the state. The companies, capitalization and directors are as follows:

Helen Dwan Productions, $1,000, J. P. Phillips, E. I. Devlin, Jr., Edward C. Fisher, New York; Brownie Comedies, Inc., $60,000, A. E. Baerman, W. J. Russell, Alfred Ross, Brooklyn; MacAdams Pictures, $353,500, Marion MacAdams, Thomas H. Graydon, S. H. Watson, New York city; Valkyrie Pictures Corporation, $100,000, Charles Gumalesis, Morris Gisnet, Robert L. Noah, New York.

Paramount Treasurer Pays First Visit to Studio

Interested visitors at the Lasky studio this week were Mr. and Mrs. Elek J. Ludvigh of New York, the former being the recently elected treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Ludvigh has been secretary of the organization since its formation as well as chief counsel, but had never visited the Lasky studio. Escorted by Jesse L. Lasky First Vice-President, General Manager Charles Eyton and Studio Manager Fred Kley, the visitors inspected the studio and watched the companies at work.

W. W. Hodkinson Addresses Directors Association

The Motion Picture Directors' Association of Los Angeles was addressed on February 24th, at their regular meeting by W. W. Hodkinson, who was introduced by Director William D. Taylor as "a man of vision and a man who will help us a lot."

Mr. Hodkinson told the meeting of the power and influence of the screen, and its advantages over the printed word. He impressed upon the directors that the rising wave of reform was a very real and puissant danger, and urged them to realize that they were in a strategic position to aid. Mr. Hodkinson also stated that the business was only taking one half of the revenue possible from the public because it was not properly co-ordinated. "Half of the money being spent in the production of pictures," he said, "is wasted, because half of the number of pictures would get the same revenue from the public and in a reasonable time, double that revenue."

At the end of his address Mr. Hodkinson answered questions which were put to him by the members on the question of what constituted an objectionable picture and how such pictures could be done away with.

Censor Bill Introduced in Illinois Legislature

A bill providing for the censorship of motion pictures has been introduced in the Illinois legislature by John F. Healy, representing a Chicago district. The measure provides for five censors, each of whom is to draw a salary of five thousand dollars per year, and for the creation of a department to pass on all pictures before they are shown in the state.

Mrs. Guy Blanchard, chairman of the motion picture division of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, which represents six hundred of these organizations, is said to be behind the proposed measure.

Details of the bill have not yet come to hand but it is reported to be drastic in its nature and would be a very serious menace to the industry in Illinois if passed.

New Hostile Bills Before Pennsylvania Lawmakers

New handicaps on the operation of motion picture theatres in Pennsylvania are proposed in bills introduced in the legislature in Harrisburg in the week of February 28 to March 8, in addition to the already long list of pending measures hostile to the industry.

One of the new measures was introduced by Representative Arnold W. Blumberg, of Philadelphia. It prohibits the sale of tickets of admittance to motion picture and other theatres, "to a greater number than the seating capacity" and makes it unlawful to permit standing in the aisles. The penalty for conviction for violating this proposed law would be a fine of not less than $25 or more than $100, or imprisonment for not less than one month or more than three months, in the discretion of the court.

Representative Joseph M. Denning, of Schuylkill county, introduced a measure that would require every public seat in a theatre to be so arranged that the occupant can enjoy a full, fair and complete view of the stage or screen. The penalty for violation, as proposed, would be a fine of not less than $10 or more than $25, which may be imposed by a magistrate, alderman or justice of the peace. Imprisonment of not exceeding five days shall be meted out to convicted persons not paying the fine.

Under the terms of the bill introduced by Representative Harold C. Pike, of Montgomery county, no person or corporation engaged in the amusement business shall deduct from the salary due any actor or actress in their employ, any sums on account of any commissions for their employment which sums are to be paid to other persons or corporations not within the jurisdiction of the Commonwealth. The penalty prescribed is a fine of $500 on first offense and, for second offense, a fine of $500 or imprisonment for six months or both, at the jurisdiction of the court.

Berman Off for Europe on United Artist Business

The first delegation to be sent to Europe by Hiram Abrams to look after the distribution of the "Big Four" product in England and on the Continent is sailing on Saturday, March 12th, for London. As previously announced, Exchanges are to be established immediately in London, Birmingham, Leeds, Glasgow and Cardiff and an Exchange will be opened in Paris. Others will follow as quickly thereafter as is possible.

A. C. Berman, who has been sales manager of the New York Exchange of United Artists Corporation, heads the party. He will go to London to represent Mr. Abrams and the artists, and will be assisted by F. Wynne-Jones, who has for a long time been connected with the Griffith organization. A third member of the party is E. B. Shanks, who goes abroad to assume the post as Treasurer.

State Wide Exhibitor Organization Formed in Pennsylvania

Two Hundred Attend Successful Convention at Harrisburg, Pa.

FOR the first time in its history Pennsylvania has a solidly cemented state organization of exhibitors ready to battle hostile legislative moves and to handle problems that arise.

Adjournment of the meeting of 200 exhibitors representing every section of the state, on March 9, found them organized as the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Pennsylvania, and working in harmony with the national body, the M. P. T. O. of A.

John S. Evans of Philadelphia is President of the body Other officers named at the closing session were: 1st Vice-President, H. E. Wilkinson, Pittsburg; 2nd Vice-President, Peter Majaro, Harrisburg; 3rd Vice-President, Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburg; 4th Vice-President, Marlin Matthews, Newcastle; Secretary, M. J. O'Toole, Scranton; Assistant Secretary, R. S. Koser, Lewiston; Treasurer, Jacob Silverman, Altoona.

The original Legislative Committee, appointed as temporary at the beginning of the session, was made a permanent body, as well as the other committees first named.

The Legislative Committee will let no grass grow under its feet in taking up the state problems facing it, having arranged to appear at a public meeting before the House Ways and Means Committee in Harrisburg on March 16 and before the same committee in Philadelphia on March 24.

Plans were laid to fight hostile bills pending in the legislature, particularly those increasing the income tax burden on picture theatres.

Among other resolutions adopted at the closing session was one condemning the attitude of William A. Brady, which set forth that "under pretense of fighting censorship, he sought to create a new exhibitor body subject to the control and management of a producers' and distributors' management."

Another resolution adopted urged the repeal of the Pennsylvania censor law.

There were two hundred delegates in their seats as the meeting was called to order on the afternoon of March 8th. Fully 500 theatres of the state were represented. The meeting was opened by C. Floyd Hopkins, manager of the Wilmer & Vincent theatre interests in Harrisburg, who introduced George A. Hoverter, mayor of Harrisburg, who cordially welcomed the delegates to the city. The reply was made by M. J. O'Toole, a Scranton exhibitor.

After brief remarks by S. I. Berman, of New York, executive secretary of the national organization, Sydney S. Cohen, national president, was introduced. He explained the need of the Pennsylvania exhibitors organizing, not only to fight hostile federal legislation, such as the 5 per cent film tax, but also to look out for the interests of the business in the Pennsylvania Legislature where there are now pending half a dozen measures, which, if all enacted into law, would drive the majority of the theatres to the wall.

He spoke in opposition to the music tax and called for support of the proposed equitable contract between exhibitors and producers, which, he said, already has been framed and awaits the producers' signatures. Mr. Cohen said he stood for organization "for protection and not for profit." He then launched into a criticism of William A. Brady.

W. Stephen Bush, of New York, attacked censorship in an address and declared the screen should be as free as the press. Other speakers at the opening session were George Spang, mayor of Lebanon, who is an exhibitor; George Rapport, a member of the Philadelphia local organization of exhibitors; M. J. O'Toole, of Scranton; Fred J. Herrington, the peppful national organizer from Pittsburg, and Peter Magaro, the energetic exhibitor of Harrisburg.

The committees appointed on the first day of the Convention follow:

Resolution Committee: Chairman David Barist, Philadelphia; Fred Herringtonn Pittsburgh; A. P. Way, Dubois; J. R. Cadoret, Scranton; L. J. Chamberlain, Shamokin; William Hunt, Philadelphia.

Legislation Committee: Chairman George Aarons, Philadelphia; M. J. O'Toole, Scranton; Peter Magaro, Harrisburg; Henry Poke, Pittsburgh; C. Floyd Hopkins, Harrisburg; Eugene McAtee, Mahanoy City; George Spang, Lebanon; Frank J. Harrison, Pittsburgh.

Organization Committee: Chairman Fred Herrington, Pittsburgh; H. P. Dawson, Beaver Falls; C. O. Baird, Portage; O. A. Potter, Erie; Wm. Ray, New Castle; Harry Davies, Milton; Hugh Campbell, Hazelton; J. R. Rogers, Middletown; Nicholas Power, Doylestown.

Ways and Means Committee: Chairman J. Silverman, Altoona; Charles F. Kear, Minersville; Marlin Matthews, New Castle; Mike Stiefel, Philadelphia; John Hayes, Philadelphia; H. J. Schad, Reading; H. E. Wilkinson, Pittsburgh.

Committee on Business Relations: Chairman Fred Osterstock, Easton; Sam Fineman, Philadelphia; Harold Heiberger, Bethlehem; C. A. Kline, Ardmore; George Spang, Lebanon; J. E. Smith, Pittsburgh; H. Wilkinson, Pittsburgh; Dr. Mischler, Altoona; Joe Shevia, Lewistown.

On the evening of the first day of the convention a most enthusiastic banquet was held in the Penn-Harris Hotel ball room. The arrangements were made by the local executive committee composed of Peter Magaro, chairman, of Harrisburg; C. Floyd Hopkins, Harrisburg; Isaac Marcus, Harrisburg, and H. B. Sellers, Steelton.

Peter Magaro, acted as toastmaster of the banquet and before introducing the speakers, at the close of the feast, announced he had just received assurance from legislative sources that the bill, pending before the Pennsylvania law-makers, that would have imposed the inequitable 1 per cent tax on gross receipts of theatres, was destined to go down to defeat. This brought forth cheers.

The first speaker was Assemblyman Craig, of Erie, the one Pennsylvania city in which Sunday motion picture shows are permitted.

Henry Havinghurst, assistant secretary of the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce, an ex-service man, welcomed the delegates to the city.

W. Stephen Bush made an eloquent appeal against censorship, and Assemblyman Marcus, of Pittsburgh, told the exhibitors that it was their own fault that hostile laws had been placed on the statute books in Pennsylvania because they had been so lethargic heretofore in the matter of protecting their own interests.

Dean Hoffman, editor-in-chief of two Harrisburg daily newspapers, The Patriot and The Evening News, compared the power of the press with that of the screen and advocated closer cooperation between those agencies.

National President Cohen made a felicitous speech expressing his pleasure at being present and at the remarkable display of enthusiasm shown by the baby organization. He announced that Herbert Hoover, had sent him a letter conveying thanks for the wonderful work the Pennsylvania exhibitors did in exceeding their quota in the European Relief work drive.

In behalf of the producing interests, Mr. Mendelsohn, of the Goldwyn Company, made an address in which he advocated closer cooperation between the manufacturer and exhibitor, through the medium of the exchanges.

Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, made one of his characteristic speeches against censorship which brought cheers from the big gathering. Mike Stiefel, a Philadelphia exhibitor, made a humorous address. There were addresses by several other speakers.

The list of the delegates registered at the Convention, follows:

J. F. Fahnestock, Muncy; C. L. Koller, Altoona; Samuel A. Aeri, Marietta; W. A. Welliver, Montrose; Julius Markowitz, D. M. Baltimore, John Newman, Spencer Momoses, Marlen Matthews, William Ray, M. J. Ray, New Castle.

Reports on Brady's Missouri Tour Conflict

Conflicting reports come from Missouri in regards to the attitude of exhibitors in that state on the Brady-Cohen discussion. Through its president, Charles T. Sears, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, state that they are heartedly in support of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and strongly condemn William A. Brady and what they term his "attempts to baif exhibitors."

According to news received from the National Association, Mr. Brady was entertained by one hundred exhibitors in St. Louis. The condemnation of Mr. Brady's trip by Sidney Cohen was the object of attack, states the National Association, in a speech made by none other than Joseph Mogler, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis.

The following wire has been received from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri:

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri have successfully defeated all 'blue law' legislative attempts, including the standing room bill and other adverse measures. They also secured the passage of the deposit bill which has already passed the Senate without a dissenting vote.

"This success is the result of the ready response and full co-operation of all independent exhibitors throughout Missouri, especially those in smaller communities. We are wholeheartedly in support of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and President Sidney S. Cohen. We strongly condemn the attempts of Brady and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to bait exhibitors, and we see in this propaganda an organized effort to disrupt all exhibitor organizations. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri are in one accord with the policies, attitude and actions of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and its officers. This is the sentiment of every independent exhibitor in the State of Missouri."

The above is contradicted by the news sent out by the National Association, which tells of the passage of a resolution lauding Mr. Brady and his tour by the hundred exhibitors and exchangemen of St. Louis who entertained the National Association president.

The following is their report of the Brady luncheon in St. Louis on March 6th:

"A resolution was unanimously adopted by the Exhibitors lauding Mr. Brady's purpose on his trans-continental tour and heartily supporting him in his purpose to bring about a united industry organization which would protect the industry from assaults from its enemies.

"Mr. Mogler, as the result of the resolution, sent the following telegram to Mr. Sidney Cohen:

"'William A. Brady spoke here today as the guest of the St. Louis Film Club and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association of Missouri. As President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis and Vice-President of the National Organization, I want to go on record as heartily approving everything Mr. Brady said to the necessity of a united industry which will withstand the assaults upon our business by our enemies, who would curb our usefulness by censorship and other legislation. The unanimous concensus of opinion among our members is that Mr. Brady by his talks and sound advice based on long experience is doing a great constructive work for the motion picture industry and by his talks and earnest attitude has made us realize our strength and importance in the community more than any individual who has ever spoken to us here or elsewhere.

"'J. MOGLER,
"'President, M. P. T. O. of St. Louis.'

"S. K. Skouras, one of the largest exhibitors in the State, also sent a telegram to Mr. Cohen endorsing Mr. Brady's work."

Capital Theatre, of Vancouver, B. C. to Open

Prominent officials identified with interests associated with the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation assembled at Vancouver, B. C., for several weeks to prepare for the opening of the new and elaborate Capitol Theatre on March 12th. Those who arrived in the Canadian Terminal City included H. M. Thomas of Toronto, formerly of Omaha, director of theatres for the corporation, and Jack Arthur, also of Toronto, director of production and music for the Famous Players' Canadian company. Miss N. H. Dornin of New York, who is identified with Thomas Lamb, the architect who prepared the plans for the Vancouver Capitol, arrived on the scene late in February to supervise the hanging and placing of draperies and furnishings and to direct the final decorative work.

Announcement is made that William Raven of Vancouver, a well-known local musical conductor, has been appointed director of music for the new house.

'Frisco Theatre Men Join Los Angeles Organization

The Allied Amusement interests, composed of legitimate, vaudeville and film theatre men and exchangemen of San Francisco, became affiliated with the newly organized Affiliated Picture Interests of Los Angeles on March 8, through their representatives I. M. Golden and Eugene Roth.

It is expected that there will be 15,000 members in Los Angeles, and 2,000 in the San Francisco territory. All members of the American Society of Cinematographers, numbering seventy-six, have joined the Affiliated Picture Interests. The Christie studio is the first studio to have a hundred per cent membership.

Sixty N. Y. Churches Served by New Corporation

The International Church Film Corporation, which was incorporated in New York state last fall, and which maintains a headquarters in Albany, is now serving about sixty churches in central and northern New York, its business expanding to the extent that it has just moved into more commodious headquarters. While the company was capitalized for $50,000, when incorporated, only about $12,000 has been paid in, and yet on this comparatively small amount, the company has been able to rapidly expand. Foster W. Taylor is manager of the Albany branch.

Mr. Taylor states that while all business thus far secured had been entirely through correspondence, the field offered great possibilities, there being an ever increasing demand for the films. Among some of the pictures which the company is now furnishing the churches are "The Good Samaritan," "The Modern Ruth" and "By their Faults." The scripture and music is arranged to accord with the picture shown. C. L. Grant.

I select is the best available for the week. I always have a two-reel comedy and then a single reel scenic or news release. In other words, the best show of the week is given on the days when people have to be attracted in, rather than coming of their own volition.

"The system has worked out well. Saturday night is still my big night, but it is always overflow because of the number of farmers who do their shopping and week's buying on a Saturday and spend the evenings in town. Of the other five nights there is no choice. There is good business on every one of them, so that I haven't any light day problem left.

"The exhibitor who figures that he can afford one or two light days a week, because of the business the rest of the time is losing more than his light days show. Since I made a special play for Monday business the whole average attendance at the house has increased. The explanation seems simple. Start off the week with a crowded house, and the people there, if the show is good, are bound to talk about it and the propaganda is busy for theatre attendance.

"While I have made no effort to build up Wednesday and Thursday business, it increased coincident with the increase in the Monday and Tuesday business, I can check the effect it has on Friday.

Censorship Still Awaiting Action by Several Legislatures

Unexpected Developments Surprise; Predict Censorship for New York

CENSORSHIP continues to occupy the attention of legislative committees of various states throughout the Union. Probably the most startling development of the nation-wide fight being waged around censorship took place in the Missouri State House where the bill providing for state censorship was passed, after being reported unfavorably by the Criminal Jurisprudence Committee. The senate committee, it is understood, will recommend to the senate that the bill be passed as soon as possible. In New York state, Representative Walter F. Clayton has introduced a substitute bill for his original measure at Albany. A companion bill to the Clayton measure has been submitted by Senator Clayton R. Lusk. Legislative leaders are of the opinion that censorship of the legalized brand will be in operation in New York by August 1. What the final action of both legislative houses on the proposal will be, still remains problematical. Another unlooked for twist in the situation developed at Indianapolis, when, following the Indiana senate's postponement of the Buchanan bill for an indefinite period, the house brought out of committee another measure providing for state censorship, passed it and then passed it on the senate for action. In North Carolina, a bill providing for state censorship was passed by the senate, but the numerous amendments appended by the upper house are expected to leave little chance for its passage in the lower house. Censorship measures are also pending before the legislatures of California, Michigan, New Jersey and Wisconsin.

Buffalo, N. Y., and Jersey City, N. J., have experienced local skirmishes of their own apart from the fight being waged at the state capitals. In Buffalo, a committee of citizens, headed by the president of the local Rotary club, proposed the enactment of a censorship ordinance for the city to the mayor. Ira M. Mosher, president of the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association, and Harold B. Franklin of Shea's Hippodrome immediately started a counter-agitation. Mayor Buck did not declare his opinion on the censorship proposal made. In Jersey City, following allegations of the Sabbath Day Alliance that picture houses were receiving most of the receipts from the Sunday benefit performances, Chief of Police Richard T. Battersby announced that no picture house would hereafter be permitted to give benefit performances on Sunday. The police chief's announcement advised that permits might be granted in particular cases where he would deem such action justifiable.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry at a meeting held on Saturday of last week took decisive steps, which, according to the report from the National Association, "will insure against the production of questionable and will prevent, also, the exploitation of pictures in a manner offensive to good taste." Resolutions were adopted to put a remedial plan into effect.

Missouri House Surprises

Breaking all precedents by engrossing a bill which was previously killed in the Criminal Jurisprudence Committee, the Missouri State House passed the proposed legislation creating a state board of censorship. There were only four dissenting votes, two of which were cast by St. Louis representatives.

The result of yesterday's ballot in the House created a furore throughout the state among members of the motion picture trade in that the previous unfavorable report by the committee which considered the bill was looked upon as certain death to the proposition. The bill is now awaiting engrossment in the State Senate, having been passed by the Senate committee some few days ago. The rupture of all established precedent is viewed with great alarm and St. Louis and Kansas City exhibitors and exchange men are calling meetings to formulate new opposing action.

The bill provides for a board of three, two men and one woman, at a salary of $3,000 each, and eight other employes at salaries ranging from $900 to $1,800 a year.

New Bills for New York

Following a conference with the Governor, Speaker Machold and Senator Clayton R. Lusk, majority leader of the Senate, Assemblyman Walter F. Clayton on Friday of last week issued a substitute bill for his original censorship measure.

It provides for a commission of three members who will have the authority to name deputies. Their salaries will be $7,500 a year, instead of $5,000, as was first proposed. The term of office will be for five years, although the first members will have terms that expire respectively in 1923, 1924 and 1925.

Under the provisions of the measure, no film can be exhibited after August 1, that has not been licensed by the commission. Each film is to be taxed $3.00 a reel. News and scientific pictures are exempt from inspection and from the tax.

Applicants are given the right to review all rejected films. Advertisements also fall under the censorship provisions.

On Monday of this week Senator Clayton R. Lusk, majority leader in the upper house, introduced a companion bill to the Clayton measure. This would create a motion picture department with three commissioners. Seventy thousand dollars is to be appropriated for the preliminary expenses under the measure. This bill was referred to the Senate Finance Committee. Fees for the examination of all films after August 1, will be at the rate of $10 for each 1,000 feet of original film and $5 for each additional copy. Should the film be refused a permit, the applicant may have the right of review by a full commission, whose decision shall be made within five days. The commission must submit a report of its work to the Governor yearly.

Issue Revived in Indiana

It appeared last week that the censorship movement in Indiana was about squelched, but it bobbed up in the State Legislature again this week. The Senate cheered the exhibitors last week by indefinitely postponing the Buchanan bill providing for the establishment of a censorship commission of three members, but the House this week revived apprehension by bringing out of committee the bill of Mrs. Julia Nelson of Muncie, the only woman member of the body and passing it by a vote of 60 to 18. This measure was sent to the Senate.

When the bill was first called down for a vote by Speaker McClure of the House many members quietly departed, not caring to go on record on the matter of censorship. The friends of the bill, however, made such demands that the absentees were rounded up and forced to return and make known their votes.

N. C. Passes Bill with Amendments

Although the censorship bill passed the North Carolina Senate, it did so with so

Picture-Music Association Addresses Industry

IN a bulletin just issued by the Association of Motion Picture Musical Interests, the following announcement is addressed to the industry:

"Following the mandate of the First National Motion Picture Conference, held January 24, 25 and 26, 1921, at the Hotel Astor, New York City, we met and prepared a Constitution, By-Laws and membership plans. We urge the field to rush to the banner—send in your application blank now. Temporary headquarters have been established in Suite 400, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City. Dues are to be paid in advance—$2.00 a year for individuals and $10.000 for corporations and companies."

The bulletin has been issued by a committee which consists of Joseph Carl Breil, Ernest Lutz, Hugo Riesenfeld, Samuel Rothafel; C. M. Tremaine, chairman; and Charles D. Isaacson, ex-officio.

many amendments tacked on, that there is little chance of it passing the lower branch of the legislature. Among the provisions added is one which would increase the membership of the board from three to five; another which does not require any woman member on the board; and a third which requires that the minority be of the opposite political faith from majority. Still another amendment would censor the press of North Carolina which carries advertising of motion pictures. One of the most important amendments deprives the censor board of the right to employ inspectors.

With these and other amendments added to the bill, the opponents of censorship in the Senate are willing to allow the measure to go before the House, confident that it will not pass.

Coast Film Colony on Job

The danger confronting the film industry because of legislation of the blue law type has been brought very forcibly to the attention of the various organizations of the West Coast film colony, and concerted action has been taken for the formation of an inter-organization, the sole purpose of which will be to prevent the passage of undesirable legislation and kill any movement harmful to the film industry in or out of California. The anti-censorship organization will be named "Affiliated Picture Interests, Incorporated," and it is expected incorporation will be authorized within the next few days at Sacramento.

The concerted action toward the Affiliated Picture Interest is the direct result of the censorship question being the chief topic of discussion at meetings of Motion Picture Producers' Association, Screen Writers' Guild, Motion Picture Directors' Association and other organizations. Definite action was brought about by a call issued by William D. Taylor, president of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, who sent letters to the fifteen film organizations and associations in Los Angeles requesting that they send a representative to the anti-censorship meeting held at Los Angeles Athletic Club on the evening of February 28. At this meeting fourteen organizations were represented and many others of the film industry attended.

New Bill for Michigan

A wire from Lansing, Mich., informs that a substitute censorship bill for the one submitted by Representative Edward B. Strom of Grand Rapids has been prepared for action by the State Legislature. The new measure provides for censorship of all motion-pictures exhibited in the state of Michigan under the direction and authority of the new State Administrative Board. The bill will probably be reported out in the House at an early date. It is understood that its general plan at least has the approval of Governor Groesbeck.

The bill itself does not provide for the machinery of conducting the censorship, all the details being left to the administrative board. It is the idea, of course, that the board will effect the proper force and procedure for the censoring of all pictures, slides and other screen exhibitions.

How Censors Are Made

Here's the story of how Assemblyman W. F. Clayton happened to introduce the censorship bill which bears his name, in the New York State Legislature, a few days ago, and around which the stiffest kind of a fight will soon centre.

It seems that Assemblyman Clayton has been a rather frequent patron of motion picture shows for several years, going to the good, the bad and the indifferent. He was also interested a few years ago in a more direct way, acquiring the state rights for the "101 Ranch," which he distributed through the New England states as a 4-reel feature.

Before he took his seat in the Assembly, he made up his mind that something should be done to put a stop to the suggestive features of motion pictures, which were growing more and more prominent. To that end, he drafted his own bill, bringing it to Albany, where it was given over to the state bill drafting commission, and whipped into shape.

"I am not a 'Blue Sunday' man by any means," said Assemblyman Clayton, in discussing his bill. "I have seen all sorts of pictures, the good as well as the bad. Of late, however, there seems to have been a tendency for many of the producers to overdo and inject the suggestive to a degree that can not help but be demoralizing in its effects. The producers are to blame. I have talked with some of the exhibitors in New York and they tell me that they take pictures which are booked, and sometimes it happens that some exceptional picture is produced. Smith gets it and Solomon decides that he must have it, forgetting everything except its box office value.

"I remember one picture which shows a young man in bed, and a young lady undressing, sitting on the edge of the bed. The picture is cut at just about the time she is preparing to get into bed. The way they are now going, the day is not far distant when they will forget to cut this part of the picture.

"There are two reasons why this bill I have introduced on censorship should pass. There is the moral part and on the other hand, the bill is a revenue-producing measure. If these companies can spend the millions they do for their stars and on exploitation of pictures, there is no reason in the world why they should not bear a portion of New York state's tax burdens. The motion picture business is next to the automobile business at the present time. I think that the fee that is imposed for the examining of films should bring to the state at least $100,000 a year, and I say 'at least' with emphasis. If we find the bill is not workable in some respects next year it can be amended.

"There will be no men on this proposed commission of censorship, if I can help it, who are in any way associated with the motion picture industry. I should fight any such move like a tiger. That is the great trouble with the so-called National Board of Censorship, which we have now. I would favor men of a high calibre, who are not directly interested in any branch of the motion picture industry, even as producer, distributor or exhibitor. The only question in my mind about my bill is whether or not we could get men of the right sort at the salary proposed, $5,000 a year.

"I have received many letters from all over the state approving this measure, and not a single one has been against it thus far. These letters have come from men and women in all walks of life, likewise all religious denominations.

"This measure of mine will be backed by Canon Chase and the New York Civic League, although I did not request such. In fact, I had never met Canon Chase until the other day. The bill is intended to be a strictly business one, calling first for the censoring of motion pictures on moral grounds and secondly, in bringing additional revenue to this State."

It is understood that the Governor is opposed to the other two bills which have already been introduced, each of which would create a special censorship board and provide elaborate machinery and regulations for carrying on the work of censoring pictures.

N. J. Exhibitors Plan Fight

Representative exhibitors of the Motion Picture Owners' Association of New Jersey conferred at Trenton, March 2, concerning ways and means of arousing the motion picture public to a realization of the dangers of "unlimited un-American possibilities of censorship." John T. Collins, president of the New Jersey organization, presided at the meeting which was held at the State House. A censorship measure is now awaiting action by the New Jersey Legislature.

At the suggestion of Frank L. Smith, manager of the Rialto theatre, Newark, the members, who came from sixteen of the twenty-one counties in the state, voted to make a direct appeal to the public by means of slides.

It was made clear at the meeting that there would be no such thing as "slush fund," but that the money raised would be for slides and legitimate expenses.

Hearing Before Wisconsin Senate Committee

"I have never seen an indecent or immoral movie," declared Attorney General William J. Morgan before the Senate Committee on State Affairs of Wisconsin, while bill 215S, providing for the amendment of the present law penalizing the circulation of indecent pictures to include motion pictures, was under consideration.

The bill, which was drafted by Mr. Morgan is being pushed chiefly to include specific mention of motion pictures in the law. County district attorneys have, in some cases, refused to push prosecutions on the basis that the law did not cover the showing of indecent motion-pictures.

Benj. Hampton Aids Censor Fight in California

At the request of Glenn Harper, Los Angeles representative of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Benjamin B. Hampton addressed the executives of forty Los Angeles Associations, consisting of the Business Mens Co-Operative Association, the Municipal League, and many other organizations.

Mr. Hampton received an enthusiastic reception and as a result of his address the representative passed a resolution to urge their various associations to go on record immediately against the California censorship bill.

Cissy Fitzgerald Comedy at the Capitol

Announcement is made that "Cissy's Economy," the first of the Cissy Fitzgerald Comedies De Luxe, is booked to open at the Capitol theatre, New York, Sunday March 13th.

Cissy Fitzgerald will be remembered as the famous comedy star "with the wink." She became the toast of two continents on the legitimate stage, through her captivating wink.

The Cissy Fitzgerald series is released through Producers Security Corporation, 516 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Monsoon Cooling System Issues Interesting Booklet

"A Better Summer Business" the 32-page descriptive booklet just issued by the Monsoon Cooling System, Inc., tells the up-to-date theatre owner how "Monsoons" will solve his hot weather troubles. This booklet is full of excellent reasons why "Monsoons" have suddenly loomed as a dangerous enemy to Old Man Heat!

Illustrations of several new theatres and typical "Monsoon" installations complete the attractiveness of the issue. The demand for the booklet has been so great that a second edition is now contemplated.

Hoover Drive Returns Reach High Figures

THE motion picture industry's contribution to the fund for Europe's starving children is beginning to run into big figures. Returns from the various states have been coming into the New York Headquarters of the Motion Picture Division of the Hoover Drive since early in February.

Last week $660,000 had accumulated and was turned over to James J. Rick, Comptroller of the European Relief Council This does not represent the entire amount collected up to date however, because many of the exhibitor chairmen in the various states have either turned their funds over direct to the European Relief Council, or have given the collections to the state chairman of the European Relief Council in their respective localities. Thousands of individual contributions inspired by the Invisible Guest trailers, which were run in theatres throughout the country, have also been sent direct to the European Relief Council, but these are being credited to the motion picture industry.

Of the $660,000 payment last week, one check for $500,000 was signed by C. C. Pettijohn of the General Motion Picture Committee of the European Relief Council. It represented funds that had been delayed through the General Committee by the exhibitor chairman in twenty or more states, also contributions by individual theatres sent direct by them to the New York Headquarters.

Another check for $160,000 was signed by S. L. Rothafel, chairman of the Greater New York Committee of the European Relief Council. This represents the first payment of proceeds from Motion Picture Day in the New York territory. The Capitol Theatre was the largest individual contributor—$10,405.47 having been collected here for the fund. The receipts from some of the other large New York theatres were Plaza $1,146.75; Rivoli $1,049.40; Strand $1,000.78; Rialto $726.95.

Mr. Rothafel's report to Mr. Hoover showed that 206,176 children attended special performances held in 240 theatres in New York City.

The first state to forward complete returns to the Motion Picture Committee was Arkansas. A check for $3,868.50 has been received from Mr. C. A. Lick of Ft. Smith, exhibitor chairman of the Motion Picture Committee for Arkansas.

John LeRoy Johnston Will Join Home-Office Staff

John LeRoy Johnston, who has been advertising director for the Finkelstein and Ruben theatrical enterprises in Minneapolis for the past twenty-two months, has resigned his position to join the advertising and publicity staff of one of the larger film companies in New York, the name of which has not been given out.

Think Rochester Convention Will Be Big Affair

REPORTS coming from every quarter of New York state indicate that the New York State Exhibitors convention, to be held at the Hotel Seneca, in the City of Rochester, April 5, 6 and 7, will be the biggest affair of its kind ever held in this or any other states, declares a statement just received from the M. P. T. O. of A. headquarters.

It is understood that the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City and its president, I. E. Chadwick, will be present at the convention. The object is to hold a special conference between the F. I. L. M. Club and the exhibitors, at which the grievances of the exhibitors will be discussed and adjusted.

The first day will be devoted to the appointment of committees, consideration of resolutions and routine business generally. On the second day the reports of committees will take place, and a great movie ball will be held in the armory that night.

This convention, in conjunction with the election of officers for the state organization will also choose delegates to the National convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, which will be held in June of this year.

Exhibitors who want to attend or desire any information are requested to write to Mr. I. M. Salyerds at Victoria Theatre, Rochester, N. Y.

Bill Makes Stench Bomb Throwing a Felony

The Allied Amusement Association, Chicago, is taking steps to have the use or manufacture of stench bombs made a felony as a result of the numerous attacks on Chicago theatres within the last month.

It is probable that a clause providing for punishment of bomb users and makers will be added to the Crowe emergency bill now before the Illinois legislature, which proposes drastic punishment for use of explosive bombs.

Blaney Denied Injunction Order Against Fox

The final chapter has been written in the suit brought by Charles E. Blaney, theatrical producer, against Fox Film Corporation applying for an injunction to restrain the Fox company from using the title "The Man Who Dared."

Fox Film Corporation recently produced and released a picture bearing this title, with William Russell as the star, and Mr. Blaney applied for an injunction prohibiting its use on the ground that he owned a play entitled "The Man Who Dared."

The case came up before Judge Hotchkiss and he rendered a decision denying the application for injunction. Mr. Blaney, through his lawyers, appealed the case to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court and that court has just handed down a decision unanimously affirming the order of Judge Hotchkiss that an injunction be denied.

Arthur Ziehm Leaves for Europe on Business

Arthur Ziehm, foreign manager for Goldwyn, sailed for Germany on March 10 to take charge of the sales of the Goldwyn product in all countries of Europe. He will make his headquarters in Berlin. Mr. Ziehm has been well-known in the motion picture industry of this country for a number of years, part of the time as Goldwyn's foreign sales manager. His contract with Goldwyn has just been renewed for a term of years.

Mr. Ziehm will meet Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, who is now in Europe, in Berlin, and together they will visit Italy, France and other countries on the continent, looking into the film situation generally. It is planned to greatly increase the sales of Goldwyn productions in the various countries of Europe.

Walsh Heads Prizma for Ensuing Year

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of Prizma, Incorporated, producers of Prizma Master Pictures in Nature's Colors, held March 2nd, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President and Treasurer, C. K. D. Walsh; Vice Presidents, Carroll H. Dunning and Howard G. Stokes; Secretary, George Kelley; Technical Advisor and Assistant Treasurer, Wm. V. D. Kelley.

While no announcement was made by Mr. Walsh as to future policies, it is understood that there will be no change in the present plan of production.

West Virginia Exhibitors to Convene March 15th

The exhibitors of West Virginia will hold a convention on March 15 at the City of Charleston, to form a permanent organization under the auspices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Extensive preparations have been made to insure a large attendance. The leading exhibitors of the state have signified their intention of attending. The fact that a very drastic censorship bill is pending in the West Virginia Legislature will have a tendency to insure a very substantial attendance.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will be represented by Samuel I. Berman of New York.

Mildred Harris to Play in DeMille's Next

Cecil B. DeMille announces that he has engaged Mildred Harris for his next Paramount production to follow "The Affairs of Anatol," which he recently completed. Further than that the leading feminine role will be in the hands of Dorothy Dalton, nothing further is known of the forthcoming picture.

Music and the Picture

Become a Member of the Association of Motion Picture Musical Interests

By Charles D. Isaacson

IT is now possible to join a regularly constituted organization for the improvement of music in the theatres.

Therefore, become a member at once. Get your name enrolled. Jump in with your support. Boost the project. If you're a manager, urge your musical director and musicians to join, and if you're a musican, encourage your manager to be an active interest.

The more rapidly the new Association can show real membership, growing membership, and even numerical strength, the sooner will the power for good be exerted.

Don't wait until the rest of the field have done the leading. Be yourelf the leader.

What Is Wanted

The Association of Motion Picture Musical Interests wants a permanent headquarters (a desk-room will do—no elaborate suite). It will need a paid secreatary eventually for all of his time. It needs stationery, postage, publicity.

It needs you.

The Association is not to be a spending organization. It is not to have a large treasury.

The Association is to be an impetus to action, a centralizer of ideas, a crystalizer of results.

The Association will not have any need for loads of money, it seems now. When $5,000 a year is assured from the dues, undoubtedly that will be the maximum desired.

Therefore dues will be inconsequential to the individual.

The present dues will be two dollars ($2) for Individuals and ten dollars ($10) for Corporations.

You can join now. Do join now!

The Committee of Five Meets

C. M. Tremaine, director of the Bureau for the Advancement of Music, was chosen chairman by Messrs. Joseph Carl Breil, Ernest Lutz, Hugo Riesenfeld, Samuel Rothapfel and Charles D. Isaacson (Ex-Officio member) when they met Thursday, February 24, 1921, at 729 Seventh Avenue in the office of the Motion Picture News.

No time was lost.

The Committee was in hearty agreement on certain points.

1. The Convention at the Hotel Astor in January started a new epoch. It brought together representatives of leading institutions.
2. The Convention demonstrated the absolute need for this Association.
3. The two hundred and eighty delegates of the Convention constituted themselves into a temporary but very active nucleus.
4. The Association is therefore actually an entity—actually in existence.

Furthermore the Committee signed upon certain other points.

5. No delay must be permitted.
6. Membership must be urged at once.
7. A fund must be obtained through dues.
8. Dues must be small.
9. SERVICE TO BE THE KEYNOTE.
10. The three forces must be united—pictures, music, public.

BULLETIN OF ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE MUSICAL INTERESTS

UP FOR RATIFICATION

THE Committee of Five appointed by Protem, President Charles D. Isaacson, desires to report to the united industries:

We have met this day and have drawn up a constitution and by-laws for the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests.

We present it for ratification by the Board of Directors and Executive Committee.

The Board of Directors who will be called upon to serve the Association will be thirty-five in number and will represent every phase of the tripod alliance. Their names will be voted upon at the next meeting of this Committee, acceptances to be made public within the fortnight.

The Executive Committee will consist of five members who will be the real voting body.

It has been the endeavor of this Committee to make a brief to the point, working document devoid of verbiage and flowing promises.

It is the earnest belief of this Commitmittee that the slogan of the Association of Motion Picture Musical Interests must be

SERVICE

Every member must get real value out of his membership and we thoroughly believe he will do so.

Therefore we advocate the immediate signing of membership so as to provide a working fund for organization.

Should there be any change in the form of the Constitution which alters the desire of the members to be of the body, his dues will be returned.

Temporary headquarters are 729 Seventh Avenue. Temporarily, Mr. Isaacson will receive all communications and queries. Temporarily dues may be sent to him.

Appreciation is voiced to the Motion Picture News for providing, free of charge, temporary housing, stenographic service, stationery, etc.

This statement and a copy of the Constitution and by-laws are being forwarded simultaneously to the entire trade press of pictures and musical field with an ardent request that they be published with an INTERPRETATION of the clauses, so that the importance of each idea be freely conveyed.

THE COMMITTEE OF FIVE:
Joseph Carl Breil
Ernest Lutz
Hugo Riesenfeld
Samuel Rothafel
C. M. Tremaine, Chairman
Charles D. Isaacson, Ex-officio.
Thursday, Feb. 24, 1921.

Temporary Headquarters

Until a place for the Association to hang its hat is found, the News volunteered its offices and employees. But the News wishes the field to understand this is only temporary and that there is no selfish motive behind this offer. The success of this plan depends to a large extent on the support of all the trade papers.

I (Isaacson) told the Committee that I am no quitter, but I do not believe it for the best interests of the cause that I do more than start things going. I want to see others in charge—others who will give the Association their sincere support.

Interpretation of the Constitution and By-Laws

At the request of the Committee of Five, we are glad to print the Constitution and By-Laws and to offer an interpretation, although it seems to us that there is scarcely any need for explanation. The document is simple and clear.

As we see it, there are really only a few matters that need to be clarified.

Membership

It will be observed that there are three kinds of members,—motion picture, musical and general public.

The motion picture industry desires to use more and better music more effectively, to broaden the appeal of the theatre and do better business, also to understand the musicians, musical devices, ideas, hopes, possibilities, etc.—to use music for all it's worth.

The musical world recognizes the future possibilities, and seeks to get together with the picture people for better understanding and better music.

There are many forces and organizations at work to raise the public standards of taste—and this division completes the triangle.

Where Do You Fit?

Class A—Motion Picture Industry—Every individual or firm exhibiting films, making them, selling them, acting in them, directing them—in other words, exhibitors, producers, exchangers, actors, directors, writers, artists, etc.

Class B—Musical Industry and Profession—Makers of instruments, publishers of music, composers, conductors, players, singers, directors of music, schools of music, music clubs, etc.

Class C—Those Interested in the Public Through the Speech of Music—Welfare workers, cultivaters of taste, legislators, newspapers, writers, etc.—a very flexible division.

Dues

Any individual such as a manager, conductor, player, actor, director, composer, writer, member of organization, is eligible to membership at $2.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

At a meeting of the Chicago Council Committee on buildings, Alderman Joseph Kostner, the chairman, expressed himself in favor of an ordinance which will compel the rebuilding and modernizing of a number of moving picture and other theatres in Chicago, which, it was declared, are unsafe from a fire prevention standpoint.

As a result of the hearing it was decided that the committee make an investigation into every playhouse and moving picture theatre which is regarded as hazardous by Chief of the Fire Prevention Bureau J. C. McDonnell.

The Council Committee agreed to take up charges made by Chief of Police Fitzmorris that many theatres are endangering the lives of patrons by ignoring the fire safety ordinances. Chief of Police claimed, among other things, that exits had been found shut and locked, aisles and foyers overcrowded and other regulations ignored.

Peter J. Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, defended the theatre owners and declared that in the main they tried to obey the fire safety ordinances. It was also pointed out that the few violations of fire ordinances reported were by smaller theatres in the outlying districts.

Fire Prevention Chief McDonnell made the following statement at the hearing:

"This committee can go as far as it likes, and I will co-operate fully. It is unfair to the owners of the modern theatre buildings, as conditions now prevail. Having expended fortunes in such structures, the owners are compelled to compete with those who operate places built many years ago. The modern theatre owners are compelled to suffer for the sins of the owners of the ancient structures. Every one of the latter should be rebuilt and modernized, no matter what the expense."

An ordinance which would prohibit the employment of women ushers in theatres also is pending before the committee and according to Alderman Kostner, eighty-five per cent. of replies to queries sent by him to city fire marshals throughout the country show the fire officials opposed to women ushers in theatres.

"Women wouldn't be of any value in case of trouble with a crowd," is the general opinion.

Manager I. L. Lesserman, of Universal, expects to be back at his desk on March 25th after the holiday which he has been enjoying at Hollywood. Maurice Hellman, who has been in charge of the Chicago exchange during Mr. Lesserman's absence and, who, by the way, has made a wonderful sales record, will leave about March 28th for French Lick where he plans to rest up for a couple of weeks.

Napoleon, the movie monk, who is making personal appearances at some of Ascher Brothers' theatres this week, was tendered a luncheon at the Winter Garden Monday by Director of Advertising Harry Rice, the other guests being press representatives. Napoleon made a hit and the unusual event procured a couple of columns of publicity in the Chicago press for Napoleon and the Ascher theatres, where he is appearing.

Harry Weiss, of Superior Screen Service, Inc., is making a sales trip through Indiana, and reports reaching his Chicago headquarters are to the effect that he finds business in the Hoosier state holding up very well and that while exhibitors are doing considerable shopping, they are willing to book liberally if the pictures are right.

Carl Harthill, district manager of Reelcraft, is back at his desk after visits to the exchanges under his jurisdiction at Indianapolis, Kansas City and Milwaukee. Mr. Harthill is optimistic over the outlook and declares his branch managers report business holding up well in their territories. While on his trip he arranged for the distribution of some important new pictures which Reelcraft will release at an early date.

Fitzpatrick & McElroy have purchased two new houses in Goshen, Indiana, in addition to the large number of theatres now operated by them in Michigan.

Joe Gilday, new district manager for Paramount, is rapidly becoming acquainted with exhibitors of the city, and already has closed some exceptionally large contracts. In addition to persuading Ascher Brothers to return to the Paramount fold, he has closed Balaban & Katz for the Tivoli, Riviera and Central Park; Lubliner & Trinz for their chain of theatres, and Jones, Linick & Schaefer for the Randolph, Orpheum and Lyric.

Barry Fildew, camera man for Tod Browning, was in Chicago recently shooting some scenes at one of the large West Side industrial concerns for use in a forthcoming Browning series. Mr. Fildew, after completing his work here, went on a trip in search of snow and finally succeeded in finding what he was after at Appleton, Wisconsin, where he is now at work.

William A. Brady stopped off between trains in Chicago on his return from his tour of the West. Mr. Brady is greatly exercised over the seriousness of the censor and blue Sunday legislation which is confronting the industry, and is more than ever convinced that a united front must be put up if moving pictures are to be legislated practically out of existence.

Steve Montgomery, who has recently resigned from Famous Players-Lasky staff, will be the third member of this organization to accept an important position with the Lake & Export Coal Company, of which Harris P. Wolfberg recently became vice-president and sales-manager. Mr. Montgomery will, for the present at least, be located at the Chicago office of this company in the Old Colony Building, and will be connected with the sales department. He has an unusually large number of friends in Chicago and as assistant manager of Paramount's Chicago branch exchange, was one of the most popular Famous Players-Lasky officials in this territory.

Rex Lawhead, of Decatur, who was a Chicago visitor this week, has been elected president of the Decatur Theatre Company, succeeding John L. Bennett. Two years ago there were fifty-two stockholders in this company, which owns and operates the Lincoln Square Theatre, a sixteen-hundred-seat house, but since that time Mr. Lawhead has secured control of a large majority of the stock so that at present he is practically the sole owner of the company.

Harry Rice has assumed his new duties as director of advertising for Ascher Brothers' chain of theatres, and will supervise advertising for their entire chain including houses owned by this concern outside of Chicago, as well as their Windy City theatres. Mr. Rice recently resigned as business manager of Independent Films Association in order to accept the position with Aschers.

The newly organized Wabash Film Exchange has just closed a deal with the Dominant Pictures Corporation which will enable the new exchange to release a two-reel Western Star Drama every week. There are twenty new westerns in this series which were filmed under the direction of Rupert Julian, Bertram Bracken, Art Accord and others. The stars of these pictures include Rupert Julian, Art Accord, Peter Morrison, Dorothy Davenport, Jack Livingston, Lucille Young, Edythe Sterling, Leo Hill, Fritzi Brunette and Edward Alexander.

Mrs. Aaron Gollos, secretary-treasurer of Gollos Enterprises, and Vice-President Al Gollos, have returned after a two week's trip to New York, where they have contracted for some big independent features, which, according to Mr. Gollos, will make his exchange one of the biggest independent releasing concerns in this territory. Announcement of the new features will be forthcoming within a few days.

Milt Kusell is being kept busy these days receiving congratulations on his well earned promotion to the position of salesmanager of Famous Players-Lasky's Chicago exchange.

Newman & Freuhler, owners of the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, have appointed Edwin Mocsary as manager of that house. Mr. Moc-

Selected Films, Inc., 207 S. Wabash Avenue, controlled by Milton Simon and Arthur Toffler, has just closed a deal whereby this company secures the rights to release all the Brady productions in the territory including Northern Indiana, Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin. There are twenty-two of these recreated features that already have been released which they will also distribute including the ones that are to be released from time to time as the regular program. The stars of these pictures include Robert Warwick, Doris Kenyon, Ethel Clayton, Holbrook Blinn, Emmet Corrigan, Montague Love, E. K. Lincoln, June Elvidge, Carlyle Blackwell, House Peters, Lew Cody, Alice Brady, Milton Sills, Gail Kane, Clara Kimball Young, Eugene O'Brien, Warner Oland, Alec Francis, Robert Cummings and Edwin August.

Eddie Trinz has severed his connection with Lubliner & Trinz to become secretary and treasurer of the Bushmint Company who are distributors of Synchronized Scenario Music Company's scores in this territory. The Bushmint Company has taken temporary offices at 608 Consumers Building and will move to film row near Eighth and Wabash Avenues as soon as new headquarters can be arranged for. Mr. Trinz, one of the most widely known film men in Chicago, for the past six years has been connected with Lubliner & Trinz. He is Commander of the Theatrical Post of the American Legion and before coming to Chicago, was manager of five theatres in Milwaukee.

W. D. Russell and Si Griever, of Russell-Griever-Russell, have returned from a visit to the west coast where they looked over their enlarged studios. Both are well pleased with the progress being made and say that their forthcoming pictures will be the best they have ever released.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FIRST NATIONAL

The Woman in His House—

Splendid picture. Mildred Harris isn't very strong with the public, but this picture is good enough to go over big even with a star of mediocre popularity. Big business at two first run houses. (Middle West.)

Less than usual business. Mildred Harris' name not used in advertising because her recent pictures have not pleased. (Middle West.)

Good business during second week of run. Picture seemed to please. (West.)

The Devil's Garden—

Not a good subject. Business held up because we staged a fashion show. Our folks thought the picture weak and criticized it. (Middle West.)

Nineteen and Phyllis—

Had good business with this picture. Ray is well liked and a general favorite. (West.)

A Splendid Hazard—

Only a mediocre production. Business about fair. (East.)

The Kid—

One of Chaplin's best pictures. Drew big crowds throughout the entire two weeks. (Middle West.)

It was a storming success for two weeks, drawing 42,000 persons the first week and slightly less than that number the second week. A knockout. Booked for third week. (Middle West.)

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Brewster's Millions—

Capacity houses on opening Sunday in spite of heavy rain all afternoon and evening. A big winner with the public. (Middle West.)

A great picture. It pleased my audiences, consequently the box office receipts were larger than usual. (West.)

What's Worth While—

Drew good for two days, rest of week fair. (East.)

This went over big and was a money-getter here. (West.)

Forbidden Fruit—

Drew a capacity house all week Considered one of the best attractions that has been produced in months. (Middle West.)

The Life of the Party—

Excellent comedy and well liked. Arbuckle will have to have several like this to give us good financial returns, however. (Middle West.)

This feature seemed to please. About the average Arbuckle production. (Middle West.)

Paying the Piper—

Good picture and played to better than average business for week. (Middle West.)

Lavish but not satisfying. Drew well but did not build. (West.)

A Full House—

Good clean entertainment that will amuse the whole family. Satisfactory business. (Middle West.)

The Price of Possession—

Slow and unsatisfactory. Ethel Clayton's poorest to date. (West.)

The Passionate Pilgrim—

Very poor entertainment. Story was not clear and cast was only fair in the opinions of my people. Can't hand this one much. After Vignola's "The World and His Wife," this was a great disappointment. (East.)

The Ghost in the Garrett—

Just average entertainment, but Miss Gish has a good following here and they turned out to see her. Business fair. (East.)

The Gilded Lily—

A fine picture, the best that Mac Murray has ever done. Tremendous business. Held over for three weeks. (East.)

The Rookie's Return—

A poor picture playing to poor business. (East.)

The Inside of the Cup—

Winston Churchill's widely read story made into picture play of little entertaining value. Business below average. (East.)

The Easy Road—

A fair picture which did an average business. (West.)

Silk Hosiery—

Usual business with this picture which was fairly entertaining. (West.)

Polly With a Past—

Great picture. Very large box office value. Was enjoyed by my patrons. (West.)

O'Malley of the Mounted—

Had good business during the run of this picture. Seemed to please the audiences.

UNIVERSAL

Outside the Law—

Is thrilling crook melodrama which made big hit with our audiences. It has a lot of good exploitation points which we availed ourselves of, and as a result broke all house records during this week's run. Holding it over for a second week. (Middle West.)

Sure did go over big. Packed them in at all performances. (West.)

If Only Jim—

Great business with this one. Capacity houses. Great deal of word - of - mouth advertising. (West.)

Colorado—

Fine pictures which brought good business. (West.)

METRO

The Off-Shore Pirate—

Viola Dana always draws a good house for me, and this was no exception. An entertaining little picture. Business good. (East.)

Billions—

Not up to Nazimova's standard. Star falling back. Did only a mediocre business with this one. (East.)

Blackmail—

A good box office attraction. Ran with Buster Keaton in "The Scarecrow" and drew a good house all week. (Middle West.)

The Greater Claim—

Average production. Business good for the first three days. (East.)

Cinderella's Twin—

The old Cinderella story, strictly modernized and made fairly plausible. Business only fair. (East.)

The Great Redeemer—

Proved a big disappointment to me and business fell off heavily during last of the week. (East.)

GOLDWYN

Hold Your Horses—

An excellent photoplay which received a right royal welcome from patrons. An example of what screen lovers want. Capacity business. (East.)

The Song of the Soul—

Strong play, well acted, and to the liking of the movie going public. Consistently good business. (Middle West.)

Prisoners of Love—

One of the best drawing-cards I've played in a long time. Business excellent. Star much applauded. (East.)

Boys Will Be Boys—

Good feature. Business somewhat better than usual on this picture. (West.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

A Perfect Crime—

The plot of the picture is good but the production lacks pep. (East.)

The Last of the Mohicans—

Appealed mostly to school children. Drew a good house for a week. (Middle West.)

Lying Lips—

Has proved so popular that it has been held over for the fourth week. This is something never before done in this city. Played to over 60,000 in three weeks' run. (Middle West.)

A Thousand to One—

A virile, red-blooded story which holds the interest. Patrons liked it and the box office figures were large ones. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Love Light—

Moved here from another theatre of this city. A good picture but business was not up to standard. It looks as if the star is going back. (East.)

FOX

The Scuttlers—

Wonderfully good business with this picture. Certainly a success both in its value as a box office attraction and its entertainment. (West.)

EQUITY

Hush—

Very fine picture which should go over well wherever Clara Kimball Young is liked. Bad weather cut down our attendance to below average during week's run. (Middle West.)

REALART

She Couldn't Help It—

Rather slow as a picture but star is charming enough and popular enough around here to carry the show. Average business. (Middle West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

Kismet—

Wonderful production, a credit to the business. It is a little too long but it does not drag and everyone was most enthusiastic. Business was excellent all week. (East.)

A fairly good picture with very good business. (East.)

"Lying Lips" Gets Big Campaign at Los Angeles

"Lying Lips" received a full fledged exploitation campaign during its recent showing at the Symphony theatre, Los Angeles.

Manager H. S. Massey and Clem Pope and Larry Weingardner for Associated Producers put over many novelty stunts and secured a number of effective window display tie-ups among which is the one shown in the accompanying illustration.

Also for several days prior to the opening and continuing for every evening during the first week of the run, a big screen hung from the third story windows of the Broadway building immediately opposite the Los Angeles Examiner branch office, while screen and a projection equipment was maintained by the newspaper to show election returns, was used to show motion pictures of Thomas H. Ince reading the Los Angeles Examiner at his breakfast table followed by the trailer of 100 feet showing interesting scenes from the Ince production.

On Washington's Birthday thousands of cards were handed out which bore the statement:

George Washington's Birthday. Washington never told a lie. "Lying Lips" at the New Symphony.

Brouse Gets Newspaper Aid for Comedy Showing

Harry Brouse, proprietor of the Imperial theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, hooked up with The Ottawa Journal for a newspaper boost of the Toonerville Trolley comedy which was presented at the Imperial during the week of March 7. Arrangements were made with the newspaper for the publication of a trailer advertisement for the theatre immediately below the Fontaine Fox cartoon which has been appearing regularly in The Journal. The advertising display of the theatre measured 35 lines by three columns, this "ad" appearing directly under the current cartoon of the Fox series.

"Fontaine Fox's cartoon brought to life" was the top line of the theatre display and this was followed by an announcement that the comedy picture, "The Skipper's Treasure Garden," would be shown at the Imperial during the following week along with "Twin Beds," starring Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven. Because of the nature of this programme, Manager Brouse called it a "Fun Week."

Albright Pulls Another Exploitation Novelty

On the opposite page is shown a cut of the lobby display which H. A. Albright, manager of the American theatre, Butte, Mont., designed for the showing of "813." The figures of the title of the production were used in seventy-five conspicuous places about the theatre. One of the number was on the proscenium opening curtains. The letters on this curtain were eight feet high, cut from white sign cloth, outlined in red and pinned to the plush drapes.

The series of signs served as a reminder ad having the advantage of following a slide series which afforded room for explanation of the film and a sales talk.

The lobby display shown was productive also of excellent advertising results.

Uses Anti-Censorship Material on Calendar

Another sample of a monthly advertising calendar arrives from the Idylhour theatre of Greeley, Neb.

Besides advertising the various bills, the calendar was ufilized for the reprinting of anti-censorship material recently published in the News. The Idylhour ran the copy around the four sides of the calendar proper dividing the different articles by dashes.

Simple But Effective Lobby Display for "Isobel"

Here is another artistic lobby display by E. R. Rogers, manager of the Rialto theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mr. Rogers display for "Isobel" was simple of construction and brought big returns for the amount of investment.

The entire lobby floor was covered with about four inches of white sand and the side walls were banked with real trees that had been dipped in white alabastine. Blue lights were used overhead and three big purple spots artistically located made a great contrast with the blue flood.

Here is the way E. R. Rogers, manager of the Rialto theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., decorated his lobby for the run of "Isobel, or the Trail's End." Story appears on this page

Goldmans Campaign for "Chickens"

"CHICKENS," has been the subject of an unusual bit of exploitation on the part of Director William Goldman of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, Mo. It was a bit of publicity which did not exceed the bounds of exhibitor's propriety and which left a satisfied feeling with the hundreds of patrons.

To begin with a large mailing list was notified that "Chickens were Scratching at the Missouri theatre" and that every one would "be laying to see the next week's program."

Then from each of the seventeen theatres which comprise the Famous Players Missouri Corporation's local string and which are under the managership of Mr. Goldman, were distributed a total of 25,000 cards. Each card measured about five by four inches and contained two narrow slits in the center permitting the inserting of a white feather. The card bore the following inscription:

"Douglas MacLean
Will Tickle You to Death
With 'Chickens'
At the Missouri Theatre
The Entire Week of February 27."

This part of the stunt created a prevalence of good-will in that it was easily discernable that money had been spent to advertise the production to the satisfaction of all who read the cards. A psychological coup!

The rest of the exploitation consisted in hiring a man attired in a large chanticleer dummy to parade the down-town streets of the city for the week preceding and the week of the showing. The walker bore a sign advertising the picture and created much interest among the daily crowds.

Ogden Exhibitor Builds Lobby Display

Utilizing a large corner of his lobby Manager H. W. Perry of the Ogden theatre, Ogden, Utah, erected a small garden with a rustic picket fence around it, while pumpkins, squash, potatoes, carrots, stalks of corn and other vegetables were shown as advertisement for Charles Ray in "Peaceful Valley." On the day of the show Manager Perry moved the fence and garden to the front of the theatre, where he used a large cut out of Ray as a background with the corn stalks at each side in the enclosed garden. The effect produced occasioned much comment.

Ohio Theatre Uses Artistic Lobby Decorations

As an example of artistic lobby decoration, the front of the Ohio theatre, as it appeared during the run of "The Inside of the Cup," furnished a model for fellow exhibitors. According to Oscar A. Kantner, Paramount exploitation representative at Indianapolis, who assisted in the designing, the display created such a favorable impression that several of the local newspapers made it the feature of a special news story, obtaining publicity for the picture that would have been very costly had it been ordered at advertising rates.

A combination of panel work and cut-outs featured the display which covered the panels on both sides of the entrance with a horizontal strip running across the top of the entrance and joining the two together. With the artificial lights of the canopy shining down this display was just as effective at night time as during the day.

All the figures on the decorations were hand painted. The design on the panels at the two sides showed an inverted cup emptying its contents of human figures into the cauldron of life. The horizontal strip at the top of the lobby carried the title: "Winston Churchill's 'The Inside of the Cup,' a Paramount Picture."

Above this were painted cut-outs of figures from the productions and two overturned cups resting on the surface of the supposedly solid support, showing "The Inside of the Cup."

This unique design was supplemented by panel displays at both sides of the box offices and in the interior of the lobby completing what was declared to have been one of the most original as well as pleasing lobby displays ever seen in Indianapolis.

Below is a cut showing the Ohio's display as described above.

Deardourff Pulls New Stunt

"A Small Town Idol" Given Great Publicity at Sigma Theatre, Lima, O.

C. C. DEARDOURFF, manager of the Sigma theatre, Lima, Ohio, gave "The Small Town Idol" such an extensive publicity campaign, during the week of February 20, that a new record for the house was established.

Deardourff's first move was a tie-up with the retail merchants of Lima, and with the Lima Daily News, the leading newspaper of the town, which took the form of a two-page spread issued on Sunday, February 20, the day on which the picture opened its engagement. A misspelled word idea, with free tickets given to those who presented the corrected advertisements to the Lima Daily News, brought out a crowd that blockaded the entrance to the newspaper offices. An extensive billboard campaign was also used, with 200 tack and window cards, 100 one-sheets, 7 24-sheets and big newspaper advertising space.

On Saturday preceding the opening of "The Small Town Idol" Deardourff put out a street car, a facsimile of which is here reproduced. The car ran over all the different lines of the city. Big "Deagon" electric chimes, inside the car, furnished music along the way, and brought people out from their houses to see what was happening. While the car was traversing the streets, two young men were busy tieing "Small Town Idol" cards on all machines parked in the business section of Lima.

A big display of cut-outs was used on the marquee, showing the race scene of the picture, with the track, the fences surrounding the track, and with cut-outs of Ben Turpin leading the race. Around the marquee, cut-out heads of Ben Turpin and Charley Murray danced in the breezes.

The result of this exploitation was the biggest Sunday opening in the history of the Sigma theatre.

Exploitation Balloons Used at St. Louis

St. Louisans were introduced last Friday to another successful method of motion picture house exploitation when the management of Loew's new Kings theatre, Kingshighway and Delmar avenue, St. Louis, celebrated the removal of their interests from the down-town location of the Garrick theatre to their new premises in the residential district. The recent negotiations conducted by Marcus Loew with the Missouri Corporation of Famous Players resulted in his assuming a ten-year lease on the Kings theatre, and it was in honor of the grand opening on February 27 that the balloon stunt was held during the preceding week.

In the various local newspapers were run lengthy advertisements announcing the fact that 1,000 toy balloons would be released from the tallest down-town office building on the date designated. Each balloon would be filled with a proportion of gas and air so as to make the descent almost immediate upon their release from the building's roof. To each balloon, it was announced, would be tied a pair of orchestra tickets good on any night during opening week.

When the noon hour of the day named arrived, there were approximately 10,000 persons in the streets in and near the designated building. Traffic was so jammed that it required the combined efforts of an entire platoon of traffic officers to allay the congestion. And the rush after the freed balloons was greater than that of a hungry mob after bread. The fact that traffic was so congested for almost an hour was a subject of news value to the newspapers and in all several columns of free advertising was obtained. One of the best stunts attempted in St. Louis, was the verdict of old showmen.

Artistic "Old Swimmin' Hole" Prologue

Manager Plunkett of New York Mark Strand Stages Another Artistic Presentation Number

From the accompanying cuts one showing a photograph of the prologue as seen from the house, the other giving the working plan for staging the scene, Mr. Plunkett's prologue and how it was staged is made available to the trade through the kindness of the Mark Strand management and the co-operation of the theatre staff.

The "boys" in swimming and the fisherman are the members of the Mark Strand male quartet.

A ripple effect played on the bathers' bodies by means of a spotlight in the flies as they threw rice at each other, giving the appearance of playfully splashing water. As the mill wheel kept revolving they lent appropriateness by singing "The Water Mill." A constable then appeared on the scene. The three submerged completely until he passed out, and when their heads bobbed out of the water (the green gauze spread on the stage to hide their bodies) the whole quartet finished with "Little Tommy Went a Fishin'." For the lighting a blue and green border was used and three green spots on each side, the right and left wings. The mill wheel was revolved by a hand crank from behind the drop.

For the benefit of those who wish all the details for reproducing Mr. Plunkett's prologue, the following explanations of the numbers appearing on the line cut working plan are made.

1. Three green spots.
2. 1,000 Watt green Tungsten.
3. Beginning of ripple effect on green gauze and indicated by the curved lines in rows.
4. Location of three of the quartette kneeling behind the last Jack.
5. Fourth member of the quartette sitting on a stage stump.
6. Three green spots.
7. 1,000 Watt green Tungsten.

The balance of working drawing instructions are available direct from the cut.

Illustrating the "So Long Letty" exploitation stunt which G. R. Stewart, manager of the Casper theatre, Casper, Wyoming, put over as told in the accompanying article

Seattle Exploits "The Kid" in Novel Way

All Seattle has been amused by the daily parade, for two weeks, of the comedians, Henry White, a Charlie Chaplin impersonator, and little John Joy Ross, who takes off little Jackie Coogan, who appeared in the title role of "The Kid," at the Liberty theatre for two weeks.

J. Willis Sayre, advertising manager for the Jensen-Von Herberg circuit of motion picture houses, of which the Liberty is one, who thought of the idea, states that these two comedians brought more pleasure to the kiddies and even more business than was anticipated.

White and little John were a near riot as they went up and down the main streets, the boy with a placard over his tiny back advertising the Liberty attraction. White has been impersonating Chaplin for some time and has made an unusual success at this queer way of making a living. Now little John will help him for a good many weeks.

Stewart's Campaign for "So Long Letty"

G. R. Stewart, resident manager of the America and Iris theatres, Casper, Wyo., has recently put over an intensive exploitation campaign in the interests of "So Long Letty."

Mr. Stewart started off by the use of a small sticker with "So Long Letty" printed on it that was plastered to automobile windshields and other available places. This teaser campaign was used with discretion, and in consequence taken good-naturedly. Two days before the showing postcards with a bathing girl cut and a few lines telling the nature of the picture were sent out on a selected mailing list.

Several days before the first showing Mr. Stewart ran teasers in the newspapers using a very small "So" and a very large "Long" and another small "Letty." The day before the opening the same spaces were used with the theatre's name, title and dates.

One of the novelties which Mr. Stewart used was the placing of fifty signs reading "So Long Letty" on the books of newsboys for three days. The boys took the signs on the understanding that if they returned them in good condition on the third day they would be admitted free. This worked out excellently, as the boys carried the signs to school, and all over the city.

Engages Reader to Recite "Old Swimmin' Hole"

Arthur G. Stolte, managinng director of the Des Moines theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, adopted a prologue idea for his showing of "The Old Swimmin' Hole" that should appeal to every exhibitor who plays the picture, whether he be located in a large or small town.

Mr. Stolte engaged a good dramatic reader, made him up in the character of an old Hoosier pipe smoker and had him give the poem from which the picture was adapted. An appropriate stage setting for the number was also provided.

As the last words of the poem were spoken, the titles of the picture were screened.

Effective Prologue for "Black Beauty"

An effective atmospheric prologue for "Black Beauty" having as its basis the hunting scenes in the story and picture, was prepared for the recent showing at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre.

The lights gradually developed over a pastoral drop, revealing dawn sky effects with the orchestra providing the proper incidentals, such as the crowing of cocks at daylight and the twitter of awakening birds. As a clock boomed an early morning hour there was a pound of horses hoofs off stage and a clatter of chains, the snap of whips and the barking of dogs.

This effective use of effects was followed up by the appearance of the Strand Quartette attired in the scarlet hunting coats, riding breeches and jaunty cap of the fashionable huntsmen. Real dogs tugged at leashes. The huntsmen sang the quaint hunting song, "John Peel," a century old ballad of the chase.

Burns Exploitation for "Kismet"

Frank Burns publicity director of the Phillips theatre, Orlando, Fla., has been doing things for the engagement of "Kismet" at the Phillips.

On this page is shown the lobby decorations for the showing. Beside the lobby display the exploitation campaign included big space in the newspapers, banners all over town, and window displays.

One tie-up with a book store included a window full of copies of the novel with several cut-outs from the production paper is a back ground. Another tie-up effected was with a phonograph shop, which furnished a machine and a "Kismet" record for use as a specialty number in the theatre for a week prior to the opening.

Reichenbach's Latest Stunt

"Outside the Law" Given Thorough Exploitation Campaign in Windy City

Simple but highly effective exploitation ideas were used by Harry Reichenbach in putting "Outside the Law" over in Chicago. In addition to the "You Are Outside the Law" 24-sheet teaser posters, and the Priscilla Dean Tam contest, which have been worked successfully in many cities, Reichenbach surprised Chicago with several novel newspaper advertisements and throwaways.

The stunt that gave Chicago a laugh was an ad printed in various Chicago papers announcing the coming of "Outside the Law" and bearing at the bottom, a half-completed cryptic inscription signed "Carl Laemmle." Readers were instructed to cut out the ad, soak it for two minutes in cold water, and then hold it to the light to read it.

After the reader had gone to this trouble, he didn't find the hieroglyphics any easier to read, but he did have it impressed up his mind that "Outside the Law" was opening at Barbee's Loop theatre the following Sunday.

Another stunt, worked by throwaways, was the printing of thousands of small heralds bearing series of incomplete letters on each side, so arranged, that, upon holding it to the light, the full announcement of "Outside the Law" could easily be read. More than 20,000 of these were distributed to Chicago school children.

The now famous Priscilla Dean Tam stunt was worked with great success in Chicago, despite early misgivings on account of the size of the town. Reichenbach sold the idea to the Herald and Examiner, which put a clever newspaper woman to work, impersonating the Tam Girl. The paper carried two-column display stories concerning the exploits of the Tam Girl for more than a week. Besides making her appearance in many prominent Chicago places and stores, she visited all the leading theatres, including the chain of moving picture theatres operated by the Ascher Brothers.

The Priscilla Dean Tam contest was augmented by many department store window displays containing models posed in the Priscilla Dean Tam.

The lobby and entrance display which helped to attract patrons to the Loop theatre consisted of a series of cut-outs of Priscilla Dean, the most striking of which was a six-foot cut-out of Miss Dean's head, mounted over the marquee and recognizable for several blocks.

Albany Book Store's Feature "Erstwhile Susan" Displays

One of the book stores in Albany, N. Y., has this week featured a collection of gowns worn by Constance Binney in "Erstwhile Susan" in connection with original illustrations from several leading motion picture magazines, as well as autographed photographs of film stars and several original motion picture scenarios. The exhibit attracted much interest, although Albany exhibitors failed to take advantage of its exploitation possibilities.

Illustrating the exploitation which C. G. Becker, manager of the Virginian theatre, Charlestown, W. Va., staged for his showing of "Dinty"

Used Hush, Instead of Silence on Young Picture

Dan S. Markowitz, manager of the Rialto, San Francisco, has discovered a new silencer for noisy movie patrons. The time-honored admonition, "Silence" has lost its force by repetition, Markowitz believes. A different word, answering the same purpose and carrying no offense to the patron, has been used more effectively. Accordingly, he hung up about ten new signs bearing the word "Hush" instead of "Silence" in conspicuous positions on the walls of the Rialto. They were lit up from behind and were illustrated by a silhouette of a beautiful face, with a finger vertically across its lips.

A noticeable quiet seemed to follow the placing of these signs, according to Markowitz. The inveterate pest, who reads the titles out loud, seemed to take the hint at last, and the conversational abilities of other offenders, which were a source of aggravation to those who came to enjoy the picture, were suppressed.

But this was only the initial benefit of the "Hush" signs. The real advantage came when "Hush" arrived at the Rialto for the week of Feb. 12. The patrons then realized that the joke was on them, and that the signs were merely advance announcements of the coming of the feature.

McDonald Book Marks Go Big

Manager Irving McDonald of the Fox theatre, Springfield, Mass., is a live wire in originating new and inexpensive stunts which help attract business to his theatre. One of McDonald's latest ideas was carried out for the engagement of one of Clyde Cook's feature comedies. A novelty book mark, on which was advertising relative to the comedy, was distributed about the city generally and especially to the local schools and at the library. The stunt went over so well that it was necessary to order more book marks from the printer before the demand died down.

Albany Exhibitor Giving "County Fair" Big Exploitation

In connection with "The County Fair," which has been booked for a week's run at the Clinton Square Theatre, in Albany, N. Y., Fred Elliott, owner of the house extended his advertising and exploitation not only to every business house and residence in the Capitol City, but to several adjoining counties. Mr. Elliott sent two men with placards to every city and town in the vicinity of Albany, while tags bearing the words, "Closed. Gone to the County Fair," were used on the doorknobs of Albany business houses and many of its residences. Lobby displays and frames were used at the theatre and several of the city's hotels.

Becker Holds "Dinty Day" Celebration

When "Dinty" played Charleston, W. Va., Manager C. G. Becker, of the Virginian theatre, through the co-operation of the Charleston Daily Mail, the city's leading newspaper, based his exploitation upon a special "Dinty Day."

Previous to the showing Manager Becker carefully arranged a most successful exploitation campaign in the planning of usual extensive publicity, a most attractive lobby display creating a Chinese atmosphere, and the first day of the showing a "Dinty Day" far Charleston newsboys.

An unusual interest was created throughout the entire number of the newsboys of the city by an offering of prizes to the boys selling the most copies of the Daily Mail. Each of these boys carried on his back a 11x14-inch cloth sign with various readings: "Dinty Day, I'm out for special 'Dinty' prize for selling the most Mails today, buy your Mail from me." They were also instructed in the sale of their papers to shout: "Dinty saves a girl from Chinatown, see it at the Virginian." Following the sale of this edition of the Daily Mail a parade was arranged to take place at 6:30 P. M., forming at the office of the Daily Mail, parading throughout the city's main thoroughfares and on to the Virginian theatre where they attended a special newsboys' performance. The boys were headed by a band and during the performance were otherwise given special attention. Prizes to the winners, five in number and ranging from $5 to $2 were distributed.

Naturally the Mail gave the newsboys and their show a lot of free publicity, much of which landed on the front page.

Here is another exploitation stunt which O. L. Meister, manager of the Whitehouse theatre of Milwaukee, used to aid in putting over "Colorado"

Floral Display Presents Attractive Exploitation Opportunity

Floral displays furnish the most attractive of all windows and for that reason are very much prized for exploitation tie-ups. With this axiom in mind, Harry Swift, exploitation representative for Paramount Pictures in the Albany territory, went direct to the leading florist for a display when he wanted to exploit "The Right to Love" for the Rialto theatre, Amsterdam, N. Y.

The florist decorated his window with ferns, shrubs and cut flowers. The artistic effect was heightened by two mirrors against the wall that seemed to show a double window display.

The topmost fern of the layout reached almost to the ceiling of the store. Wicker baskets and lattice work added to the artistry of the window. The tie-up was established in stills of Mae Murray in the leading role of the production and by posters, the largest of which read:

"You have The Right to Love all the flowers for their Wondrous Beauty and to see 'The Right to Love,' a Paramount picture, at the Rialto theatre."

The picture played a three-day run to more than average business.

Boy Scouts Get Business for "Doug's" Picture

The Boy Scouts of Fremont, Ohio, were royally entertained by the management of the Strand theatre of that town, during the showing of "The Mark of Zorro," which, besides creating a great deal of comment in the town resulted in the management obtaining much front page newspaper publicity.

Five troops of scouts with their Scout masters, in full regalia, paraded from their headquarters, through the main streets of the city to the theatre, carrying banners, inscribed "We are on our way to see 'Doug' at the Strand theatre." Many others joined in the march and the house did remarkable business.

Roche Has New Tie-up Idea

Dan Roche, Paramount exploitation representative in Chicago, concocted a good line that put over a tie-up for "The Inside of the Cup," playing at the Randolph theatre recently.

Having arranged a tie-up with the Buck & Raynor drug stores, which serve noon luncheons, Roche improvised the line which appeared on the posters in the windows and above the counters:

"Try Our Drip Coffee and Then See 'The Inside of the Cup,' a Paramount Picture at the Randolph Theatre. No Grounds for Complaint in Either Case."

The four drug stores are located in the loop district, at the corners of State and Madison, LaSalle and Madison, State and Randolph and State and Van Buren. To any one familiar with Chicago's business district any further word on the value of these locations is unnecessary.

Leader Theatre Has Fine Lobby Display

Simply taking window cards, one sheets and three sheets and making cut-outs of them, added materially to the attractiveness of the exterior exploitation that was done by the management of the Leader theatre, of Washington, D. C.

The entire front of his theatre was profusely decorated with small pictures of Douglas Fairbanks, in his character of "Zorro" in the "The Mark of Zorro." These small cut-outs having been made from the window card designs that were distributed by the Artists' branch office in Washington.

He also used a man disguised as a bandit to do antics about the theatre which attracted much attention and interested the school children in the picture distributing small advertising cards at all the school houses.

This "Mark of Zorro" lobby display is by the Leader theatre of Washington, D. C.

This shows the stage setting and the characters which took part, a specialty number at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, used as a prologue fo "Paying the Piper."

Lieber "Man, Woman, Marriage" Campaigr

Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Bases Exploitation on Appeal of Picture to Women

RALPH LIEBER, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, made the initial showing of "Man, Woman — Marriage" for the Middle West a social event, and adopted a novel policy in exploiting the picture, the keynote of which was "art."

From the start it was decided that the film held a greater appeal for women than for men, so the exploitation campaign was directed toward interesting the women of every social estate in the city. As direct work toward this end, Mr. Lieber supplemented an extensive advertising campaign on the billboards, in the newspapers through "throwaways" and in store windows, by sending letters to fifty different women's clubs and organizations and by issuing 100 engraved invitations to women picked from the Blue Book for the Monday evening showing. The letter to the clubs pointed out that "Man, Woman—Marriage" has a distinct and definite bearing on the advancement of women's clubs throughout the United States.

These letters were typed individually and addressed personally to the head of each organization. Many of the clubs promised to bring the matter to the attention of their membership at regular meetings and many did.

More than sixty of the women responded, some bringing their husbands. They were met at the door by Mr. Lieber, clad in evening clothes, and were seated in a specially reserved section.

The prominence of the guests lent a prestige to the picture which was very valuable. It started all the club women to talking. It got into the newspapers and started most of the other women in town to talking. Then they all started for the Circle apparently.

Although the invitation stunt was the outstanding feature of the exploitation, the picture was well "sold" to the public before this was staged.

The backbone of the advertising campaign rested upon the really wonderfully set of drawings which Leone Bracker prepared to exploit the picture. The Circle bought fifty billboards two weeks before the premiere and ran "copy" which consisted only of reproductions of these Bracker pictures. Not a line of explanation appeared with them. They were so striking as to form the most interesting form of teaser campaign. A week before the presentation the theatre was able, through the high class of the Bracker pictures reproduced on posters bearing a simple announcement that the film would be at the Circle the following week, to place them in approximately 100 downtown show windows which publicity seekers seldom have been able to break into heretofore. The posters were of such merit that one of the art stores in which they wer exhibited had a number of calls from cu tomers who desired to purchase them. Sev eral other stores sold theirs after the pul licity value had expired. Other show wi dows were filled with 300 stock windo cards, and the suburban district was co ered with 200 one sheets. Twenty thou sand throwaways were distributed.

The advance newspaper campaign wa started four days before the opening an was brought to a climax on Saturday, wit half pages in all the daily newspaper During this same period the outside ac vertising was tied up with the theatr through four large reproductions of th Bracker drawings on easels in the outc lobby. The posters attracted more atter tion than any ever displayed in the Circ lobby before, it was said.

Children Submit Drawings

Palace Theatre, New Haven, Conn., Puts Over Great Stunt for "Black Beauty"

THE opportunities that "Black Beauty" presents for exploitation have been fully exemplified by O. C. Edwards, manager of the Palace theatre, New Haven, Conn. A drawing contest, with the famous "Black Beauty" of the novel as a model to be used, was inaugurated that got the attention of the city's school children and most of their parents.

Mr. Edwards offered two separate sets of prizes—one for the boys and girls of the grammar schools and the other for the High School pupils. The prizes ranged from $25 down to $1, and totaled $100. The special requirements were that all drawings were free-hand and each signed by the contestant's teacher. The drawings were to be the child's conception of "Black Beauty," drawn in any position, in pencil, crayon, pen and ink, or in colors.

Showing two of the prize drawings which were submitted to the management of the Palace theatre, New Haven, Conn., as told in the story appearing above relative to the exploitation of "Black Beauty"

In sending the photograph (above) of the lobby of the Palace theatre showing some of the drawings submitted in the contest, Mr. Edwards wrote:

"In the photograph of the lobby something like 300 of these drawings are shown. You can derive an idea of the interest that the drawing contest aroused when I tell you that we received just a few short of 1,000 drawings; so many that it was utterly impossible to show them all. The best were selected for the big lobby exhibit.

"The drawings were put on exhibition two days before the engagement of 'Black Beauty' opened here at the Palace, and I have never seen anything in all my show experience that attracted the amount of attention that these drawings and the result of the contest succeeded in doing."

Sororio Gets Good Publicity with Unique Scheme

Co-operating with the newspapers and at the same time obtaining features for lobby displays and publicity matter is a policy that is being successfully followed by Thomas D. Sororio, general manager of the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass.

Recently the Boston American, which has the largest daily circulation of any afternoon paper in Lowell, conducted what they termed a "Loveliest Girl Contest," the purpose being to award three prizes to the girls selected as combining the most in intelligence and beauty of any in New England. Thousands of photographs were published and the contest aroused wide interest.

After the winners had been selected and the prizes awarded, Manager Sororio obtained large copies of the photographs of the three winners, and they provided the basis for one of the most interesting lobby displays that he has ever presented in his theatre. There had been so much talk by the public about the selection of the winners, and such a wide variance of opinion as to the relative merits of the trio picked, that when the three clear and large photographs were displayed, there was a general rush to view them.

The three photographs were displayed in large frames on a velvet background, offering a beautiful contrast.

Altoona, Pa., Theatre Gets Local Merchant's Aid

"If you fail to read these advertisements of Altoona's live merchants, you will pay 'The Penalty' of missing some real bargains."

That was the slogan, in large type, printed clear across two pages of the Tribune of Altoona, Pa., in the issues of Monday, Feb. 7, and Wednesday, Feb. 9, the first and last days of the showing of "The Penalty." The double-page truck was occupied with advertisements from a dozen of Altoona's most prominent merchants, with the Strand theatre's ad for "The Penalty" in the middle.

Real Mill Wheel Used in Prologue Number

Real water splashing over a revolving mill-wheel added to the effectiveness of a prologue which introduced "The Old Swimmin' Hole" at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre. Tons of aqua pura poured through a pipe back stage gurgled over the old-fashioned turning mill wheel, while the Mark Strand male quartet in bathing suits lolled in a make-believe pool. The quartet sang melodies incidental to such a setting, developing an atmosphere for the picture which was invaluable.

Reisenfeld Presenting Prologue for "Gilded Lily"

The Rivoli program this week has as one of its principal supplemental numbers a musical act under the title of " Melody Land," serving as a prologue for the current week's feature, " The Gilded Lily," that again demonstrates Managing Director Hugo Reisenfeld's versatility and genius.

" Melody Land " turns attention to Mr. Reisenfeld as the composer of the score to " Betty, Be Good," the Casino musical comedy success which had its debut in May last year. The little music and dance gem is made up of some of the brightest spots of " Betty, Be Good "—" Just Listen to My Heart Beat," " Tell Me, Daisy," " 'Tis in Vain," " Keep the Love Light Burning " and "You Must Be Good Girls," and is a complete musical comedy in abbreviated form.

Grace Foster, soprano, and Georges Trabert, tenor, assisted by the Rivoli ensemble, sing the popular melodies, and Vera Myers and Paul Oscard, dancers, assisted by a group of artists, appear in the number. A delightful stage setting of soft draperies and tinted lights makes a charming frame for the musical comedy gem.

Above is a cut showing the players appearing in " Melody Land " and illustrating the general character of the prologue, an especially appropriate number for "The Gilded Lily," a story of a chorus girl with many of its scenes laid in a cabaret.

Roche Has New Tie-up Idea

Reproduction of "black hand" herald used to advertise " Lone Hand Wilson" at the Bandbox theatre, Chicago

On the strength of this still, Roche, who had not yet seen the picture, went around to the territorial headquarters of the Victor Talking Machine Company and sold them on the idea of a window display tie-up throughout the Chicago territory.

The stills showing Arbuckle with the phonograph were used extensively and every Victor dealer in the district, under orders from the sectional district manager, arranged a window display on "Brewster's Millions" with the one still as the groundwork for the display. It got a lot of free advertising for exhibitors in the territory playing "Brewster's Millions" and demonstrated again the potency of paying attention to the small details.

"Black Hand" Herald Get Chicago's Attention

Lloyd Lewis, who is handling the pul licity on " Lone Hand Wilson " for Unit Photoplays, the Chicago distributors, entitled to credit for one of the clevere exhibition schemes put over in the Wind City recently and which helped to mak the week's run at the Bandbox theatre on of the most successful that house has en joyed.

Pedestrians throughout the loop distric of Chicago were startled one morning b finding scattered at different points, tucke under doorways and pasted on windows what seemed to be a message from th " Black Hand." A plain sheet of pape on which was imposed a facsimile of a hu man hand and a message in crude writing " Lone Hand Wilson," was the mean Lewis took to focus attention on the pic ture. With a printer's roller, some black ink and his own good right hand, Lewi prepared the Black Hand messages. One thousand sheets were run off, and late one evening scattered carelessly at various corners throughout the loop district, tucked under doors of big office buildings, left in lunchrooms, and, in fact, were placed at every point whereby they could be accidentally stumbled upon and seen.

The Police Department was kept busy one whole afternoon answering telephone calls from discoverers of a " Black Hand plot," and then gradually it began to dawn on the people of Chicago that, instead of a Mafia uprising, they were face to face with Lester Cuneo's first picture.

The stunt worked out perfectly, and with a minimum of expense and a little effort Lewis was enabled to make " Lone Hand Wilson " stand out vividly from the other pictures being shown in the loop district of Chicago.

Personal Letter Idea Gets Results for Jackson

The personal idea is being tried out with excellent success in the exploitation of pictures by Mervyn W. Jackson, director of publicity of the Strand theatre, San Francisco.

Three pictures recently exploited in this manner are "Love," "Lying Lips" and "The Texan."

For "Love" Mr. Jackson used an alleged personal letter from Miss Claum in which along with announcement of the initial showing of the picture in Frisco, etc., a request was made that those who saw it should write Miss Glaum giving her their opinion as to its merits.

For "Lying Lips" a letter from Thos. H. Ince along the lines of the trade announcement by Mr. Ince relative to his opinion that the picture is his greatest achievement, was used.

On "The Texan" the letter was signed by Mr. Jackson himself and contained many words of praise for the production.

The letters are sent out to the members of the Strand's selected mailing list and have brought excellent results.

Another Exhibitor Uses Plane to Deliver Films

Harry Blanchard, owner of the Capitol theatre, Davenport, Iowa, prides himself on having an aviator for a friend, so when playing "The Perfect Crime" he arranged for the Associated Producers' Chicago office to deliver a print of "The Perfect Crime" by aeroplane.

Naturally enough Mr. Blanchard wanted the film delivered the first day the picture was to be shown, so he and Goldman arranged for the aeroplane to leave Chicago at eleven o'clock in the morning, and promptly at that hour Mr. Tonte, booker at the Chicago office, with the film tucked safely under his arm, "kicked off" for Davenport, Iowa.

Mr. Blanchard already announced in his theatre and to the Davenport newspapers that the print would come by aeroplane, so when word was received that it had left Chicago everybody was on the "lookout," great crowds assembled in front of the theatre.

This "Adorable Savage" lobby display is the work of James B. Mason, manager of the California theatre, San Diego, Cal.

Schade's Plan for Exploiting "The Kid"

George Schade, owner and manager of the theatre which bears his name in Sandusky, Ohio, has revealed the stunt he is going to use to exploit "The Kid." This is his idea:

He is going to get a local youngster about four years old to impersonate Chaplin; cane, shoes, moustache, baggy trousers, etc. A photograph of the impersonator will be enlarged and placed in several of the most desirable display windows in Sandusky, about three weeks before the showing. The name of the youngster, and his parents, will comprise the only caption on the photo for the first eleven days.

Ten days before the opening of "The Kid," the caption will be changed to the announcement of the showing.

It is suggested that exhibitors secure as many photos as possible of small children imitating Chaplin. As a usual thing, parents will be glad to see the pictures of their children on display and a world of good human-interest advertising can be aroused through this system.

Utica Theatre Presents Prologue

A PROLOGUE of primeval Indian life was used in connection with the showing of "Behold My Wife," at the Avon theatre, Utica, N. Y.

With an appropriate scenic setting, Elsie Stevens, brought from New York for the role of an Indian girl, enacted the original prelude. The stage was first lighted to represent the hour before dawn, with Miss Stevens making her appearance from a tepee a part of the stage setting.

There followed a brief presentation of Indian costumes ranging from an exhibition of skill with bow and arrow to the lighting of the fire in the old-time custom by rubbing two pieces of wood together. In reality this was accomplished by deft manipulation of the electric lights, but so vivid was the impression that half of the patrons maintained that the girl on the stage had started the fire herself and one of the local papers actually described the prologue in this manner:

The scene came to a close as the Indian girl, after crooning redskin melodies over her breakfast, folded up the tepee and wandered off for another day's travel. The entire act only lasted ten minutes and when it was completed the audience evidenced its enthusiasm.

The scenic settings for the scene were especially worthy of note. Harry Swift, Paramount exploitation representative for the Albany territory, had arranged for the presence of Miss Stevens, and her ideas were followed out to a large degree in the arrangement of the stage. The forest atmosphere was reproduced by use of stage sets. The tepee occupied an elevated position by reason of specially constructed props forming ascending steps. The tripod from which the kettle swung, suspended over the fire, was located to the left.

"Behold My Wife" played an entire week at the Avon theatre. The prologue was so successful that it was duplicated when the picture was shown at Amsterdam, N. Y.

Artistic Prologue Presented at St. Paul

Manager Calvert's Presentation Number for "The Devil" in Detail

IN presenting "The Devil" at the Capitol theatre, St. Paul, no attempt was made to create a prologue for the picture from any of its scenes. Managing Director Calvert chose to precede the feature with a special stage setting, and the character of Mephistopheles for his soloist, who sang "Le veau d'or" (The Calf of Gold) from "Faust."

The opening of the velvets disclosed the set, masked in by a cut arch which formed the first drop. The second drop consisted of a cut window, draped, and the third drop served simply as a red backing for the set. The most important stage properties used in this number were a profile piece with flowers worked into the top of the panel to form a tapestry effect, and two large candles in profile. But one piece of furniture was used in this setting. It was a tall chair of simple design, draped in burnt orange velvet. Two half circle steps formed a pedestal at the bottom of the profile piece on which the soloist stood. The profile piece was painted blue and green and gold.

The first drop was stone gray, the second blue and gold and the third red. The candles were illuminated with small flame lamps which had been dipped in dark amber and red. One candle was placed at each side of the large profile piece, and dark green velvets were draped on each side from the profile piece to the candles.

In creating his lighting effects for this presentation, Mr. Calvert lighted the front piece with blue foots at full, lights up one-third and green up one-half. The set itself was lighted with two open arcs, blue left stage and two open arcs, violet, right stage. On a spot platform, left stage, were placed two arc spots in dark amber cut to flood the panel in the large profile piece and the soloist. A hanging spot in violet was placed directly above the soloist.

The illumination back of the cut window consisted of two open arcs, light red, left stage, and two open arcs, right stage, one of light red and the other of light amber. This portion of the lighting scheme shaded the third drop from dark red at the bottom to light red at the top. A border placed directly above the set was in dark blue full up. The ground cloth was blue.

Velvet curtains closed the number, which ran two minutes and ten seconds.

This feature of the program was but one of a series of artistic stage settings for musical numbers, which Mr. Calvert has been building from week to week for Finkelstein & Ruben, at the Capitol theatre, St. Paul.

The soloist used in connection with this number was Herbert S. Waterous, basso, who is under the direction of the Bendix Music Bureau, of New York City.

TERRITORIAL SALES AND PURCHASES

In the Independent Field

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Novel Exhibitor Aids for "Hope Diamond"

A new plan of direct aid to the states right buyer has been worked out by the Howells Sales Company in connection with their first release, a stirring fifteen-episode serial, "The Hope Diamond Mystery."

Plans have been made for an extensive campaign of trade paper advertising which will cover in every selling argument that will present the picture properly to the exhibitor.

This advertising will be designed in such a way that it will be available for the states right buyer to use in putting the picture over in his territory with the exhibitor.

Each of the plates used by the Howells Sales Company, Inc., in its trade paper campaign will be turned over to a stereotyper and plates and mats made from the original. These plates and mats will be available for the states right buyer mortised so that he can insert his own copy in the openings.

This is said to be the first time in the history of the business that such advertising service has been offered to the states rights buyer by which he gets the advantage of the high priced artists and high priced plates which the trade paper campaign calls for. This service will be supplied to states rights buyers free with the exception of the usual minor charge for stereotype plates and mats.

Jacquelin Film Making Comedies

Jacquelin Film Company, the latest producing unit to enter the Chicago field, is working on the third of a series of one-reel comedies of the better class, at the Reelcraft studios, Chicago, the first two pictures having been completed, according to Sales Manager W. H. Engleman.

Joey Marshall and Cecelia Jacques are being featured in these one-reelers, which are high class productions built around real life incidents, somewhat along the lines of the Drew comedies.

The policy of distribution will be announced at an early date by Sales Manager Engleman.

New Pinnacle Comedy Ready for Market

"The Ting Tong Man," the fifth of the series of Pinnacle Comedies starring Max Roberts, has left the cutting room and is now on its way to the Independent Films Association in Chicago for distribution on the state rights market.

A Timely Kineto Review

Central American War Increases Interest in Panamanian Subject

"PANAMA," a Kineto Review to be released by the National Exchanges all over the United States on March 21st, is believed to be an especially timely subject because of the military situation in that country. The newspapers these last few days have been full of the impending trouble between Panama and Costa Rica, and one of the first situations with which the new Secretary of State, Charles Evans Hughes, is dealing concerns Panama.

This Kineto Review begins with the ruins of the ancient city of Panama, founded in 1519. Passing the ruins with all its old stories of buccaneers, the audience is shown the ancient King's Bridge, where Columbus founded a colony in 1502. The pictures then shows the Leper Colony at Palo Seco—a dangerous visit for the photographer, but extremely interesting and safe for theatre audiences.

"Panama" also shows the late General Gorgas, who made the Isthmus the "healthiest place in the world," and a notable group of other dignitaries who attended a visit of the American fleet.

President Porras of Panama is seen boarding the U. S. S. Pennsylvania to greet Admiral Wilson and also Admiral Rodman. The erstwhile Secretary of the Navy, Josephus Daniels, and Gov. Stevens of California are seen calling on Admiral Rodman.

An especially interesting detail is a condensed picture showing the passage of the fleet through the Canal. The actual operation took nine hours; the pictorial version of it takes just sixty seconds.

C. B. C. Secures French Series for America

American distribution rights for a series of four big French dramatic pictures, have been secured by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. The first picture on this series, which is called "The Nightingale of Paris," is to be released shortly, it is announced.

These pictures are to be offered by C. B. C. to state right distributors, as a result of a belief on the part of Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn, of that company, that the barriers against foreign-made pictures have been swept away, and their value for the American market demonstrated beyond any doubt.

The four pictures which C. B. C. has secured are said to be French in every detail, with their locale laid in France, and are interpreted by one of the most noted French players.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the Kineto Company of America that all Kineto Reviews, which are being released through National Exchanges, Inc., will be issued with a complete and carefully worked out musical score. This is believed to be the first time in motion pictures that short subjects have been scored musically and it is looked upon as a disinct step forward and one which will prove popular with the exhibitor, who will be able to obtain the correct atmosphere for the presentation of his short subjects.

A novel scheme has been worked out by Kineto in regard to the manner in which the cue sheets will be issued. Instead of printing but one cue sheet, three will be made. The first is intended to be used by the largest theatres and is compiled for big orchestras. The second will be used in houses which have an orchestra of six or eight or ten pieces, and the third is compiled for such theatres which have only a piano or organ. In addition, Kineto has decided that instead of printing merely the name of the piece to be used it will describe the atmosphere which it is aimed to create, so that, should the suggested music be unavailable for an exhibitor, he may be able to find an appropriate substitute.

These scores are being prepared by Charles D. Isaacson, music editor of the New York "Globe" and the "Motion Pictures News." Scores on "Thrills," "The Emerald Isle," "Panama," and "The Holy City" will be sent to all of the National Exchanges, and scores on the remaining seven subjects which comprise the first series of Kineto Reviews, will follow.

Dominant Pictures Buy Group of Pictures

Jacques Kopfstein, general manager of Dominant Pictures, Inc., announces that his company has bought a group of productions made for the United States Amusement Co.

Included in the group are: "Think It Over," Cathrine Calvert and Richard Tucker; "When the Heart Calls," Frank Mills and Cathrine Calvert; "A Man and the Woman," Edith Haller; "The Mask of Virtue," Cathrine Calvert and Richard Tucker; "The Price of Her Soul," Naomi Childers and Wyndham Standing and the Joe Welsh classic," "The Peddler," with Joe Welsh and Cathrine Calvert.

Attractive Press Book for "Hearts Aflame"

An unusually attractive press book, according to an announcement from Clark-Cornelius Corporation has been prepared for their latest release, "Hearts Aflame," by C. J. Verhalen. This production is being released on the territorial plan and is in six reels, starring Jane Novak.

The tone of the production has been carried throughout the book, according to the statement and is in harmony with the quality of the production itself throughout. It is claimed to be replete with the sort of information that will be necessary to put the production over in a big way.

Aycie Pictures Formed in New York

The Aycie Pictures Corporation, a new concern headed by Aaron A. Corn, B. H. Bernstein and M. Lewis, has been formed to state right and manufacture motion pictures. The company will have offices in New York City.

The Sales Staff, headed by Jerome Lewis, have already reported territorial sales on the Spur Series of fourteen two-reel Western dramas, which are their initial releases.

Border Film to Make Two Reel Westerns

The Border Feature Film Corp., of Bisbee, Arizona, announce that they are starting production on a series of two-reel Western subjects, which will star Grant Merrill, who will be supported by Peggy Parkan. They state that they will use the towns of Tombstone, Charleston, Douglass and Bisbee, all situated near the Mexican border, as the locale for their Western stories.

THE following sales on the independent market have been reported during the week:

Franklyn Farnum series, "The Galloping Devil," "The Struggler," "The Fighting Stranger," "The Hunger of the Blood," "The Last Chance," and "The Raiders," (Canyon Pictures Corp.) to I. E. Chadwick, of the Merit Film Corp., for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

"Cowboy Jazz" and the Midget Comedies to the Merit Film Co., of Detroit for Michigan.

Sales Disprove Depression

J. J. Sameth Believes Number of Buyers Show Falsity of Reports

"THE best proof that there is no such thing as depression in the Independent field is evidenced by the number of sales made during the last week by independent producers," said Joseph Sameth, of the Forward Films Distributors, Inc. "In every section of the United States, exhibitors are crying for film but are demanding only those productions which have a box office value plus clean entertainment.

"A year ago it was common gossip that the state rights field was a 'dumping ground' for films which the larger producers were ashamed to market under their own trade names. What has happened during the past six months has convinced the independent merchant that this fallacy no longer exists, and nothing but features demanded by exhibitors and the paying public find their way through independent channels.

"The independent market is no longer a fly-by-night proposition, but on the contrary holds an enviable reputation in the motion picture trade of today. State rights exchanges, now that they have achieved this success, can maintain in only one way, and that is to give the exhibitor only first-class features at the lowest possible prices.

"I am immensely pleased," continued Mr. Sameth, "by the manner in which state rights buyers have purchased 'Hearts of the Range.' The executives of the Forward Film Distributors, Inc., have done everything within their power to create in the independent field a feeling of honesty. That the field has taken to this policy is further proven by the five sales made this week which were consummated on our say-so and not by screen examination. I hail 1921 as the banner year in the state rights field."

Neal Hart Film Nears End

"God's Gold" Said to Be Independent Films Star's Best Picture

ALL interior scenes of Neal Hart's newest five-reel production for Independent Films Association have been "shot" and the company left its studios in Hollywood this week for Balboa, Cal., where under the direction of Webster Cullison the final scenes of the production will be filmed.

Hart's latest production, "God's Gold," is described as a powerful and gripping story of the sea. The story, which is from the pen of Arthur Henry Gooden and adapted to the screen by the author, presents Neal Hart in the role of a sea captain.

"God's Gold," presents thrills and exciting situations galore, among which is the burning of two schooners off the coast of San Francisco; a fight between a gang of mutineers and savages, and many other incidents that for a time tend to obstruct the hero in his effort to save his sweetheart held captive in a bandit's nest. How he overcomes all obstacles and detetmines that God's real gold is the girl he rescues makes one of the most appealing, exciting and stimulating stories that Independent Films Association declares has ever been offered to state right buyers. "God's Gold" will be released about April 1.

The Hallroom Boys Comedies Are Being Featured in the Best Theatres in the World

They'll Go Over Bigger and Better Every Week Until They Are the Best Two-Reel Comedies in Your Theatre

Mr. Johnston, I agree with you

You certainly hit the nail square on the head in your editorial in your issue of The M. P. News of March 12th where you said—"The industry is in a state of transition today. Its machinery is being changed all around—to get away from volume production, and into the fewer and bigger attraction stage. Pictures—the better kind—are being made by complete and trained staffs of specialists. No ego—no alibi—no domination by any one individual. The exhibitor must be allowed to select for the public—and the distributor from the producer. All other methods are uneconomic. If one producer owned all the theatres and only his pictures were shown, motion pictures would quickly degenerate into unprogressive, unprofitable attractions. Why insist then that an exhibitor must book all of one producer's pictures?"

I have said that for years. I'm glad you printed it. It backs me up in my fight against monopolistic concerns who are attempting to swallow the whole industry; who are trying to corner the market. I have said it before and I repeat it here—fewer and better pictures, sold and booked on the open market, is the new force that's coming. The independent field is the infant giant that will soon grow into a colossus. Then big picture making will be on "the best man wins" basis. Then no producer will use as a club his good pictures to force exhibitors to take pictures they don't want, in order to get the good ones. When that day comes, and it is almost here, there will be merit to every picture and that's the basis on which I am now making my new pictures.

Other stars are beginning to see that monopoly means ruin to the industry. Several have told me that they will soon be producing and releasing their pictures independently. Then the industry will see pictures of merit, for independence will bring forth talent these stars never dreamed of. In all my career I have never produced pictures like "Hush" and my latest and most artistic success to be released shortly, "STRAIGHT FROM PARIS." I urge all exhibitors to view these productions on the screen so that I may prove my claim to bigger and better pictures and only five a year.

Clara Kimball Young

P. S. See "Hush" and you'll book it. See "STRAIGHT FROM PARIS" and you'll see my finest picture of years. Any Equity Franchise Holder will screen both pictures for you, or communicate with EQUITY PICTURES CORPORATION, Aeolian Hall, New York, and watch for my talk next week.

AN announcement of interest to the exhibitors and picture public will be forthcoming from the Independent Films Association within the next few days, according to word from the Independence City studios, Hollywood, Cal., this week, where, it is stated, Eddy Eckels, president and general manager of the Films Association, has practically closed negotiations with a prominent film producing company for a series of James Oliver Curwood stories.

"Life Mark" Is First Specialty Release

H. Slutzker, president of Specialty Photoplay, Inc., announces "The Life Mark," a five-reel society drama, as the initial state rights release of this company.

"The Life Mark" will be offered on the independent market at a low figure in order to fill the long felt want for good but cheap productions. Specialty Photoplay, Inc., expects to dispose of this quickly and then offer another feature of the same calibre as its second release.

Marguerite Clayton, featured in many productions by various companies, is starred in the "Life Mark," which is described as a romance of two continents. An excellent cast including Emory Johnson, Virginia Ware, Carl Stockdale and True Boardman lend good support to the production, which was supervised by Enoch von Pelt.

Kipling Exchanges Are Rapidly Expanding

Kipling Film Exchanges, Inc., are rapidly expanding their business activities, according to Richard Kipling, who was in Chicago last week where he purchased two features, "The Woman He Chose," and "Reckless Wives" for release in California.

Mr. Kipling announces that the Kipling Film Exchange in Portland is now being managed by Theodore Johnson, and that at Los Angeles by Ray Perry, who formerly was associated with Sol Lesser, and that within a few days a manager will be signed up who will have charge of the San Francisco exchange.

Mr. Kipling brought with him the prints of his new five-reel Western, featuring Carlyn Wagner, "The Battlin' Kid," and while in the East also plans to get new pictures for the Richard Kipling Enterprises.

"Thrills," Kineto Review, Well Received

"Thrills," the first Kineto Review released by the Kineto Company of America, Inc., through the National Exchanges, Inc., has been received most enthusiastically by the various branch exchanges, it is announced.

"The Emerald Isle," the second release of the Kineto Reviews, comes in very handy on account of the holidays in the second half of March. "The Emerald Isle" is described a particularly beautiful scenic of the Southern part of Ireland.

Federated Gets Hallrooms

First Release Through Federated to Be Issued Within Sixty Days

C. B. C. FILM SALES, of New York City, announce that their series of Hallroom Boy Comedies have been sold to Federated Film Exchanges, through whom they will be released in the future.

Hitherto Hallroom Boys Comedies have been distributed by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. The first release through Federated has not been definitely settled as yet, but it is said that it will probably take place within the next sixty days, and will probably be the ninth comedy on the series. This has not been titled yet. The deal covers future releases and will have no bearing on current releases.

Harry Cohn, who is personally producing these comedies on the Coast, states that he has made arrangements for the expenditure of all the money necessary to make Hallroom Boys Comedies the greatest two-reel comedies on the market. He has lined up some stories of an original and entertaining type, which, it is said, will prove proper vehicles for the exploitation of the talents of Sid Smith, who, because of his work in recent Hallroom Boys Comedies, has been pronounced one of the greatest stunt and comedy artists in pictures.

Mr. Smith has signed a long-term contract with Hallroom Boys photoplays, and has been insured for a large sum.

Attractive Posters for Billy West Series

The success of Billy West, the Joan comedian who is producing two-reel comedies for state right distribution, is said to be reaching sensational proportions. Among the reasons for the great number of bookings on the West two-reelers given by Joan, is the effectiveness of the posters used by exhibitors. That the original posters on the West comedies are largely responsible for the excellent box office income reported by exhibitors, was shown this week from a number of statements from state right distributors and exhibitors received by Joan.

One of the most effective accessories on the West comedies, reports stated, was the rotogravure window card, 22x24 inches in size. The one-sheets on each Billy West release are equally catchy. For West's first release, "Sweethearts," the illustration shows the Joan comedian and his leading lady, Ethelyn Gibson, in an embarrassed position on a park bench. For West's second release "Service Stripes," a prison scene is used. For "He's in Again," a reproduction of a particularly humorous scene of Billy West, benignly "under the influence," is shown. For the "Conquering Hero," the fourth and last Billy West release, a mock heroic pose of the hero dressed in coat of mail and spear in hand, with his foot solidly planted against the breast of his vanquished foe, while the heroine gazes admiringly at the victor, gives an effective idea of the laughs in the comedy.

Bill Wing Will Write for Independent Films

Bill Wing, who was formerly scenario editor for the Selig studios, has been engaged by Eddy Eckle, president and general manager of the Independent Films Association, to write screen stories for Neal Hart, Pete Morrison, Ray Gallagher and Max Roberts, who are producing pictures for the Eckles' enterprises.

Wing's latest effort is a five-reel gripping story, titled "The Phantom Riders," and is being considered as the next starring vehicle for Neal Hart.

Pre-Release Showings at Competing Houses

"The Woman in His House," the first Louis B. Mayer production to be directed by John M. Stahl, has established a precedent in Los Angeles exhibiting history, by being shown in two competing theatres on pre-release showing. The Ambassador Theatre, the Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser, opened with the feature on Feb. 12, and the following Wednesday it opened at the Mission theatre, managed by Harry David.

A circumstance in connection with the simultaneous showings that makes it a remarkable occurrence is that both the Ambassador and the Mission Theatres maintain a $1.50 top scale of prices. Reports from both the theatres covering the days both were running it—it concluded its run at the Ambassador on the night of Feb. 18th—declared that capacity houses had ruled at every performance.

Chatburn Enterprises Opening Offices

The T. W. Chatburn Enterprises are opening offices for the distribution of state rights pictures in Los Angeles and San Francisco.

The Los Angeles office is now open and is in charge of L. E. Kennedy who was formerly manager for Pathe and Fox in this district. This exchange expects to handle only the biggest of state rights pictures.

The first release will be about February 15, and will be B. A. Rolfe's super production, "Madonnas and Men."

"Welldon" Agency Perfects Staff

Catering as publicity, advertising and exploitation engineers, George L. Fecke and Miss Edith Gwynn, who have formed "Weldon," have perfected arrangements by which every phase of motion picture work can be carried out successfully by their experienced staff. Believing that the independent picture has at last reached a commanding position in the industry, "Welldon" will specialize on State Rights features.

Stage Play Is Confused with Lesser Picture

To correct a false impression current among exhibitors, Irving Lesser, of Los Angeles announces that he is producing a film version of "Peck's Bad Boy," and that he has under control all the works of the late George W. Peck. Jackie Coogan is starred in the production and Irving S. Cobb is now writing the titles.

The presentation of a three-act play of the same name by a stock company in the Middle West caused the confusion on the part of exhibitors, states Mr. Lesser.

It is likely that Mr. Lesser will arrange for another starring vehicle for Jackies Coogan to closely follow on the heels of the Peck film. Nothing definite has been done regarding a second Coogan production, however.

Hawaiian Prologue for "The Woman Untamed"

Ralph Gervers is producing an elaborate Hawaiian musical revue, which will be used as a prologue for Elmer J. McGovern's photoplay of the South Seas, "The Woman Untamed," which stars Doraldino. Well known dancers and stage players will be included in the cast and a Hawaiian quartet will furnish the music, which is now being written.

Aywon Will Have New Comedy Series

Nathan Hirsch, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, announces that he has just completed arrangements for the production and release of a series of fifteen two-reel comedies starring Jimmy Aubrey. Territory is already being contracted for and several state rights buyers have signed up.

Aywon will also release a series of Western features in five reels, to be known as the "Diamond Dot" series.

Attractive Titles in Callahan Comedies

Jimmy Callahan, star of the Callahan Comedies, which will be handled by Robert W. Priest, of the Film Market, Inc., is very enthusiastic over the comedy titles written for his first three two-reelers by Tom Bret. Mr. Callahan and Mr. Priest invited several "hard to please" friends to look at the comedies in a projection room and were elated over the fact that many laughs greeted the pictures.

Newspaper Reviewers Feature Short Reels

Increased attention is daily being given to short subjects in the Broadway houses by the reviewers in the New York papers. When "Nature's Handiwork," one of the Kineto Reviews, was shown at the Capitol theatre recently several papers featured this subject as being more interesting than the feature. The Kineto Reviews have been playing quite regularly at the Capitol and have been winning an enthusiastic response on the part of the audience.

CANYON PICTURES CORP. reports during the past week the sale of the series of six Franklyn Farnum pictures to T. E. Chadwick, of the Merit Film Corp., of New York, for the Greater New York and Northern New Jersey territory. This series includes "The Galloping Devil," "The Struggle," "The Fighting Stranger," "The Hunger of the Blood," "The Last Chance," and "The Riders."

Pacific Film Enlarging Coast Studios

With the expenditure of $40,000 on the new administration buildings, stage and work shops, the plant of the Pacific Film Company, of Culver City, California, will cover seventeen full city lots, making it one of the most commodious and complete studios in Southern California.

Work is being rushed on a new stage, 100 by 130 feet. The executive offices will be in the modern Spanish style of architecture, with a patio occupying the space in the center to afford light and ventilation for every room. This open space will be converted into an exotic garden, being planted to rare semi-tropical trees, shrubs and flowers. New dressing rooms will be included in the betterments, while ample provision will be made for the accommodation of laboratories, carpenter and paint shops, property rooms, etc.

The present production program of Manager John J. Hayes includes a single reel George Ovey comedy each week. These are filmed under the White Cap banner, with Arby Arly playing opposite the well-known laugh maker. With the completion of the new buildings at the studios, five-reel features will be added to the output. The administration building will front on Venice Blvd.

George Kleine Produces Howell Serial

The release of "The Hope Diamond Mystery," the fifteen-episode serial being distributed on the states rights market by the Howells Sales Company, marks the re-entrance of George Kleine into active participation into the affairs of the motion picture industry again. George Kleine was one of the earliest and most successful of the pioneers of the business and has been responsible for some of the greatest successes in the history of the screen.

The Howells Sales Company is so enthusiastic over the exploitation possibilities of "The Hope Diamond Mystery," the fifteen-episode serial which they are distributing on the states rights market, that they have issued a challenge to the entire industry.

They are making the statement in their trade paper advertising on this picture that this serial has greater exploitation possibilities than any other picture ever made and calling on the states rights buyer to make them prove the assertion.

Record Publicity for Star

A RECEPTION from press and public that has seldom if ever, been accorded other screen stars, was given Clara Kimball Young, the Equity star on her visit to Nashville, Louisville, Tulsa and Oklahoma City last week. Newspapers confessed that Miss Young broke all records for publicity and popularity in their respective cities. Nothing of its kind had ever been seen before. Even as much as a week before her arrival, the press heralded her coming from front-page headlines. Mayors, Governors, Military and Civic officials, the shining lights of society hastened to extend their courtesies to their guest.

Leaving Dallas she boarded the train for Nashville. As the party approached the suburbs of the city, they found a notable delegation of city officials awaiting them with a special train. Arriving in the Tennessee capital a multitude greeted the Equity star. Not before Miss Young made a fitting speech of acknowledgement of their reception was she allowed to proceed to her hotel. Here she began a round of honors that did not end till the next evening, when she left for Louisville. As in Houston, San Antonio and Dallas, the Mayor presented the star with gold keys to the city, and the ceremony was followed by an address by Miss Young from the balcony of her suite to the mobs below in which she attacked censorship of the movies. Luncheons by the Rotary Club, Kiwanis, Knights of Pythias and other organizations followed. Miss Young made a tour of the principal industrial plants and shops of the town—all of which was faithfully recorded in the daily press. As in her previous visits, every opinion the Equity star pronounced, whether on politics or fashions, was 'swallowed whole' by the dailies. When she made her personal appearance at the Old Mill theatre in the evening, it was necessary to use the police reserves to hold the mobs.

An even greater ovation awaited Miss Young in Louisville. Front pages of the Post, Courier and Herald announced her arrival and printed photographs. A battery of staff cameramen pursued her every motion. Reporters were lined up at the Hotel Snellbach, where her comments on her opinion of the city and her views on motion-pictures were eagerly recorded. After being presented with the keys of the city by Mayor Briggs, she was the guest of the Kiwanians, where she was voted an honorary member.

A special train was ordered when Miss Young left Louisville for Tulsa, Oklahoma, her next stop. Meanwhile, the City of Tulsa was abustle with preparations for their visitor. Mayor Evans arranged with the Passenger Agent of the Frisco lines to post placards in trains, on platforms and generally throughout the city to the effect that the public should turn out in royal fashion to meet Clara Kimball Young at the station.

The climax of her reception came a half hour later, when one of the most effective "stunts" ever manipulated was performed. Milton Crandall, the Equity exploitation director and press agent of Miss Young on her tour, conceived the idea of having a public demonstration in honor of Miss Young staged at the office of the Tulsa World. A platform was set in front of the center window of the building and Miss Young stepped out of the window on to the platform. The novelty of her appearance was the talk of the town. As the public reception took place in front of the newspaper building, naturally that paper was filled with headlines of Miss Young's fame. A throng conservatively estimated at 7,000 greeted the appearance of Miss Young before the World office.

Mayor Evans presented her the keys of the city. The crowd had been forming for two hours before Miss Young's emergence from the window to the platform. Special police were detailed for the occasion. Her exit from the window on to the platform was electrifying. A front page of the World impeded her exit, so that Miss Young had to burst through the front page of the World to get to the platform.

In the meantime, Crandall had staged a gala reception for the Equity star in Oklahoma City, her next destination. Announcements and placards posted in all stores and bill-boards called upon the public to give Miss Young the reception of her life. A lavish reception was arranged at the State Capitol, where Governor Stephenson, Secretary of State Morris and the Legislature were to welcome her.

At the first opportunity the reporters besieged the Equity star and quoted her at length on matters feminine. In the afternoon a reception was given Miss Young in the Huckins Hotel by the ladies of the capital, and in the evening Miss Young spoke effectively against iron-clad censorship before the American Legion, Y. M. C. A., and other organizations. She was the guest of the most exclusive stores of Oklahoma City the next day, and columns of announcements by various shops asked patrons to come and greet Miss Young in their establishments.

To date, Equity states, the amount of publicity, both newspaper and mouth-to-mouth, that Clara Kimball Young has received in the two weeks of her tour of the Southwest is more than any other star ever received from a personal appearance in the same territory.

Return to Normalcy Is Seen

Glutting of Market Reacts for Good, Says Manheimer

FOLLOWING the recent announcements of the J. W. Film Corporation anent the launching of their first big special, "Every Man's Price," in which Grace Darling has the leading role, E. S. Manheimer, who is handling the distribution of the J. W. series of specials, states many letters of congratulations on his policy of big independent, dignified productions for the state rights market at this particular time, were received.

According to a statement by Mr. Manheimer, he believes that the time was never more propitious for the launching of high class drama than at present. "In the matter of getting our productions ready for the market and setting the time for release," says Mr. Manheimer, "I have pursued a 'watchful waiting' policy. For the past several months, as we all know, conditions in the film industry, as in all other lines of business, have been rather chaotic, with the result that the downward trend of prices brought to light a number of inferior pictures that had been laying idle in the vaults for many months. The owners of these pictures saw the opportunity to cash in on them by taking advantage of the existing unstable condition, on the assumption that ridiculously low prices and attractive terms would blind the independent exchangemen as to the inferiority of the productions offered.

"The result was that the market during the past six months has been cluttered with all sorts of productions and all sorts of propositions, which put the independent exchangeman in the position to dictate his own terms.

"Instead of stimulating business and giving the independent exchangeman the opportunity to keep his exchanges going without any heavy outlay of actual money, as claimed by those who were ridding their shelves of the accumulation of years, it reacted with the force of dynamite and the state rights man found himself in the unhappy position of having a lot of worthless junk in his exchange that he could not move. These one-picture distributors simply passed the buck on to the independent exchange and took the chance of getting a percentage on whatever bookings the state rights man was able to put over on the unsuspecting exhibitors.

"However, this procedure was not altogether an ill wind, for it cleaned up the market of the fly-by-night pictures and made a clear road for the bona-fide better productions of the legitimate producers and distributors.

"Being firmly convinced that the trend of the times portend to an immediate return of normalcy in the film industry, it is with all confidence in the astuteness of the live state rights buyers that I am offering them the first of the J. W. series of genuine specials, "Every Man's Price," a Burton King production, which will be followed at definite intervals by other productions of equal power, dignity and box-office strength."

Al Christie's Fine Cast

Well Known Players to Appear in New Robertson-Cole Comedy

IN "See My Lawyer," the new super-special starring T. Roy Barnes to be released by Robertson-Cole, Al Christie, the producer it is said, has selected a cast of unusual excellence.

T. Roy Barnes, who stars in the role of "Bob" Gardner, has been a comedian on the legitimate stage for more than five years. One of his early stage successes was the interpretation of the same role in which he now appears in "See My Lawyer." Grace Darmond, who plays opposite Mr. Barnes, has appeared on the screen in dramatic roles. She was starred in the Robertson-Cole release "What Every Woman Wants." Her first venture into the realm of comedy was in "So Long Letty."

Lloyd Whitlock is seen in a sympathetic role. Mr. Whitlock played in "One Man in a Million," the George Beban feature. The pretty brunette, Jean Acker, has one of the principal roles. Miss Acker played with Sessue Hayakawa in "An Arabian Knight" and later appeared in other productions.

J. P. Lockney, who plays the role of an inventor, is a veteran of the stage and screen. He has appeared in a number of Robertson-Cole productions.

For more than thirty years Bert Woodruff, who plays the role of the eccentric alienist, has been trouping all over the world. He began his theatrical career playing juvenile leads for David Belasco.

Ogden Crane, also in the cast, has been before the camera for six years and for fifteen years on the legitimate stage.

Indians to Exploit Film

Chiefs Who Appeared in Neilan Production Will Tour Country

ARRANGEMENTS for what is expected to prove one of the biggest national publicity stunts in connection with the presentation of a photoplay are now under way for Marshall Neilan's next release through Associated First National Pictures, "Bob Hampton of Placer."

As a special advance ballyhoo for the film the Publicity Department of First National in association with Pete Smith of Marshal Neilan productions is arranging for the appearance in twenty-one first run cities throughout the country of various famous Chiefs of the Blackfeet Indians who took part in the screen presentation of the Randall Parrish book at Glacier Park, Montana.

There will be four complete troupes comprising six well known Indians each in charge of a special publicity man. These units are at the disposal of the exhibitors and will take part in many different publicity stunts that will prove exceptional advance advertising for the film.

Present plans include not only the use of the Indians for advance stunts three days before the picture opens but also the appearance of these braves in special prologues for the picture during the initial presentations in each of the twenty-one cities.

The four companies of Indians will be divided so as to appear in different parts of the country as follows: Company Number One will cover St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and Milwaukee; Company number two, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha and Des Moines; Company number three, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati, and Detroit; Company number four, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, D. C., Brooklyn and Newark.

Each publicity man in charge of one of the Indian troupes will cooperate with exhibitor in putting over special stunts to act as advance ballyhoo for the film.

Ince Launches Test for His "Find of 1921"

Thomas H. Ince has launched a competition in several leading cities of the United States for the purpose of determining which lady of the land is to be the "Ince Find of 1921." Mr. Ince, it is stated, has selected fifty-two representative cities of the country in which he will conduct the competition at some future date. It has already been tried out in Atlanta, Ga., in a tie-up between the Criterion theatre of that city and the Atlanta Constitution. Girls between the ages of 16 and 30 residing in the state of Georgia were requested to send in their photos to the Criterion management. A board of judges, consisting of prominent citizens of Atlanta, selected five of the photos sent in. The candidates selected are to be given free screen tests, the prints of which are to be sent to Mr. Ince. When the test prints from the other sections of the country, in which the competition is to be tried out, are forwarded and compared by Mr. Ince and his advisers, the final selection will be made. A report from the Associated Producers' headquarters declares that much newspaper space has already been secured by the competition and that additional newspapers are joining every day.

Fox Special Arrives From West Coast

From Fox New York headquarters comes word that the film of that firm's production, "Queen of Sheba," has at last arrived from the West Coast studios, and after a private showing of the big subject, Fox officials are of the opinion that they have the greatest screen spectacle ever produced.

It took the labor of thirty-five hundred people to adapt the great story to the screen. In addition to these, there were concerned in its production 15 principals and a ballet of 100 dancers. The horses number 300 and camels 50, while 31 chariots and 150 tents figured largely in the making of the great picture. The story was written by Virginia Tracy, the well-known short-story writer.

The direction of the spectacle was entrusted to J. Gordon Edwards, who directed "Cleopatra" and "Salome" for Fox.

ROBERTSON-COLE announces that it has just published an unusually attractive campaign book for its Pauline Frederick starring production, "The Mistress of Shenstone," which is ready for release. On the cover are shown Miss Frederick and Roy Stewart, who plays the leading male role in the picture. This front cover can be used by the exhibitor in his lobby display. The second page shows a set of ten lobby photos.

There are two pages of exploitation suggestions, including information on the extensive tie-up arranged with Grosset and Dunlap, the New York publishing house. Pictures of the supporting cast, the musical setting for the picture, items of interest about the story, cast and author, display ads, catch-lines and a list of accessories are also included in the press-book.

BEGINNING with the Strand theatre, New York City, at 7.40 P. M., and ending with the Majestic theatre, on 185th Street, at 10 P. M., the Pathe News placed a print of its "Inauguration Special" into virtually every motion-picture theatre of prominence in Brooklyn, Jersey City and Newark, N. J., on the night President Harding was sworn in at Washington. This fact was further augmented by the fact that the Pathe News was the only reel to show the inauguration in Chicago on the Sunday following, according to a statement from the Pathe headquarters, which further declares that the reel reached intermediate points, including Cleveland and Cincinnati, hours before any other reel.

By rushing the negatives from Washington to Jersey City by aeroplane, and then using automobiles in distributing the prints to theatres in New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City, the Pathe News was enabled to make its rapid time.

Following receipt of the Pathe News special by the Strand theatre at 7.40, a print arrived at the Rialto at 7.50, and at the Capitol theatre at 7.58. The Brooklyn Strand received its copy at 8.18, the Academy of Music, Jersey City, at 7.45; the Newark, Newark, N. J., at 8.40; Goodwin, Newark, 8.50, and the Brandford, Newark, at 8.57.

Samuel Rothafel, managing director of the Capitol, sent the following letter to the editor:

"I beg to acknowledge the fact that the pictures of the Inauguration

Has Full Views on B'way Evening of March 4th arrived at the Capitol at 7.58 Friday evening, nearly two hours ahead of the next release which in itself is quite an achievement, and I congratulate you upon your enterprise."

Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand, wrote in the same vein.

"Owing to a heavy snowstorm Saturday morning, Pathe News was prevented from placing its Inauguration Special in Cleveland and Cincinnati that afternoon. An aeroplane bearing 100 copies of the Pathe News special, left Jersey City at 2 o'clock Saturday morning, bound for Cleveland and Chicago. The plane also carried prints for the Far West. It was Mr. Cohen's intention to get a print into San Francisco by Monday, but the snowstorm which drove his plane down half way to Cleveland made this impossible. However, the prints did reach Chicago, Sunday, and San Francisco should have received its copies Tuesday evening, at the latest, which would set a record for speed in film distribution.

Mr. Cohen made elaborate plans for covering the inauguration. He had five cameramen on the job, and Al Richard, his assistant. Mr. Cohen chartered an aeroplane, to carry one set of negatives from Washington to the Pathe News laboratory in Jersey City. Richard's job was to assemble another set of negatives and rush it to the mail plane, which left directly across from Washington in Maryland.

President Harding took his oath at 1.25, and twenty minutes later Cohen was at Bolling Field, ready to start for West Side Park, Jersey City. Richard was heading for the mail plane station, where the start was to be at two o'clock.

The editor's machine got away perfectly, but while still over Washington developed engine trouble, and made a forced landing. Again it started, only to be forced down. Nearly an hour and a half was thus lost, so that the mail plane got away before Cohen's pilot finally got started.

Pathe had a special messenger waiting at Heller Field, Newark, where the mail plane landed. He had a Post Office permit to obtain the Pathe negative immediately. He was rushed from Newark to Jersey City by speedy automobile and arrived there five minutes before Cohen landed at West Side Park.

This was before five o'clock. At 7.10, the first print was ready, and was started by special messenger, in a taxicab, for New York.

The other prints for the big Broadway houses were started at intervals of a few minutes.

By two o'clock Saturday morning, more than 100 prints were ready for the special plane, which would have gotten into Cleveland Saturday forenoon, had it not been Beach, Cal.

"Outside the Law" Going Big

Reports Tell of Record Breaking Box-Office Returns

REPORTS from Barbee's Loop theatre, where "Outside the Law" recently had its Chicago premier, bring to light the fact that Universal-Jewel production, starring Priscilla Dean, broke all previous box-office records at that theatre. William S. Barbee, manager of the theatre, continued the show until after midnight, in order to take care of his first day's crowds.

Similar reports have been received at the Universal home-office concerning the opening of "Outside the Law" in other cities. H. M. Rouda, manager of Asher's Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, wired to Universal praising the picture highly and making it known that the Milwaukee opening had to turn as many away as could be accommodated in the theatre. The week's run was characterized as exceptional, despite unusually strong opposition.

In Montreal, the management of the Holman theatre had to call the police to restore order, it is stated, so insistent were those pushing their way to the box-office. The theatre filled up in less than an hour, men and women almost fighting to reach the entrance, the management of that theatre said in a telegram to Universal. The S. O. R. sign also called out for succeeding days, he asserted.

Mr. Sam Harding, manager of the Liberty theatre, Kansas City, Mo., also sent word that the Priscilla Dean picture has established new records for him. He characterized the picture, as the most wonderful melodrama he had ever played, and as a great money maker.

The Rivoli theatre, Portland, Ore., established a precedent with "Outside the Law," and for the first time in its history, held a picture over for the second week. Dave Brill, manager of the Portland office of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has reported record breaking showings in five other towns in that territory.

Another theatre which is said to have had exceptional success with the Dean picture, is the Standard theatre, in Cleveland. In that city, "Outside the Law" had to buck unusual opposition, including "Forbidden Fruit," "The Love Light," "The Country Fair," "The Truth About Husbands," and "Way Down East."

Among other theatres which have reported unusual success with the Tod Browning-Priscilla Dean picture are the Bijou theatre, Racine, Wis., where Manager Owen McKivett lauds the picture as the biggest production of the year; the Ellanay theatre, El Paso, Tex., where the manager broke records despite increased admission; the Wigwam theatre, Reno, Nev., which had its biggest week in fourteen years; the Laughlin theatre, Long Beach, Cal.

Book Lists Paramount Films

Outlines Production Plans for Coming Year and Half

TO enable Paramount exhibitors to show their patrons what attractions they can expect at their favorite theatres for the next year, the advertising department of Paramount Pictures this week issued a strikingly illustrated booklet of sixteen pages outlining the company's production plans for the next eighteen months. Embracing the names of some of the world's famous authors, who are now writing directly for Paramount, as well as the names of the stars and directors who dominate Paramount Pictures, the booklet furnishes exhibitors material which will enable them to talk about attractions which they will book for several months to come.

The booklet not only details the pictures to be released by Paramount up to September 1, but also gives an extensive description of most of the big specials to be included on the Paramount schedule for next season.

Notable among the productions listed for the year commencing in September is "The End of the World," a mammoth masterpiece, many of the scenes of which are laid in Shanghai. This picture will mark the initial appearance of Betty Compson of "The Miracle Man" fame, as a star under the Paramount banner as the result of a five year contract which this chic actress recently signed with the organization.

Among the other productions promised are: "The Affairs of Anatol" which Cecil B. DeMille has just completed; "Peter Pan," Sir J. M. Barrie's most notable play; "Montmarte," a vivid, spectacular drama of the French capital; "Laurels and the Lady," by Leonard Merrick, which will be produced as another Cecil B. De Mille super special; "The Great Impersonation," from E. Phillips Oppenheim, which Director George Melford will contribute to the Paramount program; "Experience," the film version of the famous stage play directed by George Fitzmaurice in which Richard Barthelmess will play the leading role of "Youth"; "The Wanderer" from the stupendous stage production of the same name; "Ladies Must Live," the second Paramount picture directed by George Loane Tucker, who made "The Miracle Man"; "Peter Ibbetson" immortalized on the stage by the artistry of the two Barrymores; "Is Matrimony a Failure," David Belasco's greatest stage farce given adequate treatment for the screen; and "Bella Donna" adapted from Robert Hichens gripping story.

The list of specials on the Paramount schedule as revealed by the above compilation, is supplemented by further productions which make up the releases, in part, for the coming year. These include such offerings as: "Back Pay" from Fannie Hurst's story; "The Shulamite," adapted from Edward Knoblock's drama; "Everything for Sale," an original story by Hector Turnbull; "Uneasy Virtue," in which Gloria Swanson will be starred; "The Bride's Play," a Cosmopolitan production of stupendous beauty; "Amos Judd," the psychic melodrama by the late John Ames Williams, former editor of "Life"; "The Lifted Veil," an adaptation from the English playwright Henry Arthur Jones; "The Blue Room" from the story by Cosmo Hamilton; "The Conquest of Canaan," Booth Tarkington's famous novel in pictures with Thomas Meighan in the stellar role; "The Hell Diggers," a picture starring Wallace Reid; "Memories" from an original story by Edward Knoblock; "Cappy Ricks," Peter Kyne's lovable character in pictures; "Gasoline Gus," a comedy in which Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle will star; "The Trouble with Women," an adaptation of the humorous Lucien Cary story in the Saturday Evening Post; "Vendetta," Marie Corelli's greatest novel the cast for which will be a revelation; and "You Can't Fool Your Wife," by Hector Turnbull for a George Melford production.

William Nigh Finishes Dramatic Features

William Nigh, who has earned the reputation of directing pictures with a highly human and intensely dramatic appeal, this week completed his latest production at the Selznick studios in Fort Lee, N. J., made under the working title, "Why Girls Leave Home." The story is an original one written by Nigh himself, who always prepares the working scripts of the productions on which the handles the megaphone.

William Nigh is noted as a director of big, wholesome human interest pictures, and he has also made several big spectacular productions. Picture play-goers will recall his careful direction on the picture based on Ambassador Gerard's famous story, "My Four Years in Germany." Among the most notable pictures which he has directed are "Notorious Gallagher," "The Yellow Streak" and "The Fighting Roosevelts."

Playing the stellar role in the picture just completed is dainty Maurine Powers. The story was written by Mr. Nigh with Miss Powers especially in mind, and it was the unanimous opinion of all who saw her work that her role will prove a distinct sensation, when the picture is released. Mr. Nigh is already at work on the scenario of his next picture in which Miss Powers will be starred.

Increased Interest in Hudson Bay Pictures

Coming of milder weather has stimulated the interest in the four single-reel pictures forming its Hudson Bay Travel series, according to an announcement from Educational. The third of these pictures is on the March schedule, and the fourth is still to be released. These pictures were made by Educational's own expedition with the fullest cooperation of the Hudson Bay Company.

"A Tale of the Fur North" was the first of these, followed by "Hides and Go Seek" and "Its a Great Life—" which vividly portrays life in the arctic and incidentally shows the vicissitudes of the camera man. The fourth of the series, to be released in April is "An Esquimotion Picture."

New House Book Educational Releases

In Chicago the Tivoli, the new Balaban and Katz theatre which has just opened is playing both comedies and scenics for Educational. S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Ambassador, the new trial theatre in Los Angeles, which is devoting its entire attention to premier showings only, and for a single week, has adopted Kinograms as its news weekly and has featured Educational scenes practically every week since its opening.

In Atlanta the new Howard is making a specialty of Christie Comedies and other subjects. The State in Minneapolis, which recently opened its doors, is playing a greater portion of both the comedies and scenics. In Cleveland where Loew's Park and Loew's State theatres recently opened, the first run of all the comedies and scenics are booked by the Loew theatres and have long been a feature in the older houses. Many of them have been transferred to the two new theatres.

The Stanley theatre, Philadelphia, is using some Educational product each week. According to Educational at least six new theatres which will be opened within as many weeks will have its product on the opening bills.

Edwin Carewe Finishes New Stewart Vehicle

Under the direction of Edwin Carewe, the final scenes were completed for Anita Stewart's latest Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction, "The Invisible Fear." The story, by Hampton Del Ruth, was prepared in scenario form by Madge Tyrone. Supporting Miss Stewart are Walter McGrail and Alan Forrest.

Eschmann Is Promoted by Pathe Exchanges

Pathe has just announced that Edward A. Eschmann has been promoted from feature sales manager to assistant to Director of Exchanges Elmer Pearson. Mr. Eschmann has been with Pathe for three years, having joined the organization in 1919 as branch manager in Chicago. A year later he was appointed to the office of feature sales manager.

Associated Gets Mae Murray

Contract Signed for Release of Four Big Specials

IT is announced from the offices of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., that contracts have been signed for the release of four big special productions featuring Mae Murray and directed by Robert Z. Leonard. This is the first production announcement from Associated since its reorganization with Mr. Arthur S. Kane as chairman of the executive committee and is understood to be the forerunner of a series of important developments in that field.

A combination of Western capitalists acting in association with Leyford Gates, the author of several popular novels, and Boyd Gurley, well known for several years as a publisher of newspapers in the West and the Middle West, will begin motion picture production on a large scale with the series of big specials with Miss Murray.

Work on the first picture will begin immediately in the Amsterdam Studios in New York City, and all of the pictures will be made in the East, according to present plans. Four stories by prominent authors are under consideration for adaptation to pictures at the present time, and it is likely that the first picture directed by Mr. Leonard and in which the vivacious Mae Murray will be seen will be the work of one of the best known woman authors in the country, according to the statement issued.

Mae Murray, four of whose coming special productions will be released by Associated Exhibitors, according to the terms of a new contract just entered into. Robert Z. Leonard will direct her

"The recent pictures in which Miss Murray has appeared have been so successful, we feel those now to be made along the same lines of big production directed by one noted in his art will be great cards for Associated Exhibitors," stated Arthur S. Kane, chairman of the executive committee of Associated, after signing contracts with Mr. Gates. "We are confident that the combination of Miss Murray and Mr. Leonard in a production such as is assured under the present producing arrangement will be of great value to the exhibitors the country over."

Mr. Gates, who is himself the author of "Pirates of Penitent Bay," "Within the Seventh Veil," "David Garrick, Jr.," and several other novels and plays, is personally selecting the story from which the initial picture is to be made. He feels that Miss Murray has not yet had the strength of her ability stressed, and he believes her first picture for Associated Exhibitors will be even more suited to her talents.

"We have watched the growing popularity of Mae Murray and Robert Leonard and her convincing success in 'Idols of Clay,' 'On with the Dance' and her latest 'The Gilded Lily,' finally impelled us to seek her services for our first production," Mr. Gates stated. "We found it necessary to assure her beyond question of the quality of the pictures in which she will appear, and she is now enthusiastic in her certainty of splendid results.

"We feel that in Mae Murray we have one of the biggest box office drawing cards of the day in her type of big production and in Mr. Leonard we have one of the ablest directors. We are determined that the stories will match the ability of both and we confidently look forward to an exceptional series of pictures."

Ass'd Producers in Big Deal

Will Distribute Four Frothingham Films Within Year

F. B. WARREN, general manager of distribution of Associated Producers, Inc., announces the signing of a contract with J. L. Frothingham, of Los Angeles and New York, for the distribution by A. P. of four J. L. Frothingham Productions within a period of a year, the first release to be made a month hence in April. This contract was closed in New York last week by Mr. Frothingham and Mr. Warren and the first production is now announced to be Peter B. Kyne's highly popular story, "The Ten Dollar Raise," with an all-star cast, including Marguerite de la Motte and Pat O'Malley.

The J. L. Frothingham productions to be released through Associated Producers are to be directed by Edward Sloman, reputed to be a careful director with a fine sense of continuity and dramatic intensity. One of the best productions of the past two years, Stewart Edward White's famous story of the Dakotas, "The Westerners," was the work of Mr. Sloman, and other widely known and popular productions he has directed include "The Sage Brushers," "Mutiny of the Elsinore," "Burning Daylight" and "Blind Youth."

Mr. Frothinghams productions for A. P. release will be made, as have his past productions for other organizations, at the Brunton studios in Los Angeles, and will have at their command all of the fine facilities that Robert Brunton has created at his big California plant.

Tentatively April 24 has been set as the release date for "The Ten Dollar Raise," and a heavy preliminary exploitation campaign will be made in behalf of this initial production for the big A. P. distribution. The Frothingham productions will be sold by Associated Producers either under a four-picture unit contract or singly on a spot-booking basis as the country's exhibitors themselves desire. The contract executed with Mr. Frothingham is similar to the one recently signed with King Vidor for the distribution by A. P. of four King Vidor special productions within a period of a year.

J. L. Frothingham, who will distribute four productions a year through Associated Producers

"Our contract with these two producers is in keeping with the announcement made when Associated Producers was formed a year ago," said Mr. Warren. "We said at that time that this organization was open and accessible to producers of fine standards and determined output and that it would provide such producers with a marketing system that would be kept clear of entangling alliances."

Mr. Frothingham's first production, "The Ten Dollar Raise,' has been in production for six or seven weeks and the camera work on it was completed March 1.

Peerless to Represent Pioneer in Canada

Another increase in its distributing work is recorded by the Pioneer Film Corporation through the consummation of arrangements with the Peerless Films, Ltd., which enterprise will represent pioneer in Western Canada.

The Peerless Films, Ltd., has its main office in Winnipeg and also operates in Calgary and Vancouver. Pioneer is now represented in six offices in the Dominion of Canada.

Film Featured in Celebration

GREENFIELD, Indiana, birthplace and former home of James Whitcomb Riley, declared a two-days' municipal holiday during the showing of Charles Ray's production of the Hoosier poet's best known work, "The Old Swimmin' Hole," at the Why Not theatre there on March 7 and 8. Parades of children, with appropriate exercises were a feature of each day, and during the six performances of the motion picture production it was estimated that nearly every resident of the whole county was present at the theatre.

The affair resulted in a double success, one for the party in the city which arranged for the holidays, and the other for Associated First National Pictures, Inc. Mayor Ora Myers, and others in Greenfield, have been working consistently for many months arousing interest in the establishment of Riley Park on a plot of ground just on the outskirts of Greenfield which includes the stream and the site of the pool which furnished the inspiration for "The Old Swimmin' Hole." The production of a film version of the poem offered an opportune attraction for a special celebration by the city and was taken as such. From the standpoint of the producers, and distributors of the film, the attention which the event attracted from news pictorials and national news agencies gave the film production the widest variety of publicity of the better sort.

Mayor Myers found a willing coworker in Floyd Brown, the manager, of the Indianapolis exchange of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and a date was decided upon which made the showing of the picture in the poet's birthplace the premier of the production in the Indiana territory. Jack Pegler, of the First National Home offices, who was in Indianapolis in connection with the opening there of the Allen Holubar "Man-Woman-Marriage," also went to Greenfield to attend the publicizing of the event.

The universal appeal which the Riley poems have for children gave the one for the campaign which was adopted. Mayor Myers issued a proclamation declaring the dates of the showing of the picture to be "Riley Movie Days," and called upon the public to observe them as far as possible as holidays.

The school authorities and teachers were next interviewed on the proposition of making it possible for the children to be his guests, those attending the Greenfield schools at the matinee on the first day of the showing, and the other school children in the entire county on the second day. Tickets, especially printed, were issued to the teacher of each class and were distributed to the children.

Greenfield has but two newspapers, one daily and one weekly, and after the enthusiastic support of the school children had been enlisted the newspaper campaign was started. Half pages were taken by the theatre in both the local newspapers for the formal announcements of the showing of the production at the local theatre on both of the Riley Movie Days. Throwaways were also used, especially in the schools, to aid the children in letting their parents know exactly what they were going to see.

The two days rapidly took on the aspect of a big municipal holiday and when the merchants and other business men got in back of it the rest of Indiana, which reveres Riley almost as strongly as does Greenfield itself, took notice. Newspapers throughout the state published notices of the event, and during the two days celebration the out-of-town attendance nearly equalled the local population

B. Hampton Presents Fine Cast

BENJ. B. HAMPTON has assembled for "A Certain Rich Man," his next production for Hodkinson release, a cast of capable players. This production of Allen White's well-known novel was directed by Howard Hickman, assisted by Elliott Howe.

Heading the list of screen favorites comes Robert McKim, who handles the role of "John Barclay" with rare artistry, according to W. W. Hodkinson. Mr. McKim is known by motion picture followers everywhere. Some of his most recent releases include "The Mark of Zorro," wherein he appeared in the support of Douglas Fairbanks; "The Dwelling Place of Light," another Benj. B. Hampton production which has created much favorable comment; "The Spenders," still another Benj. B. Hampton picture, made from Harry Leon Wilson's widely-known novel, and "The U. P. Trail," probably Mr. Hampton's greatest success.

Opposite Mr. McKim is seen Claire Adams, who recently appeared to such great advantage in "The Spenders," and "The Dwelling Place of Light." In the role of "Bob Hendricks," the juvenile, will be seen Carl Gantvoort, a new-comer to the shadow stage, who is a discovery of Benj B. Hampton's. He appeared on the musical comedy stage opposite Hazel Dawn, Christine Macdonald, and Mitzi before being "discovered" by Mr. Hampton.

Another sterling player included in the cast is Joseph J. Dowling, "the miracle man of the screen," who has appeared in a number of Hodkinson releases, namely, "The Spenders," "The U. P. Trail," "The Breaking Point," and "The Kentucky Colonel." Lydia Knott has the role of John Barclay's mother, while Frankie Lee and Mary Jane Irving, two of the most lovable kiddies on the silver-sheet, are seen as young Neal Ward and young Janet Barclay in a sort of prologue to the picture. These characters, grown to maturity, are portrayed by Gordon Dumont, and Eugenia Gilbert, respectively, both players of ability. The rest of the cast includes Harry Lorraine, J. Gunnis Davis, Charles Colby, Walter Ferry, Flemming Pitts, Grace Pike and Jean Hershold.

Benj. B. Hampton is also engaged in the screening of Zane Grey's best known novel, "The Man of the Forest."

Inauguration Views Shown

International Cleverly Combines Views of '13 and '21 Ceremonies

WHEN International News Reel No. 18, containing pictures of the inauguration of President Harding, were thrown on the screens of Broadway theatres, March 4, a few hours after the actual ceremonies in Washington, the New York audiences were treated to a novelty. The Harding inauguration pictures were immediately followed by pictures of the Wilson inauguration, taken eight years ago, and which showed in strange contrast to those of today.

The double inauguration pictures were possible to no other news reel, as International has the only negative in this country of the first Wilson inauguration, according to word from that organization. They show Wilson smilingly accepting the high office from William Taft. His vigor and cheerfulness are in strange contrast to the pictures of 1921, in which he could not conceal his broken health and careworn appearance.

The 1913 inauguration pictures obtained by International News are said to have been the first movie news picture exhibited the same day as being taken. E. B. Hatrick, now general news manager of the International News, conceived the idea of putting the inauguration pictures on the screen in Washington, the same day. The same pictures were shown in New York the following morning. It is significant of the progress of the news reel business that the time has been cut down to a few hours from camera to screen in the case of important news.

Record Shipment of Films

Paramount Sent About 1,500,000 Feet Abroad Week of February 14

A NEW record for film shipments was established by the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation during the week of February 14th, according to an announcement made by E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and in charge of the foreign department. In that week approximately 1,500,000 feet of film were placed on board ships in New York harbor for all corners of the world. Shipments to England, Denmark, France, Germany, Sweden, Brazil, Japan, Australia, Cuba, Argentina, Chile, Mexico and other countries were included in this big lot of film. This is enough to provide 187 two-hour shows, which if run the average 240 times, would equal 44,880 distinct performances.

Placed end to end, these 1,500 reels of film would measure approximately 300 miles. The insertion of foreign titles and the inspection of these Paramount films before shipment required approximately 375 hours of the combined labors on the part of a large force of inspectors and laboratory employees. An average large sized shipment for one week to all foreign offices and distributing agencies of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation would be 500,000 feet.

"These extraordinary shipments of Paramount film indicate that the export business, in so far as the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is concerned, is in a healthy state," said Mr. Shauer. "They indicate also the confidence of our foreign agents and distributors in the conduct of their business during the present year. A constantly increasing demand for Paramount Pictures, despite the present unsettled exchange conditions is the best evidence possible that the foreign demand for the highest grade American pictures will continue to grow, despite strong competition from other countries."

Goldwyn's Sub-Sea Drama

Secures Williamson's "Wet Gold" With Ralph Ince in Leading Role

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed between Goldwyn Distributing Corporation and J. E. Williamson of the Submarine Film Corporation whereby Goldwyn will release through its twenty-two branch distributing offices the newest Williamson under-sea drama, "Wet Gold." The film is stated to be a most spectacular photoplay of adventure on land, on sea and under the water, with plenty of thrills and strongly emotional drama.

"Wet Gold" was written by Mr. Williamson himself who, with his brother George, completed the system of taking motion pictures underneath the water which rests upon the basic patents obtained by his father, Captain C. Williamson of Norfolk, Va. Their first submarine pictures, taken off the Bahama Islands eight years ago, were the film sensation of the year. The system of taking beneath-the-water pictures has since been developed and perfected until the new underwater picture, "Wet Gold," rivals ordinary cinematography for clearness, for variety of scenes and for human drama. Not that all of the faction of "Wet Gold" takes place below the surface of the sea, for much of it is on the surface and a good deal on the land, but the resulting story is a sea tale that rivals the most powerful imaginings of a Jules Verne.

Ralph Ince, noted as a screen director and actor, was engaged by Mr. Williamson to direct "Wet Gold" and to act the leading male role in it. With his usual feeling for drama, sense of character and love of the picturesque, Mr. Ince developed Mr. Williamson's scenario into what Goldwyn is satisfied will be one of the biggest box office attractions of the year. Miss Aleene Burr, a new screen beauty, plays the ingenue lead opposite Mr. Ince, while many players well known on stage and screen appear in the cast.

The picture was photographed in, around and under the waters of the Bahamas where ten months were spent in obtaining the wealth of unusual picture material which went into the making of the finished film. Mr. Williamson and his associates recently completed the editing and titling of "Wet Gold" and the film will shortly be ready for trade screenings.

Call for Serials Increases

Pathe Representative After Tour Reports Demand is Increasing

POPULAR demand for serials, instead of abating after the increased demand created during the war-time period, is increasing, declares a statement from the Pathe headquarters which is based on the report of the Pathe special serial representative who has just returned to the home office after a tour of the country.

"It is a fact that during the war people became more interested in serials than ever before," he reports, "because it kept their minds focused on something other than the horrors of the great struggle. The demand for chapter-plays, thus created, has never abated. Instead it has kept increasing, and to-day it is quite apparent that the serial is at the height of its popularity. During my long trip I encountered many exhibitors who, two years ago, bore strong prejudices against the serial. To-day they are receiving their biggest box-office revenue because of their keen exploitation of the continued drama.

"Exhibitors realize that the public demands serials. It is hard to convince some, however, but no exhibitor can go back of box-office results. I met one theatre owner, for instance, who had shut his door to serial salesmen. After lengthy argument, he was convinced that serials were worth a trial, so he staged Ruth Roland in 'Ruth of the Rockies.' Now he will not do without a serial on his program. He put this attraction to the severest test, that of bolstering attendances on what were weak nights and matinees. But, as everywhere else, 'Ruth of the Rockies' proved a tremendous drawing card.

"I recently discovered an excellent example of the value of a serial in Buffalo. Two first-run houses on the same street were playing features of an equal drawing power. One of these theatres was showing a Pathe serial, and that house was 'standing them up.' The other house was doing only mediocre business. First-run houses find serials bigger drawing cards, proportionately, than other theatres."

Leaps Across Chasm on a Motorcycle

The eighth episode, "The Grill of Fate," of Pathe's latest serial, "Double Adventure," starring Charles Hutchison, shows no letup as far as thrills are concerned. "The Grill of Fate" will be released March 13. In this episode the star is seen making a daring leap across a chasm on a motorcycle.

Edw. Scanlon in Funny "Torchy" Role

There is nothing particularly new about the phrase that "one's face may be one's fortune," but it is especially applicable to Edward Scanlon, who will soon be seen in the latest Torchy comedy entitled, "Crowning Torchy," now being filmed with Johnny Hines in the title role, and which is scheduled for early release through Educational.

Fox News Reports Big Booking Business

In the middle of what is regarded as a period of depression, Fox News announces that it is doing more business than at any time in its history; that bookings are considerably heavier than last Fall, when trade was admittedly booming, and that only last week all records were broken by Fox News in the price paid for a week run.

Wallace Reid Starts New Production

Wallace Reid has begun his new picture adapted from Byron Morgan's auto story, "Watch My Smoke," which will be a Paramount release, directed by Frank Urson. Oak Knoll, the famous millionaire section of Pasadena, Cal., is the location for the opening scenes, but shortly the company will be in the studio for a lot of important scenes.

Latest Rolin Comedy Is "Running Wild"

"Running Wild" is the title of the next Rolin Comedy featuring Eddie Boland which Pathe will release March 20th. Eddie Boland plays a happy-go-lucky role of a "young fellow trying to get along without work, worry or wrinkles." He is assisted in his comedy antics by Ethel Broadhurst, Jean Hope, Lilymae Wilkinson, Dagmar Dalgren, Norma Nichols, Del Lorice, and the Rolin Comedy comedians.

Government Director at Rothacker Plant

H. Foster Bain, Director of the United States bureau of mines, came to the Rothacker Chicago laboratory in company with M. F. Leopold, bureau safety engineer, who has supervised a number of educational films produced by the Rothacker industrial division for the bureau.

Mr. Bain came to Chicago from New York following a convention of mining engineers which he addressed and at which a number of Rothacker-produced bureau of mines films were shown.

A scene from "Bob Hampton of Placer," a First National release

Has Modernized "East Lynne"

Ballin Presents Old Story in Present Day Atmosphere

ONE of the interesting features in connection with the Hodkinson release of Hugo Ballins latest production, "East Lynne," is in the modernized version of this classic story that is offered to the screen public. The original novel, by Mrs. Henry Wood, first published in 1861, clothed its characters in the costumes of that day; so has every one of the numerous dramatizations of this tale. In the Ballin-Hodkinson picture, however, the director-producer has modernized the story entirely, from the clothes worn by the players to the railroad trains, automobiles and other modern inventions which are revealed in the screening.

"I would never lose enthusiasm for the motion picture production of any story which was inherently a costume story, that is where the scenes are laid in countries whose natives wear clothes other than ours of the present day, or in such a remote past that the costumes were radically different from those in fashion today. So, in 'Pagan Love,' my first production released through W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, I felt no hesitation in clothing the Chinese characters in their national costumes, and I am convinced that their appearance did not at all detract from the continuous grip of the story on the beholders. Similarly, in the picturization of stories of comparatively remote days, the fact that the characters are in costumes other than those we wear today need not necessarily detract from the interest of the story provided the costumes are subordinated to the action of the photoplay.

"In 'East Lynne,' however, we had an entirely different problem. The costumes of 1861 were fundamentally very similar to those of the present day and such differences as do exist would have been so minor that they would have annoyed and distracted the attention of the audiences if they had been shown on the screen. Basically, the story of 'East Lynne' is a story of all time—and that is the main reason for its undimmed popularity after all these years. For these two reasons, however, my production of 'East Lynne' is strictly modern in every aspect. There may be some who believe that the thousands who have read the book and have seen the play with the old costumes may be somewhat taken aback at seeing East Lynne clothed in the garb of 1921. But I am sure that this fact will add rather a pleasant innovation which will result in the audiences being able to follow the story more closely since there will not be present any of the distraction which would arise from the petty differences in costume which have been evolved in the last sixty years.

"'East Lynne' is a story of today just as it was a story of 1861 and as it will be a story for further generations to come. Clothing the film production in modern day dress and surroundings will, I am sure, make it all the more acceptable to the patrons of photoplay theatres."

Hugo Hallin, director and producer of "East Lynn," a Hodkinson release, telling Mabel Ballin and Edward Earle how to put it over

W. W. Hodkinson declares that Grosset and Dunlap are republishing the original book in connection with the photoplay. Through its sixty-five branches, this firm will effect a wide distribution of the book.

The following wording appears on the jacket and the title page of the book:

"Photoplay Edition Republished in Conjunction with Hugo Ballin's Modernized Screen Production, Featuring Edward Earle and Mabel Ballin—a Hodkinson Release."

The cover of the book has been printed in four colors and numerous scenes from the picture have been used as the illustrations.

J. Parker Read Special on Way

Producer Expects His New Film Will Be Best Done Yet

FRED NIBLO, director, and C. Gardner Sullivan, newest member of the Associated Producers, are collaborating with Louise Glaum and J. Parker Read, Jr., in making what Producer Read hopes will prove his best screen production to date.

"Not only do I expect my next picture starring Miss Glaum to be my finest to date," says Mr. Read, "but I hope to make it the greatest work of my career. I purposely have held up the production of this story at an earlier date for several reasons, among the fact that I did not have sufficient time, while supervising the production of my Louise Glaum and Hobart Bosworth productions, to devote myself as completely as I would have liked to my current work.

"I have engaged Mahloon Hamilton, who plays opposite Miss Glaum in 'Find the Woman,' my latest Louise Glaum release, for the masculine leading part in support of Miss Glaum. Donald MacDonald will be the 'heavy' and Gertrude Claire will have the mother part. There are a number of well known feminine players also in the supporting cast and Charles H. Stumar, who has been in charge of photographing my Louise Glaum productions since 'Sahara' again will be my cinematographic chief.

"If this picture costs more than $300,000 and takes more than five months in production I will feel that the expenditure will not be out of proportion with the value of the story.

"Miss Glaum's popularity has been established through the various productions I have published via the W. W. Hodkinson and Associated Producers distributing systems, and I am confident that this forthcoming production with the many splendid exploitation angles that already are shaping up will bring her into the public eye as the foremost emotional actress of the American screen."

Charles H. Kyson is in charge of Mr. Read's architectural program for the production.

Mr. Read's promotion department has started the creation of a huge publicity and accessory scheme which will be aimed at attracting exhibitor and popular interest throughout the making of the picture and culminating in a gigantic broadside of publicity a week in advance of the production's national release date, it is declared.

The actual details of the story and its title are being withheld. At present the production is known at the Thomas H. Ince studio, where Read makes his Associated Producers specials, as "J. Parker Read, Jr., Production No. 8."

"Topics of the Day" Aid Anti-Blue Law Fight

CONVINCING arguments against the Sunday Blue Law movement are being presented in subtle quotations in "Topics of the Day," and are meeting with widespread approval from exhibitors, who see in this short subject a powerful weapon for moulding public opinion against the Blue Laws.

Harry M. Crandall, the Washington exhibitor, on behalf of the District of Columbia Exhibitors Association, is among those who recently praised the Pathe release. He states that "Topics" have done splendid work in combating the Blue Sunday movement.

Historic Meuse in the Pathe Review No. 94

"The Valley of Memories," a Pathecolor presentation in natural colors, makes Pathe Review No. 94, released March 13, one of the most interesting issues of recent date. Through the warm spring sunshine of 1914, a Pathe cameraman traveled slowly along the Meuse river, stopping here and there to take views. The film thus made presents a visual history of landscapes now sadly changed, of once-beautiful villas now turned to dust through the ravages of war.

"Black Beauty" Wins Favor

Critics of New York Dailies Are Highly Favorable in Opinions

New portrait of Corinne Griffith, Vitagraph star, soon to be seen in "It Isn't Being Done This Season"

"BLACK BEAUTY," the Vitagraph release, received favorable comment from the reviewers of the New York dailies during its recent run at the Strand Theatre on Broadway. The New York morning World had this to say about the production:

"It is a far better product than the book itself, and it is probable that Anna Sewell would say as much. Must be considered as one of the fine pieces of motion picture work of the season. A picture play long life."

The New York American made the following comment:

"Charm and good taste—the production and direction teem with them. 'Black Beauty' is the sort of wholesome entertainment that builds sturdy tissue in the interesting picture industry."

"Right after two weeks' run of 'The Kid' the Strand Theatre presents this week 'Black Beauty'—another of the best pictures of the season. The picture is so refreshing in its atmosphere, so kind in its message and so clean in its purpose that it cannot fail to captivate the hearts of motion picture patrons."

The New York Herald expressed the following opinion:

"The presence of the various stable characters makes this picture one of the alluring novelties of the season. A very attractive production which, in the immortal words of any clothing advertisement, is 'fitted to customers of all ages.'"

New York Daily News commented as follows:

"It's a job to be proud of, I think, having made 'Black Beauty' into a picture which will please infant and adult, a job which so easily might have been badly done, but is not.

Mid-West Enthused by Lloyd's New Comedy

Associated Exhibitors report the receipt of telegrams of the most enthusiastic character from important distributing points on the arrival of prints of "Now or Never," the first Harold Lloyd feature comedy produced for that organization. The verdict wired from Chicago reads:

"'Now or Never,' first release of the Associated Exhibitors series of Lloyds, far surpasses any comedy ever made. Should command the biggest prices ever paid for any kind of subject. Should stand for indefinite and continuous runs in all big key centres. It will be the comedy sensation of the country."

Chandlee and Laub Are in New Quarters

Due to the necessity of obtaining larger offices and cutting rooms, Harry Chandlee and William B. Laub have moved from the sixth floor of the Leavitt Building to the eighth floor and are at present engaged in the editing and titling of a number of World, Peerless and foreign features.

James Hogan Returns to Dwan Studio

James Patrick Hogan, for some time assistant to Mr. Dwan, but recently lured to the Fox lot, is back behind his old megaphone at the Hollywood studios. He will co-direct with Dwan on the new production just started, the tentative title of which is "Johnny Cucabod."

From the review on "Black Beauty" in March 12th issue of Exhibitors Herald.

Vitagraph has one of the prize pictures of the year in "Black Beauty."

The picture, both for the familiarity of its story and for its intrinsic artistic value, should sweep the exhibiting world not only in near months but for years to come.

Black Beauty" is a novelty in manner of presentation. Its titles tell the story in first person by the horse, Black Beauty, and they faithfully follow the book's wording. Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester have gracefully and effectively added enough to the story to make stronger its slight thread of romance, and have transformed it into charming screen entertainment by adding to rather than subtracting from its charm.

The film has all the required elements of screen appeal: comedy, suspense, drama and pictorial beauty. There is naturalness about the characters as the cast portrays them that makes them live as really to the beholder as one's intimate friends and associates.

It is vividly human and in its manner of presentation is stripped to the absolute artistic essentials. Every scene and every movement are made to count.

From the exhibitor's standpoint "Black Beauty" should be one of the greatest money-makers of the year. It should go over big in both the first-run and the neighborhood house.

Paramount Magazine to Be Modified

THE Paramount office announces that, commencing with the release of March 6, a radical change will be made in the Paramount Magazine.

Instead of the 1,000 feet, which now consists of three or more tabloid subjects, the Paramount Magazine in the future will be 500 feet in length, the footage to be taken up entirely with a cartoon comedy.

These comedies, it is stated, will be complete features in themselves and will be quite novel in form, introducing real characters who will carry along the comedy action with the cartoon figures. They will be written and executed by the members of the Paramount Magazine cartoon staff, Earl Hurd, Pat Sullivan, Frank Moser and Henry D. Bailey, all of whom have top-notch reputations as creators of screen cartoons. These four artists will work in rotation.

The present schedule of one release each week will be maintained.

A Special Song Tie-Up for "East Lynne"

The W. W. Hodkinson organization announces an important tie-up for Hugo Ballin's screen version of "East Lynne." The aria, "Then You'll Remember Me," originally in the score of "The Bohemian Girl," plays an important part in the incidents of the plot of this famous story. Fred Fischer, Inc., a well-known musical publishing house, will republish copies of the famous song in connection with the presentation of the motion picture version of "East Lynne." The front page of the song will carry a photo of Mabel Ballin, who plays the heroine in the picture, and will give credit to the Hugo Ballin production and its release by Hodkinson.

The publication of this song will be timed, it is said, to have it appear in connection with "East Lynne Week," which is being celebrated by exhibitors throughout the country during the week commencing March 27.

Goldwyn Items from the Coast

DIRECTOR WALLACE WORSLEY has completed the photography at the Goldwyn studios on the first Leroy Scott original photoplay, "The Night Rose." It is a tale of underworld life in New York City, with Lon Chaney and Leatrice Joy in the most important roles. Both Mr. Chaney and Miss Joy have been retained by Goldwyn to play the leads in a new photoplay to be directed by Wallace Worsley.

Julian Josephson, associate editor at the Goldwyn studios here, is writing the continuity for "Hungry Hearts" in collaboration with Anzia Yezierska, the author. Rapid progress is being made and it is expected that the making of the photoplay will get under way at an early date.

The cast for the screen version of Rupert Hughes' novel, "The Old Nest," which Reginald Barker is directing, will be one of the greatest ever assembled for the interpretation of any motion picture, declares Goldwyn. Molly Malone, M. B. Flynn and J. Park Jones have been added to a cast which already contained the following names: Helene Chadwick, Dwight Crittenden, Mary Alden, Cullen Landis, Louise Lovely, Richard Tucker, Nick Cogley, Fanny Stockbridge, Laura Lavarnie, Johnny Jones, Buddy Messenger, Lucille Rickson, Robert DeVilbiss, Marie Moorehouse and Billie Cotton.

Select Fine Cast for Rupert Hughes's "Old Nest"

Will Rogers, his director, Clarence Badger, and the company making the Elmer L. Rice original, "Doubling for Romeo," returned this week from Jackson, Cal., where they went to take exteriors. Rogers has been the village hero of Jackson since the arrival of the company, when the lariat throwing star gave a big benefit for charity. People came to Jackson from miles around to see the popular Goldwyn star. Roland Rushton has been added to the cast.

Rita Weiman, well-known novelist and playwright, who came to the Goldwyn studios several weeks ago to finish her first original scenario, "The Grim Comedian," and to study screen technique, has decided to remain here while Frank Lloyd directs her first Goldwyn picture. Production will start very soon.

Victor Schertzinger, who has recently been directing the Tom Moore pictures, is preparing to begin production on "Beating the Game," the second original photoplay written for Goldwyn by Charles Kenyon, immediately upon the return of Tom Moore and his bride, Renee Adoree, from their oneymoon in Honolulu. Production is expected to start on St. Patrick's day.

Director E. Mason Hopper and the company filming "Look Before You Leap," the screen version of Thompson Buchanan's successful stage comedy, "The Bridal Path," have returned from their second trip to Santa Barbara, where the exteriors were taken. They are now working at the studio on some comedy scenes which will be decidedly out of the ordinary.

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, visited the Goldwyn studios last week and conferred with Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production.

Mary Roberts Rinehart has completed for Eminent Authors an original scenario called "The Glorious Fool," production of which is expected to start soon.

Gertrude Atherton has completed the novel version of her first original photoplay, "Don't Neglect Your Wife!" In book form it will be called "Honor."

Leroy Scott has completed another original photoplay manuscript, "The Mother," and Arthur F. Statter is collaborating with him on the continuity.

Christie Forces Speeding Up

AS the result of the visit of E. W. Hammons, president of Education Film Corporation and its distributing subsidiary, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., to Los Angeles it is announced that Al Christie, head of the Christie Film Company, will devote his entire attention for the next six months and the entire resources of his organization to the creation of one and two-reel comedies for release through Educational.

Although both parties are reported to have been entirely satisfied with relations since they came together, it is said that the understanding between the producing company and the distributing organization has been made all the more complete.

In addition to his supervision of the entire product, Al Christie will devote his personal attention to the direction of two reelers. He has recently completed two of these pictures, "Man vs. Woman," featuring Dorothy Devore and Neal Burns and the largest cast that has appeared in a Christie Comedy; and "The Reckless Sex," with Dorothy Devore and Earl Rodney and what is said to be the most elaborate cabaret setting that motion pictures have seen. The latter is on the schedule for the latter part of March.

Christie Organization Concentrates on Educational Issues

Word comes from the Coast that he is now handling the megaphone on "Sneakers," in which the settings are said to be sumptuous and in which more than two hundred players take part. In addition to the adult players remarkable baby and dog actors are promised.

"Red Hot Love" featuring Neal Burn and Vera Steadman is another two reeler which is nearing completion at the Hollywood plant, this one under the direction of Scott Sidney. William Beaudine is at work on "Short and Snappy," featuring Bobby Vernon and Eddie Barry, the first time two male featured players have appeared in the same Christie picture. When these are finished these three directors will start on a new trio of pictures.

So. California to Hold First Nat'l Week

The southern California territory, which includes Arizona, is to have an Associated First National week, beginning March 27 to April 3, according to decree issued by David Bershon, manager of the local exchange.

Work on preparation for this was started a few days ago and more than 100 bookings for the week have already been made. It is predicted that by the opening date of the week, the Los Angeles exchange will be booked 100 per cent, for there are less than 125 possible bookings for the week as there are only 310 theatres in the territory. Manager Bershon has borrowed from the San Francisco territory exchanges all possible prints and has wired New York office of Associated First National for additional ones. The territory will use as high as ten prints on many current subjects.

Buck Jones Completes "One-Man Trail"

Buck Jones has just finished a new Western picture for William Fox. It has been titled "The One-Man Trail." Jack Strumwasser supplied the story, and William K. Howard made the scenario. Bernard Durning was the director. Beatrice Burnham plays opposite Buck Jones and Helen Rosson with James Farley have prominent parts.

Vignola Feature Released

"Straight Is the Way" Released March 6; Has Interesting Story

THE ouija board has a lot to do with the development of the story of "Straight is the Way," the Cosmopolitan production which was scheduled for Paramount release March 6. The story, moreover, owes its origin to some very real "spooks" if "spooks" ever are real, which are said to seem to inhabit the locality of the Summer home of the author, Ethel Watts Mumford, at Sands Point, Long Island.

Mrs. Mumford's story was originally entitled "The Manifestations of Henry Ort," and although the principal characters are crooks, the criminal element in the story has been so modified that the effect is one of charm rather than repulsion. Two crooks go to a small town in search of loot, and they come in contact with a widow and her charming niece who are in the grip of a loan shark. The women appeal to Ouija for information regarding a mythical treasure, and the crooks, who overhear the plea, not only contrive to make the treasure quite real but succeed in working out their regeneration as well.

"Straight is the Way" was directed by Robert G. Vignola, the scenario having been written by Frances Marion. The combination of their talents was in large measure responsible for the big success the picture scored during its recent engagement at the New York Rivoli. Managing Director Hugo Riesenfeld pronounced it one of the most wholesome and delightful pictures he had ever seen, and this was the verdict expressed also by practically every patron of the theatre during the week, as well as by all the newspaper and trade press critics.

Matt Moore, who has such a sterling performance in "The Passionate Pilgrim," has the leading role, and Gladys Leslie, formerly starred by Vitagraph, plays opposite him. George Parsons plays the second crook and Mabel Bert is seen as the aunt whose trust in Ouija is implicit. Fine character portrayals are also given by Henry Sedley and Van Dyke Brooks.

Kinograms in Fast Service

Gets Views of the Inauguration to Screens in Very Rapid Time

IN a statement just issued from the headquarters of the Educational Films Corporation of America, the report is made that "with the exception of New York City and New England," Kinograms achieved "several hours start on any other news service" in getting views of the inauguration ceremonies to the screens. The statement from Educational's home-office in New York follows:

"In Washington itself Kinograms were the only pictures of the inauguration to be shown the same evening and these were seen at Keith's theatre, Crandall's Metropolitan, Moor's Rialto and Loew's Palace. In Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburgh and many other cities Kinograms claims to have been hours ahead of every other service and to have had practically exclusive showings.

"When arrangements for the inaugural pictures were made, Educational decided that it would be best to attempt to serve the greater portion of the country rather than New York and the extreme East alone. So, instead of having the negatives shipped to New York and incurring that loss of time and then the additional delay in shipping the prints back over that distance, laboratories were engaged in Washington, the negatives retained there and prints for the entire country forwarded from that point.

"With the exception of New York City and New England, this gave Kinograms several hours start on any other news service. Before ten o'clock Friday night the full set of prints for every point had been dispatched and were in express cars. In addition many points which had been informed of the policy ordered additional prints.

Different Locale in "The Rent Collector"

Larry Semon is said to have introduced an entirely different atmosphere into his current comedy, "The Rent Collector," now being produced at Vitagraph's western studio. In contrast with his latest picture, "The Hick," now just reaching the market, he has taken the tenement section of a large city for his locale in "The Rent Collector."

The same pretty girls as usual will be seen in this forthcoming picture, but not in the cage environment.

"Connecticut Yankee" to Open in N. Y.

The New York premier of Fox Film Corporation's presentation of Mark Twain's "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" will take place at the Selwyn theatre on Monday, March 14th. Fox officials are authority for the statement that no production they ever made has aroused the amount of interest among exhibitors generally that the "Connecticut Yankee" has aroused thus far.

Much interest is evidenced in the New York presentation of the "Connecticut Yankee" by the local film trade, which owing to the unusual nature of the production, is following its fortunes for possible indications of an imminent swerving of the public's taste to the new historical, satirical comedy of the "Connecticut Yankee" type.

"What Women Will Do"

An Edward Jose Production Story by Charles A. Logue

Edward Jose, Sole Director

A better picture for your bigger business

We say it, your trade papers say it!

"Novel crook story that is good entertainment. . . Well made, well acted. . . Appealing story because it has a different twist. . You can run it and feel pretty confident that the majority of your patrons are being entertained, whatever class of people make up your audiences. . . There is plenty of excitement and suspense and there are surprises in store at the climax."—Wid's.

"An hour and a quarter of good solid entertainment. Story good, good heart interest, no padding, has good box office value. Settings deserve special mention. No possible flaw in lightings or photography. Star and support all that could be desired. A notable achievement."—Trade Review.

"Strongly entertaining melodrama, unusually well staged."—Moving Picture World

"Excellent from every angle. Direction masterly, cast splendid. . A gripping story."—Weekly Film Review.

"What Women Will Do"

This is the third Associated Exhibitors production. Like the others it was made by exhibitors for exhibitors with your box office and your public in view.

It follows "The Devil," one of the outstanding successes of the business, and like "The Devil" offers ample proof that Associated Exhibitors are keeping the faith; that their announced policy when they started business of producing and presenting better pictures of bigger box office value was not mere idle words but a statement of honest, earnest policy which is now being carried out.

It is easy to promise; it is not so easy to deliver.

The Associated Exhibitors is delivering; thousands of box offices are the witnesses.

"What Women Will Do" is a bigger picture for your better business. Let the picture itself make good the claim; see it!

"Short Subject Nights" Held in Michigan

MORE than fifty of the smaller cities of Michigan have been introduced to the novelty of "A Short Subject Night" during the past month as the result of the activities of the Detroit office of Educational Film Exchange, Inc., according to a statement from Educational Films' headquarters in New York. While in Detroit, though the entire Butterfield circuit and in many of the other cities the entire comedy, scenic and special product is said to have been booked solidly, it has remained the policy of many of the smaller cities to show only a feature, or a feature and a comedy or serial. Therefore, this step was taken to familiarize the motion picture going public with achievements of the one and two-reel subject.

The program supplied these theatres includes "The Race of the Age," the exclusive two-reel record of the victory of Man o' War; a two-reel Educational comedy, "The Art of Diving," in which Annette Kellermann shows her art before the ordinary motion picture camera and then by slow motion; and one of the scenics. This supplied a program with a total length of six reels. The Detroit office reports that many theatres have declared that they intend to establish a short subject night as a part of every week's program.

George Beban Playing 3 Weeks in Chicago

George Beban, star of "One Man in a Million" which is being distributed by Robertson-Cole as a super-special production, is playing three full-week stands in Chicago in March. Mr. Beban is with the production continuing his series of personal appearances.

Mr. Beban opened in Chicago at the Riviera theatre, which is controlled by Balaban and Katz, on Sunday, February 27th. He is to move to the Tivoli theatre, another house controlled by the same company. He will end the Chicago appearances in one of the houses managed by Ascher Brothers on the week opening Sunday, March 13th.

Sails for Cuba to Open "Big Four" Office

Max Ehrenreich, who has been identified with the New York exchange of United Artists Corporation ever since its organization, sails for Cuba on March 12th, to open the first branch office of the "Big Four" in that part of the world.

The office in Havana that will be opened by Mr. Ehrenreich will be the first of a series of offices that will eventually distribute the "Big Four" product in Cuba, Porto Rico, The Bahama Islands, Jamaica, Haiti and the Windward and Leeward Islands.

Woody for "Clean Pictures"

Realart Chief is for Films Suitable for All to See

THE only type of picture that will succeed and survive in the future will be the clean production, suitable for the whole family, according to John S. Woody, general manager of Realart.

"There can be no doubt that at the present time there is a definite resentment against crime pictures and pictures playing up the sex appeal," said Mr. Woody recently.

"That is evident from the present agitation for censorship. Such pictures are suggestive and furnish reformers with effective weapons with which to attack our industry.

"If this resentment, which is smouldering, bursts into flame, it will threaten the very existence of motion pictures. For it will affect not only the objectionable class of productions, but all others as well.

"In some sections this feeling is developing alarmingly. Governor Miller, of New York, has just come out in favor of state censorship. He objects to pictures because, as he puts it, 'too many of them have an obvious appeal to the morbid and the sensual.'

"'My children, as others,' the Governor is quoted as saying, 'are all interested in moving pictures and occasionally prevail upon me to go with them. With very rare exceptions, it so happens that when I have gone with them the picture has not appeared to me to be suitable for children, young people or, in fact, anybody to see. I haven't any doubt,' he adds, 'they ought to be censored, but have not yet given the question as to how it should be done, any serious thought.' Nevertheless the Governor expressed his pleasure over the fact that the legislature is considering the question.

"Heretofore," continued Mr. Woody, "censor boards, which have sprung up throughout the country, have many of them been smothered by the weight of public opinion. But now the tendency is to support these very institutions.

"Furthermore, this tendency is growing and will become much stronger unless immediate steps are taken to remove objectionable elements from pictures. The screen must be clean; it must be kept clean, and the cleaning process must be begun at once.

"Sex appeal, it seems to me, has long been accepted by scenarists and directors as love appeal, and acting with this belief they have given their pictures to the public. It is not sex appeal that the screen wants; it is the love appeal, and between these there is a vast difference.

"I firmly believe that the type of that is going to succeed is the clean, wholesome picture, suitable for presentation to the whole family. That is, and always has been Realart's belief. It was the aim we had when we started producing pictures, and it is our aim now. Our slogan is 'Clean entertainment for the whole family.'

"Removing crime and other things of similar nature from pictures does not mean that all the punch is taken from the production. It simply means that the sensuous and the morbid elements be eliminated. If a crime plays a part in the screen story it is not necessary to depict it on the screen; it can be suggested in many other ways equally effective and certainly less objectionable.

"The public, through its committees and welfare boards, is looking for good pictures—for clean entertainment. That is more than evident from the following letter sent us by the chairman of the Better Films Committee of the Chicago Woman's Aid.

"'First of all,' it says, 'I want to congratulate you upon the production of your latest picture, 'The Snob.' Such pictures being a message of better things in motion pictures, for children and I am sure there would be less agitation for censorship if producers would understand the worth of such pictures. . . .'"

"Flying A" Special Ready Soon

"Payment Guaranteed" Now in Finishing Stages

"PAYMENT GUARANTEED is in the laboratory of the American Film Company in the tinting, toning and titling stages. This means that in a week or so another "Flying A" special will be ready for sale and distribution through Pathe, in accordance with the new arrangement just entered into between S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company and Paul Brunet, of Pathe. The sales of American productions formerly have been handled by American salesmen through the Pathe Exchanges.

"Payment Guaranteed," therefore, is the first new American special to go under the new regime. It is a society drama of romance and intrigue, with an unusual human interest element which is sure to make it a success. In it there is a subtle analysis of human nature which gives depth to the drama which otherwise would be taken only as good, clean entertainment.

Margarita Fisher, the star, has a role much to her liking, and in it she is at her best. Capt. Cecil Van Auker, for the first time is seen playing opposite Miss Fisher, and is an exceedingly likable leading man. Hayward Mack, the well-known villain of many successes, also has a big part, and he makes the most of it.

Harvey Clark has a small part in this play, but in his hands it is never an insignificant one. Harry Lonsdale, Marjorie Manners and Alice Wilson complete an excellent cast.

This picture contains some unusually attractive shots of the Santa Barbara mountains where the scenes were filmed, which do credit to Georges Rizard, the American photographer. George L. Cox directed.

PATHE NEWS —FIRST!

In New York by Two Hours

Pathe News led competitors with scenes of the Presidential Inauguration in Washington by two full hours. Broadway's leading theatres were showing this number of the News between 7:45 and 8:00 p. m. on Friday, March 4th. Persons leaving Washington directly after the swearing-in of the President arrived in New York to find the event they had witnessed already on the screen.

"Your pictures of the Inauguration arrived at the Capitol Theatre 7:58 Friday evening, nearly two hours ahead of the next release, which is an achievement, and I congratulate you."

S. L. Rothapfel.

"I wish to compliment you on your wonderful efficiency. Prints of the Inauguration of President Harding were delivered to us about 7:45 p.m., March 4th, and were shown at both the Rialto and Rivoli."

FIRST NATIONAL

Charles Ray is beginning production of an original Rob Wagon story.

Oliver Morosco's initial production, "The Half Breed," is now being filmed at the Selig studios. The cast includes Hugh Thompson, Wheeler Oakman, Joseph Dowling, Ann Mat, Mary Anderson, Carl Stockdale and Herbert Prior.

Walter McGraul will play the lead for Anita Stewart in "The Price of Happiness," under the direction of Edwin Carewe.

J. D. Williams is negotiating with producers for other productions.

Carter DeHaven has purchased Oliver Morosco's stage comedy, "Marry the Poor Girl."

Final scenes have been taken for the Anita Stewart subject, "The Invisible Fear," by Hampton Del Ruth. Walter McGrail and Alan Forest are leads.

Advice from David Hartford, who is still in the north for exteriors for "The Golden Snare," is that Wellington Playter has been added to the cast. Playter has not appeared in pictures for the past year or more, owing to his association with motion picture commercial studios in the Northwest. Ruth Renick plays the feminine lead with an all-star cast which includes Wallace Berry, Lewis S. Stone, Melbourne MacDowell and Frances MacDonald.

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

Mack Sennet announces the completion of "Heartbalm," a fivereel romantic comedy. Another subject of the same length, entitled "Furnished Rooms," is now being edited. The studios will be closed for four or six weeks as the Paramount contract is completed and the forces are ahead on production for Associated Producers.

"Without Benefit of Clergy" is to be the first Rudyard Kipling story to be filmed by Brunton under the direction of James Young for Pathe release.

A delegation of thirty, representing the Mexico City Chamber of Commerce, visited the Brunton studios recently.

ROBERTSON-COLE

The Pauline Frederick company, under the direction of Henry King, and Dev Jennings, cameraman, have gone to Lone Pine for the exteriors for "The Greater Love." This is an outdoor story and a new type for Miss Frederick. The story is by Harvey Gates and the continuity was written by Tipton Steck.

Clyde Filmore, Lawson Butt and thirty-five members of the company will be in the snow-covered mountains for two weeks.

William Christy Cabanne is making the final scenes for "The Pretenders."

Sessue Hayakawa company is working at the studio with a big tenement street set.

Fritzie Brunette, William Carleton, Sam De Grosse and Edith Chapman will be the principals in the next Gasnier production entitled "Wives."

REALART

Two new subjects were put in production. Chester Franklin has a cast that includes May McAvoy, Bruce Gordon, Kathlyn Williams and Lloyd Whitlock, who will appear in the first of the original screen plays by Hector Turnbull.

T. Roy Barnes, Walter Hiers and Bertie Johns have been selected for the next Wanda Hawley picture to be filmed by Director Thomas Heffron. The scenario is now being written by Douglas Doty.

Jerome Patrick, who came West to play lead opposite Mary Miles Minter, has completed work at the studio and left for New York to play in the next Belasco stage production.

Elmer Harris, author of "Ducks and Drakes" and "The March Hare" and others, is now writing an original screen play for Bebe Daniels. Mr. Harris is in charge of the Realart scenario department.

LASKY

Agnes Ayres is going East to play opposite Tom Meighan in "The Conquest of Canaan" upon completion of Wallace Reid's "Watch My Smoke."

George Melford is making the final scenes for "The Money Master," by Sir Gilbert Parker.

James Cruze is beginning "Gasoline Gus," with Roscoe Arbuckle.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

ENISON CLIFT, former scenario editor and director at William Fox's West Coast Studio, writes former associates and friends in Los Angeles, that he will remain in London to direct one or two more productions of superfeature nature for the same company which placed the making of "The Diamond Necklace" upon the responsibility of Mr. Clift. In April Mr. Clift hopes to return to Los Angeles by way of the Suez and China, which will complete his tour around the world.

The continuity written by Clift for "The Diamond Necklace" is to be issued in book form by a big London publishing house and considered one of the finest examples of screen continuity prepared in England, which, in addition to writing the story as well as the production script, Mr. Clift directed.

After being confined to his home in Massachusetts for several months on account of illness, John William Kellette is to return to the picture field and will direct two reel comedies, starring the Four Marks, who have been doing great comedy work in vaudeville. It will be the first of a series.

J. Stuart Blackton and party long since arrived in England and by now are likely in the throes of production of photoplays, starring Lady Diana Manners, noted English beauty and noble woman. The entrance of Lady Diana into motion pictures caused considerable discussion in court circles when first announced several months ago. The finished productions will be handled by Arthur S. Kane in America, who is also identified with Charles Ray pictures.

Ouida Bergere, in private life Mrs. George Fitzmaurice, who has written four stories for big George Fitzmaurice specials, is now engaged in writing the adaptation of "Peter Ibbetson," which is to be another George Fitzmaurice production, with two of Famous Players' biggest stars in the main roles. Following the completion of the "Peter Ibbetson" script, Miss Bergere will begin work on her first Ouida Bergere production. Not only will she direct this all-star picture, but Miss Bergere's own story, "Sweetheart and Wives," will be adapted by her for her first picture.

The entrance of Ouida Bergere to the directorial field at the head of her own producing unit is the culmination of several years' work as a motion picture actress, a scenario writer of note and special screen writer under contract to Famous Players to write stories to be directed by George Fitzmaurice and known as George Fitzmaurice Productions. The stories are: "On with the Dance," "The Right to Love," an adaptation; "Idols of Clay," "Paying the Piper" and her next big adaptation, "Peter Ibbetson."

Sylvia Nadina, concert star, who has also met with encouraging success as a screen artist

In the course of a few weeks Miss Bergere will disclose additional information concerning her first Ouida Bergere production, "Sweethearts and Wives."

Fred J. Butler, a few years ago stage director for Belasco interests in California stock theatres, has become a director of motion pictures. Not until after he learned to take the possibilities of screen work seriously. Nevertheless, he is now directing his son, David Butler, in a series of five-reel comedy dramas for Irving M. Lesser.

A flash back reveals a few features directed by Mr. Butler, all starring his son, such as "Smiling all the Way," "Girls, Don't Gamble" and "Sitting on the World." The first of the new series will be the adaptation of a Wallace Irwin story published in the Saturday Evening Post, known as "Sophie Semenoff."

A number of favorites have commenced their careers or in their early training been under the stage direction of Fred J. Butler, among them Marjorie Rambeau, Frances Starr, Florence Stone, Fay Bainter, Bessie Barriscale, Florence Oakley, Frank Bacon, Bert Lytell, Richard Dix, Ernest Glendenning, Carles Ruggles, Wyndham Standing, Harland Tucker, Richard Bennett, Edmund Lowe, and a host of others of equal note.

The mother of the star and wife of the director, known to the profession as Adele Belgarde, was a leading woman, so the histrionic ability of David Butler is more or less of a "natural happening."

J. Charles Davis, II., has joined the ranks of motion picture directors, his first picture starring Muriel Ostriche, with Walter Miller and Harold Foshay in the leading masculine roles, being complete. A second picture is now ready for the camera work, and will include Mr. Foshay, who has been placed under contract by the producing unit for one year. The first picture, entitled "The Shadow," is said to be a surprisingly good piece of work, and the second, "The Call of the Open," will soon be under way.

Director John S. Robertson, having finished cutting his big John S. Robertson production of "Sentimental Tommy," and his Constance Binney picture, "The Magic Cup," has begun work on "Footlights," starring Elsie Ferguson in Rita Weiman's Saturday Evening Post story, which Josephine Lovett adapted for the screen. Mr. Robertson declares this story of the theatre to be one of power and originality.

George Archainbaud, the eminent young French director, has been assigned the making of another photoplay starring Elaine Hammerstein, with a choice between title, "Handscuffs or Kisses."

Hobart Henley, selected to direct Hope Hampton in "Star-Dust," screen version of Fanny Hurst's widely read story, has completed detail work previous to studio work and, so says the good word, is ready to "shoot."

ABOUT PLAYERS

THE life of a motion picture star is a lead pipe sinecure—some times, especially when its Ruth Roland, Pathe serial star, attempting to take a rest.

Following the completion of "Ruth of the Rockies," and "The Avenging Arrow," Miss Roland set out for the east, determining, also, to spend part time in Canada. She planned to spend the last Saturday and Sunday in February with L. Ernest Ouimet, of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., who sells the Pathe product in the Dominion.

At six o'clock Saturday evening, after a strenuous day devoted to granting interviews, with a few spare moments for fur shopping, she visited the General Hospital, where among the city's patients she distributed all the floral offerings received from varied sources, during the afternoon's activities. At seven, she took time to change to evening clothes, and attending thereafter, a hockey match at the Arena. Thence, to lead a special ball in her honor held at the Ritz. There were but eighteen dances on the program, not enough to permit Miss Roland to grant all who desired the honor, a dance, so during encores she changed partners and in the end had danced with twenty-three of Montreal's most prominent citizens. At four a. m. Miss Roland retired, only to be awakened at ten in the morning to enjoy a sleigh ride through Montreal, aside from all which, Miss Roland enjoyed a most peaceful rest while vacationing in Canada.

In connection with the growing movement to secure the cooperation of the educational authorities on behalf of motion pictures, comes the interesting announcement that Virginia Valli delivered an address on Fashion History to a body of students of dress design in Jacksonville. Before her engagement to play opposite Bert Lytell in "The Man Who," Miss Valli created the role of Lady Alice Pippinworth in the John S. Robertson production of "Sentimental Tommy," by Sir James Barrie. In this story, her role called for the costume of a gentlewoman of two generations ago.

When the Jacksonville teachers who had seen advance photographs of Virginia Valli in the costume of that period read of her visiting their city in connection with location work on "The Man Who," they immediately dispatched an invitation to address the local advanced class in design.

The interest of photoplayers in movement such as this along the precedent set by Virginia Valli will doubtless aid greatly in securing that friendly attitude on the part of educators toward the screen which is so desirable and essential in these days of film-baiting.

Kate Bruce, who played the mother in "Way Down East," and who also had a similar part in Thomas Meighan's Paramount picture, "The City of Silent Men," has been chosen to play the part of "Youth's" mother in the George Fitzmaurice production of "Experience" for Paramount.

The high wave of popularity, upon which Vera Gordon has ridden so consistently since her first entry into screen prominence, as Mama Kantor, in "Humoresque" has now resulted in a variety of proffered engagements for her professional activities. There is a substantial talk, which has become more than a rumor that one of her earlier theatre successes will be dramatized for the screen. At the same time Edward Locke, one of our foremost playwrights, has written a comedy-drama especially for the use of the "mother artists." Peggy Shanor, well known to the screen has temporarily forsaken picture work to play with Vera Gordon in vaudeville. Miss Shanor will be seen in a forthcoming George B. Seitz production entitled "The Sky Raiders."

Lon Chaney and Leatrice Joy, who had the leading roles in Leroy Scott's "The Night Rose," have just been cast for the principal parts in Gouverneur Morris' next original screen story, tentatively called "The Ace of Hearts," which will go into production at the Goldwyn studios soon under the direction of Wallace Worsley. Chaney will be remembered for his impersonation of the legless Blizzard in Gouverneur Morris' "The Penalty." Miss Joy had the title role in the screen version of "Bunty Pulls the Strings."

Bessie Love was the guest of honor of the Associated Motion Picture Theatres of San Francisco, when the seven day carnival was conducted under their auspices. Upon the return of the popular lady to Los Angeles, she plunged back into work on her fourth Andrew J. Callaghan offering.

The already interesting combination of John Barrymore as star and Marshal Neilan, director of "The Lotus Eaters," has acquired a third stellar name in the engagement of Anna Q. Nillson to play opposite Mr. Barrymore. Already recognized as one of the very highest leaders among the featured actresses on the American screen, Miss Nillson's presence in the coming production is not only the climax of her own career, but also an additional assurance of the extraordinary merit which this picture will doubtless possess. In this triple combination of star, director and leading woman, lies the triple anticipation of a great success. Miss Nillson, striking blonde and of acknowledged attractiveness, won her recognition for screen work by her impressive dramatic powers, her earlier picture appearances being in Famous Players and Goldwyn productions. Followed several Metro successes, "The Way of the Strong," "No Man's Land" and a series of pictures under Allan Dwan, "Soldiers of Fortune," "The Luck of the Irish," and "In the Heart of a Fool."

Composer Becomes Director

Artists from all walks of life are fast becoming affiliated with the screen, often forsaking the dreams and ambitions of a life time, for a readier success in films. Among the latest is one to step from the musical world into picture activities, Raffaele Baccellieri, who is completing at the studio of Itala of American Photoplay Corporation's studio a six reel drama entitled "Faith."

Baccellieri is both author and director of his film and has cast includes Baroness Kutusha Orlova, Frank Otto, Maude Hill, Duilio Maratzi, Margaret Grayce, Madame Acerbi, Earnest Ventrella, and Raffaele Bongini. Baccellieri is an Italian by birth, coming from Lago Maggiore, that picturesque region lying near the borderland of Switzerland.

At the age of seventeen Baccellieri was a recognized ochestra leader at Milan. He has spent, however, ten years in America. He has completed two operas "La Rendenta" and "L'Ebrea," both of which have been produced, if not to the composer's liking. While director of orchestra at Brissago at Milan and in Rome, Baccellieri was first attracted to photoplays. He acted, then, as one of the assistant directors in the making of "Quo Vadis," in Rome and other productions of the Itala Torino Company, turning, eventually to America. His first independent picture, it is said promises well and is being prepared for a trade showing.

Vignola Starts Filming of Davies' Vehicle

With "Redemption Cove" completed in every detail and ready for release by Paramount in the spring, Director Robert G. Vignola has begun the production of his first single star picture for Cosmopolitan-Paramount at the International Studios, New York.

Marion Davies will star under Mr. Vignola's direction. The vehicle is a Frank R. Adams story, "Manhandling Ethel," which was published recently in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Luther R. Reed wrote the scenario.

A light comedy-romance, "Manhandling Ethel" is the type of screen story at which Mr. Vignola seems particularly to excel. His masterful production of "Straight Is the Way" evidenced his rare gift of handling comedy, humor, and romance.

Snowy Baker to Begin Producing Shortly

Preparations are now under way for the filming of the first of the series of Snowy Baker Productions at the Selig studio. Reg. L. (Snowy) Baker, millionaire sportsman, will be the star of these pictures which will be produced by Col. Wm. N. Selig and Sam Rork. The first story has already been selected, and the cast is now being assembled. As the story is almost entirely of the outdoors and there are many locations to be found and exterior sets to be constructed, it is expected that the actual work of "shooting" will not begin for a week or two.

What the New York Dailies Said of

VIGNOLA'S

Personally Directed Special

"Straight Is the Way"

When it Played the Rivoli Theatre the Week of Feb. 20

"As diverting a piece about crooks and ladies as has come this way in a total eclipse or two. . . . with a happy treatment that distinguishes it from the thousand and one of its class."
New York Evening Post

"It is all so wholesome, so amusing and so delightfully done . . . acted by an exceptionally well chosen cast."
The Morning Telegraph

"'Straight Is the Way' is as fresh and wholesome as the clover fields near which it was apparently filmed. . . . It provides a pleasant hour's diversion."
New York Daily News

"This picture is an exceptionally interesting one of its kind—and those who sit back and enjoy a puzzler will find nothing better in filmland."
New York World

"Treated with real originality. . . . Skillful direction of Robert G. Vignola who has a special gift of putting new touches into situations."
New York Globe

"One of the most charming and atmospheric comedies shown on Broadway in many months is 'Straight is the Way.'"
New York Journal

"In acting, pictorial treatment, and in smooth flow of action, 'Straight Is the Way' proved a delightful vehicle."
New York Sun

"Robert G. Vignola who directed the production is responsible for some charming bits of light acting."
The Evening Telegram

Alan Dale says: "'Straight Is the Way' has a fascination that is quite irresistible. It is one of the very few pictures that gives you a comforting sensation of enjoyment. You bask in the pleasure of the story."
New York American

"'Straight is the Way' has some decidedly unique and clever twists that make it an extremely interesting story."
The Evening Mail

"A commendable 'control' for evoking laughter."

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

ST. LOUIS

A. S. Aronson, newly elected vice-president of Goldwyn, spent several days in St. Louis as the guest of Jack Weil. He is touring the branches in the interest of the new drive on the next group of big pictures, including "Roads of Destiny" and "The Concert."

Fay Tincher, the Pioneer comedy star, spent a week in St. Louis and made several personal appearances at the Columbia theatre.

Rumors of the sale of the Famous Players Missouri Corporation's string of St. Louis theatres are still afloat. During the past two weeks the houses have been sold to everybody from the Shubert interests to S. A. Lynch of the South. Managing Director William Goldman emphatically has denied every report which has come to his ears. "There is no sale pending," he stated. "None whatever."

Robert Werner has joined Tom Leonard's Pioneer organization as general sales manager. He will make his headquarters in St. Louis. He comes from Pathe offices.

C. D. Hill will release "Small Town Idol" early in March, according to an announcement received today.

"The Last of the Mohicans" was given a private screening in East St. Louis before 150 school teachers, under the auspices of C. D. Hill, manager of the St. Louis office of Associated Producers.

William A. Shalit, sales manager of United Artists, Inc., in St. Louis, reports a greater demand for the productions of the four stars than ever in the history of the organization. "Business is good," says Bill.

Chaplin's "The Kid," is doing great business during its third week in St. Louis. A picture that stays here more than one week must be qualified to meet every expectation of a stern audience.

PROV., R. I.

Chester Gamble, a son of Lieut. Richard Gamble, the amusement censor in this city, has been made assistant manager of the Rialto theatre.

Metro week was celebrated in this state in many theatres. To assist the project the Metro Corporation used a page advertisement in the Providence Journal on Sunday and a liberal amount of space in other papers. Pictures were shown at the Rialto, Emery, Gaiety, La Sirena, Bijou theatres in this city, and houses in Pawtucket, Newport, Woonsocket, Actic and Cranston.

NORTHERN NEW YORK

The Buffalo city council has approved the plans for a larger theatre on the site of the Oriole, Nevada- and Genesee streets. It is understood that B. Vohwinkle, who has been operating the Oriole on this site for several years, will build a house with double the capacity of the old theatre.

Sid Allen, who has operated the Millard Fillmore theatre in East Aurora, N. Y., the home of the Roycrofters, for many years, has sold the house and taken over the Delmar and Scenic theatres in Medina, N. Y. The Delmar was purchased from B. Reynolds and the Scenic from M. Kearney.

B. Benny, formerly manager of the Star theatre in Messina, N. Y., is now manager of the Linden theatre, Buffalo, one of the popular neighborhood theatres on the east side.

James Cardino, manager and owner of the Kensington theatre on Fillmore avenue, Buffalo, has closed the Glen theatre, his other house in Williamsville, N. Y., temporarily. He will re-open it in the spring.

News was received in Buffalo this week of the death of Art Schmidt's mother. Mr. Schmidt is district manager of Universal branches, with headquarters in Cleveland. He is also interested in the Central Park and Premier theatres in Buffalo.

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood theatre, Buffalo, has arrived. His success is complete. He now owns a Ford coupe, including a liability insurance policy. At this writing he still lives.

According to clippings from St. Louis newspapers, Richard C. Fox, former manager of the Buffalo Famous Players-Lasky office, figured in a sensational hold-up of the newly organized Complaint Committee of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade. Five masked robbers held up seven members in the Film Exchange building and robbed them of $937 cash, jewelry valued at $1,225 and overcoats valued at $400. Fox was the heaviest loser, according to the reports. Robbers took from him $500 in cash and a diamond pin valued at $250. Mr. Fox went to St. Louis with Select on his return from London where he was connected with the Fox Film Company. He is well known in Buffalo and Western New York.

According to letters received by Buffalo exhibitors, Buffalo is soon to have a new theatrical newspaper. It will be called "Saturday Night." Lee Heacock will be editor.

Frederick Myers, assistant manager of the Buffalo Fox exchange, has been appointed manager of the same company's exchange in Albany, succeeding Jerry Spandau.

E. C. Blakeman, formerly Buffalo Pathe manager, has joined up with Realart and will be connected with one of their Western branches.

Harry E. Lotz and a crew of seven men are touring the state rounding up Realart franchises. The Buffalo office now has 154 on its list and they are still going strong.

Frank S. Hopkins, former manager of the Buffalo Universal office, will return to town from Saranac Lake in the spring to re-enter the film business. Frank has been at Saranac for over a year for his health.

Al. Sardino of the Hippodrome, Syracuse, has become associated with Ben Fitzer Productions, Inc., with offices in the Palace Theatre building, Buffalo.

CLEVELAND

George Moore, manager of the Lion theatre, Bellevue, Ohio, opened his theatre Sunday, February 27. This will be the first Sunday show at the Lion theatre since January 1. At that time, Mr. Moore closed on Sunday in accordance with the demands of the Ministerial Association. However, he stipulated, that if the motion picture theatres in the towns surrounding Bellevue were not closed on Sunday by the first of March, he would open his house again at that time. Freemont, located near Bellvue is open on Sunday. So Moore, who has given the Ministerial Association his support and co-operation since the first of the year, will again compete with his neighbors for the Sunday motion picture business. He opened with George Beban in "One Man in a Million."

The Rotarians of Ohio, representing thirty local Rotary Clubs, will witness a private exhibition of "That Something," six-reel propaganda feature, which was endorsed by the National Convention of Rotarians in session at Atlantic City, at the New Masonic hall, on March 21. Arrangements for the showing of this picture are now being made by the Standard Film Service of Cleveland, through which the feature, released by Federal Films, is being handled. "That Something" has just concluded a phenomenally successful three weeks' engagement at the Victoria theatre, Los Angeles, where it also received the support and endorsement of the California Rotarians.

J. F. Tallman, manager of the Victoria theatre, Steubenville, was in Cleveland last week. Tallman says the Victoria came across in splendid fashion for the Hoover relief campaign. "We turned over $115.35 to the fund," Mr. Tallman told, "as the receipts in full for the Washington Birthday morning matinee special, with a maximum admission of fifteen cents."

The program for the Hoover benefit matinees was furnished gratis through the courtesy of the Cleveland office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and the personal support of Fred Walters, exploitation manager out of the Cleveland exchange. The program consisted of William S. Hart in "Shark Monroe," "Fatty" Arbuckle in "The Garage," and "Let Her Go," a Mack Sennett comedy.

The Cleveland Famous Players-Lasky office furnished in excess of twenty programs to exhibitors in this territory for use in connection with the Hoover fund, free of charge.

P. A. Block arrived in Cleveland last week to take over the management of the Cleveland office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, following the appointment of H. E. Elder, former branch manager, to a position of responsibility in the home office of the company. Mr. Block is not a stranger to Cleveland and Cleveland exhibitors. He was one time manager of the local Goldwyn exchange. He was more recently managerof the Chicago office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

DETROIT

The new Strand theatre in Pontiac opened recently with "The Great Redeemer." It is part of the Kleist chain of houses, seats 1,000 and is modern in every respect.

Nathan Miller, proprietor of the Barnard theatre on Chene street, was held up Monday on his way to the bank, and robbed of $350, his Sunday receipts. A Buick roadster with curtains drawn, drew up to the curb and two men, one of whom held a revolver, searched him, took the money and got away safely.

H. A. Ross, division manager for Paramount, is now in Florida where he will spend several weeks with his family.

Frank Sayles, of the Lion theatre, Muskegon, has organized a company to build theatres through the state. The first town selected is Albion with Hillsdale and Coldwater to follow.

W. S. Butterfield's new Strand theatre in Lansing opens on April 1.

Jess Fishman of Standard, has been elected president of the Detroit Board of Motion Picture Exchange managers, George Sampson, of Pathe, vice-president and Joe Friedman, Universal, treasurer.

CINCINNATI

The Romell Film Company of this city, is soon to begin distribution of a series of fairy films, made primarily for children, but with an adult appeal as well. The films are made by the Wholesome Films Company, of Chicago, and the roles are enacted by children only.

Among the more notable of these productions are "Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star," in five reels, with Zoe Ray, together with a cast of 150 children; "Cinderella and the Magic Slipper," a four-reel subject; and "Little Red Riding Hood," featuring Mary Burton. The latter is an up-to-date version of the well-known fairy tale, and with the exception of the characters of the mother and grandmother, the entire cast of 350 members is made up of children.

"Lying Lips," the Thos. H. Ince feature, has proved such a success that McMahan and Jackson, owners of the Gifts theatre, have decided to hold it over for a third week. Attendance for the two weeks ran close to 42,000, and it is still packing the lobbies every afternoon and evening. Only "The Birth of a Nation" and "Mickey" have ever run more than two weeks in a downtown Cincinnati theatre.

Nathan and Max Ascher, Chicago theatre managers, were in Cincinnati during the past week looking over their new house at Seventh and Vine streets. They were accompanied by Ed. L. Nikodem, who is to be the resident manager of the new Capitol theatre. A conference was held in regard to the opening of the theatre, and while no definite date was agreed upon, owing to condition of the structural work on the inside of the building, everything possible will be done to permit of the opening on March 17. Manager Nikodem will settle permanently in Cincinnati, as he was recently wedded to Miss Violet Howard, a young Chicago society girl.

NEW ORLEANS

Charles A. Meade, one of the most successful film exchange managers in the industry, it is said, was in New Orleans last week completing arrangements whereby he is to take over the management of the J. Eugene Pearce Exchange in Atlanta where the marked success of the independent releasing of motion picture subjects has duplicated the New Orleans branch of this service.

H. J. Hermann of Pearce Films, was in Memphis last week completing arrangements for the entire release program of Pearce films to be shown in Pantages' new vaudeville house in that city.

The new Orpheum theatre, a vaudeville house costing a little less than a million dollars and completed only about a month ago, will not operate during the summer as it was first announced would be done. The Orpheum officials probably discovered that they were going to close houses in other cities and would have no summer circuit. The house will close the middle of May, it was announced last week by Martin Beck, president, who was in New Orleans, coming from Palm Beach, Fla., with his family and Mort Singer, manager of the circuit. The party is to go from New Orleans to New York via St. Louis. Kanasas City and Chicago. Mr. Beck said the Orpheum would remain open all next year.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to November 20, 1920.

"Redemption story carries little appeal and is badly overacted."—M. P. News.

BREAKING POINT, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) BESSIE BARRISCALE.....FEB. 5
"More than a vehicle—a well-sustained marital drama."—M. P. News.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS (PARAMOUNT) ROSCOE ARBUCKLE...FEB. 5
"What the public has been waiting for from Fatty."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Sure-fire winner. Pleased the audiences immensely. Box office returns much larger than usual." "Good comedy bringing the usual business." "This is a splendid picture and went over big with our audience. Played to large business for one week."

BROADWAY BUBBLE, THE (VITAGRAPH) CORINNE GRIFFITH.....NOV. 27
"Corinne Griffith does excellent work in dual role."—M. P. News.
"Did better than average business at two first-run houses simultaneously. Just melodramatic enough to attract, and not too emotional, so as to offend." "Opened big and kept up big all week. A picture that pleased everybody because it is logical."

BROKEN GATE, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) BESSIE BARRISCALE.....JAN. 1
"Sob sister story is highly theatrical."—M. P. News.

BUNTY PULLS THE STRINGS (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 15
"Fine production given famous stage comedy."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Dandy little story to this one. Pleased my patrons and kept me packing 'em in. Almost a record-breaker." "Too fragmentary to please majority of patrons. Artistically done, however." "A very good production, splendidly acted and mounted, but which did not seem to attract average business."

CHARM SCHOOL, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) WALLACE REID.....JAN. 1
"Wallace Reid has another winner here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitors Comment.—"Fine picture, pleasing, entertaining, and brought good business." "Wallace Reid went over big in this picture. Our patrons thought it was one of the best of this popular star's productions. Played to excellent business the week preceding New Year's." "We consider this one of the best box office attractions we have ever played. Did exceptional business during its run at this house and is an excellent picture." "Very good picture, full of entertaining points. Did good business." "One of the most pleasing pictures we have ever shown. Business was very good." "Good enough for a second week holdover. Business extra good both weeks. Best Wallace Reid picture ever seen." "Certainly good. Business fine all week. Audiences well pleased." "Very good picture which held down big business for a week." "Very good. Good business for entire week."

"William Russell has an entertaining crook picture here."—M. P. News

CINDERELLA'S TWIN (METRO) VIOLA DANA.....JAN. 1
"Just misses being very commonplace."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This little star always draws well for me, and this was not as clever as 'The Chorus Girl's Romance,' business was almost as good. Consider it a good business-getter." "Fairly entertaining and patrons were pleased. Good business."

CITY SPARROW, A (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) ETHEL CLAYTON.....DEC. 4
"Weak in drama, but strong in sentiment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened with usual audiences, but business grew last few days and it went over big." "Mediocre picture lifted from mediocrity by good acting of Ethel Clayton and by splendid direction." "When I put out a poster advertising Ethel Clayton, I sit back and wait for the money to roll in—for she is one of the biggest favorites here on the paramount list. This is one of her weaker stories, but it went over in great shape." "Two days to average business."

"Rather frail but fairly amusing."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fine production which seemed to please and brought fine business." "Not as good as some of Miss Talmadge's previous vehicles, but satisfying." "A good picture and brought more than usual business." "This sure did go over big and deserved it for it's an interesting picture throughout." "Picture brought fine business. Very entertaining." "This one went over big and the box-office showed large receipts. Just seemed to bring 'em in, and they were well pleased with it." "Went over well, as is always the case with a Talmadge picture in my house. Some of the older folks thought it went a little too far in some scenes, and others frankly characterized it as 'raw.' But it got the money, and that's the acid test, I suppose." "One of Constance Talmadge's best and went over big at this house. Did splendid business for week."

DEVIL, THE (ASSO.-EXHIB.-PATHE) GEORGE ARLISS.....JAN. 29
"Very artistic with Arliss superb in his screen debut."—M. P. News.

Loew's State Theatre Offers Music Program to Waiting Patrons

Lobby to Be Supplied with Music, Books and Other Similar Features

LOEW'S new State theatre, Euclid Avenue at East 14th Street, which was tendered a royal opening on ebruary 5, takes its place as one of ıe three largest motion picture houses f the country, but is surpassed by none ı beauty, comfort, design and extravaance of decoration.

Immediately upon entering the lobby, ne is struck by the gorgeousness of the uilding. The lobby, 45 ft. wide by 180 . deep, is the largest in the entire United tates. Not content with having obtaine stinction in size, Architect Thomas amb provided a series of surprises in e lobby. As, for instance, the series o ıge walnut pillars, capped with gold; the hite marble wainscoting; the beautifull ined marble fire place, in front of which brilliant hued parrot of ancient family, olds court before a large crowd of adirers; mural paintings of bright colors, l allegorical in theme, and the marvelous hite marble staircase which rises from ther side of the lobby to the artistically rnished mezzanine floor, where tea is rved every afternoon between two clock and half past four, by two pretty aids.

There is an orchestra in the lobby—mething altogether new to Cleveland otoplay fans. A 'cello, a harp and a olin offer divertissement to the patrons ıo like to stroll around the lobby and ok at the art objects that were brought om all parts of the world. Manager orge Dumont, who was brought from e Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, to take charge of the State theatre, says he has several plans for the lobby, which will be put into practice next week. Dumont is having four large tables made for the lobby. On these tables he will keep all the latest fashion books, for the ladies to look at. Also, he will supply stationery for the use of his patrons. Dumont is going about it to make the State theatre the rendezvous for shoppers.

Leaded glass casement doors open the way to the auditorium of the State theatre, where four thousand people can be seated at one time. The tone of the auditorium is Italian red. The walls are panelled in red brocade velvet. The floor is covered with a heavy red velvet carpet. Whatever wall decoration is plain, is of a light shade of cafe au lait. The red is relieved by splashes of black and gold, with a touch of light blue in the ceiling.

The State theatre is supplied with a stage thirty-five feet deep and a hundred feet wide, allowing the presentation of a big spectacle, if required.

There is a three-way lighting system installed in this new million-dollar theatre, similar to the one installed in Loew's Park theatre, which was opened just two weeks prior to the State. This system gives five distinct shades, and is used to produce lights which synchronize with the music. They appear under the balcony in elaborate sunburst effect.

Approved ventilation is assured with the installation of blowers on each side of the building, at the floor line, which feeds fresh air by means of a duct system, to the theatre, and exhaust fans at the ceiling line, which suck out the used and impure air at all times. Sanitation has been looked after with the complete vacuum system installed, electrically controlled, to all parts of the building.

Two ladies' rest rooms and two men's club rooms are supplied with all the luxury and comfort of the finest hotel or club.

An innovation of considerable interest to patrons is the fact that the State theatre has two box offices where tickets may be purchased, instead of one. Two cashiers are in constant attendance at each box office, which does away with a long line of patrons waiting to buy tickets.

Another innovation is the entree to the balcony. The balcony of the State theatre may be reached either from the foyer, or from the auditorium. The wide marble staircase of the lobby leads to the second floor. There is also a second set of grand stair cases from the auditorium, which likewise lead to the balcony. The benefits to be derived from this are manifold and evident.

Forty-five exits, all numbered, and electrically lighted, assure the patrons of the State theatre complete safety in case of emergency. But added assurances of safety were provided by supplying each exit with a separate and distinct fire escape. Under stress, the State theatre could be completely evacuated in about three minutes.

Ventilation—What It Is; Why Nec essary and How It Is Done

Particularly From the Standpoint of the Theatre Manager and Owne

By Henry D. Nathan

What is meant by ventilation and what is its purpose?

The Standard Dictionary defines it as follows: "Ventilation is the process of producing free circulation of air in, as by means of open shafts, windows, doors, etc., so as to displace foul air with pure." This definition is a very good one, yet it does not entirely cover the ground.

Ventilation is used in a theatre solely for the purpose of making and keeping the audience comfortable. In summer and in the warm climates, ventilation may do this alone, but in cold weather not only must the air be changed frequently but it must also be warmed in order that the theatre be free from drafts and the audience comfortable.

Ventilate in Winter as Well as in Summer

Too often do we find theatre proprietors who believe in ventilation in summer but who say it is almost or entirely unnecessary in winter. The writer believes that the expressed opinion is often only the result of the knowledge that it is more expensive to ventilate in winter than in summer because of the coal used to heat the cold entering air. There is no doubt that ventilation is absolutely as unnecessary in winter as in summer.

As we said before, ventilation is for the purpose of keeping the audience comfortable and the air which they breathe healthful. Let us therefore examine the subject with the idea of finding out what it is that makes for comfort and health.

Low Carbon Dioxide Content Not the Most Important

Until but a few years ago we believed that for health and comfort we must keep the air comparatively free from carbon dioxide. This is a gas which is formed in the lungs as we breathe—being driven out as we exhale. It is formed from the oxidation of the body tissues and is exactly the same gas as is formed when wood, gas or any animal or vegetable matter burns. If there were more than 8 parts in 10,000 parts of air which we were breathing we thought the air unfit, unclean and unhealthy—the air of outdoors averages about 4 parts in 10,000. In a sense we were more or less right, but carbon dioxide has been found to be not the most vital thing.

Humidity, Odor and Air Motion Require Most Attention

Much more important than carbon dioxide is the subject of humidity, odor and air motion. The first and last of these are most important and if maintained correctly will prevent foul and objectionable odors in a theatre. Such odors usually indicate the presence of germs, floating particles of waste matter from the lungs and large quantities of dust from off clothing and shoes of the occupants.

What Is Humidity

Ordinarily air has a tendency to absorb water vapor and will do so up to the point where it can hold no more. When this occurs it is said to be saturated and to have 100 per cent humidity. The less water it contains the lower its humidity and the greater the tendency for water in its presence to evaporate. Also the warmer the air the more water it will absorb. Winter air is especially dry when heated. Where it is not necessary to cool the persons of the audience by evaporation this very dry air is objectionable. For this reason air washers, as described later on, are valuable in winter because they relieve this dry condition—in summer they cool entering air.

Now every person's body is giving off water through the pores of the skin and in much greater quantities giving off water vapor in the breath as it leaves the lungs. To be cool and comfortable the water on our body surfaces has to be evaporated, it did not we would be uncomfortab particularly in summer.

It is therefore necessary to keep t humidity of the air at such a point—a remember the water vapor from o lung is continually raising it—that t surface water or perspiration will be eva orated and the odors carried off with and removed from the room. Too dry a is bad because it affects the nose a throat, while too high a humidity preven the evaporation just mentioned.

Air Motion and Its Effect

Evaporation of this water is increase by a decided motion of air over our bodie That is why air motion is so enjoyab and still air so objectionable. Even thou a summer breeze be warm as measured b a thermometer we will welcome it a feel cool if it is fairly low in humidi and capable of evaporating perspiratio —it will feel much cooler than it mea ures on the thermometer.

With these thoughts in mind we ca now more fully appreciate why ventilatio is necessary for theatre or buildings whe many people are closely associated f several hours in a closed room.

The Chair Cover and Its Place in the Regular Equipment of the Theatr

Reasons for Using Them and Suggestions for Getting the Best Results from Their Use

SUMMER with its hot sultry days, there is an expected falling off in theatre patronage. People who have been steady patrons of the theatre look to some other source of amusement in the outside air, where conditions are more favorable and inviting than within. But capable and alert managers have discovered means whereby this patronage may not be wholly lost. One of these methods lies in the altering of the theatre's interior, with the idea of making it SUMMERY, COOL, ATTRACTIVE AND HEALTHFUL. The simple means of accomplishing this and securing the desired effect is by the use of theatre chair covers.

It is only recently that chair covers have been extensively used in theatres; no doubt one of the causes for the backwardness has been the common belief that they were an expensive proposition. This is not so, especially when considered from the point of view of economy; although the first cost of chair covers may seem beyond the means of the manager, h should consider the fact that they will las him from five to six years, or more, an by dividing the total cost of the covers b the years during which they will be use it will be found that the cost will prob ably be less than one cent per week pe chair, if the covers are used five month during the year, and correspondingly les if used through twelve months.

The cost for laundering is not hig as all perfect fit theatre chair covers ar manufactured reversible. The Circl Theatre, Indianapolis, has a seating capa city of 2,900, and all the chairs ar equipped with chair covers. Mr. S. Bar rett McCormick, former manager of th Circle, reported a cost of about 1½c. pe cover, and in his case he found it neces sary to have them laundered but once season, due to the reversible feature.

The Chair Cover as Regular Equipment

is seen from this that the upkeep is a trivial item.

When this small sum is compared with the increased patronage, drawn by the inviting atmosphere of the altered interior, there is little argument for the manager to hesitate in purchasing theatre chair covers.

During the Summer season of 1920 more chair covers were installed than ever before, and 1921 will far outstrip the records of last year. So well has the manager of the Circle been satisfied with the performance of his first set of covers, that he has ordered two other sets for use during other seasons of the year.

There are two distinct applications of chair covers; one of them is for the purpose of representing the parts to coincide with the climatic conditions, the other is for the purpose of covering up the sad dilapidated parts of the old scarred chairs. In the last instance, wonderful results have been accomplished with the minimum of expense. Theatres that first lost their drawing power because of the unsightly appearances of the chair backs and upholstery, have been brought back to the public favor through the judicious application of chair covers.

There are several points that should be considered in ordering or selecting chair covers. For one thing the prospective purchaser should remember that auditorium and balcony chairs, as a rule, require two distinct and different styles of chair covers. The auditorium chair should be equipped with a cover which covers the entire chair back, while, on the other hand, the balcony chair cover should have only a "quarter back"; the reason for the latter lies in the treatment accorded to balcony chairs because of the slope on which they are placed.

There is still to be considered a most important point if the purchaser is to be satisfied; he should be aware of the fact that chairs of the same appearance vary somewhat in size. If the chair covers are to be a good fit, last long and look well, they should be made to fit each individual size of chair back. This may seem difficult at first, especially in the case of houses of large capacity, but it is essential to success, convenience of handling and satisfaction. A plan has been worked out which has simplified this measure of the seats, and it has proven accurate and has removed the tediousness of other methods.

Many instances have come to our attention where managers in ordering chair covers measured one chair and ordered covers of the one size for the entire seating capacity. You can appreciate the disastrous results of such an order, for when the covers were ready to be installed they found that only a part of them would fit. In one instance a manager of a 750 seat house in ordering covers measured one chair and ordered 750 of that size. He would have been in the same predicament had his order been filled without further investigation. Knowing the variation in chair widths, a "Simplified Instruction Sheet" used for this purpose was mailed the manager, and its return found that out of the 750 seats, 110 were the size ordered. Because of this care the manager in question is now boasting of the appearance of his house, as every one of his covers is perfect in fit and tailored to the design of his chair, and fitting each respective size.

So much for the advantage to be gained from the use of well-made covers; when the largest theatre chains specify their use for all their theatres, it has proven that they are a necessity and not a luxury. The progressive manager will seize upon this essential improvement as one of the easiest ways to hold his patronage during the hot summer months, and the returns will justify his investment. "CHAIR COVERS" have come, and are helping to make the sign of a quality theatre. The following are a few of the largest circuit houses that are now using theatre chair covers: Marcus Loew, B. F. Keith, F. F. Proctor, Shubert Theatrical Enterprises, Rolin & Clark, Ashur Brothers, Jones, Lincoln & Shafer, S. L. Lynch Enterprises, Sanger Amusement Company.

Ventilation and How Is Done

Summer Weather Calls For Bo Ventilation and Cooling

Because of the fact that in summer it purely a cooling proposition it is usua necessary to supply more fresh air to theatre during those months than in wi ter. In some theatres this may even c for fans large enough to change the enti air in the auditorium once every minu during the summer and with the sa equipment restrict the quantity of fre air to 25 or 30 cu. ft. per min. p person during the winter. Such a syste requires very large fans of immen capacity but because of the fact that th are usually installed in pent houses on t roof with minimum sheet metal duct wo they are quite cheap to install. Howev larger electric motors are required a cost of operation is often 3 to 5 tim what it is with another type of syste described later on.

Typhoon System

A system such as this, often called typhoon system, usually blows fresh a in through one or two openings in the ce ing or at least very high up on the walls the foul air most often being allowed escape through the entrance doors. Du ing the winter months the entering air reduced in quantity and passed throug Vento stacks or other heating coils b fore being blown into the theatre. Se eral objections, which may or may not l justified to this type of system is the fact that it may be noisy, create such a rapid movement of air as to cause drafts, etc., (particularly below where it enters) and the tendency at times to cause foul smelling, tepid aid to be blown into the faces of waiting people in the lobby every time the doors are opened.

Duct Systems

Perhaps a more common method of ventilating a theatre is to use less air in summer and not depend upon the rather strong motion of air to produce a cooling effect upon the audience. In winter either system uses the same quantity of air. Such a system consists of more parts, is more complicated and necessarily more costly to install, but it has compensating features, such as better distribution of air, cleaner air, freedom from objectionable drafts, less noise and much less operating cost.

In this method of ventilation the entering air usually passes (about the same amount winter or summer) through a tempering coil first to raise its temperature above freezing, then through a spray and scrubber chamber to wash it free from dust, and then through other Vento heaters to raise it to the desired temperature. Of course in summer the heat is not turned on in these heaters. The air from such an arrangement enters the theatre free from dust and dirt and in summer at a decidedly lower temperature than outdoors. In dry climates this cooling is much more decided than in more moist ones.

Other Methods of Cooling Air

However, in many of the most modern theatres the air is cooled by either passing it through a spray of very cold water or by passing it through coils filled with some refrigerating material—the coils acting just the reverse of a heating coil. It might be well to point out here that although an air washer is installed the theatre will still need cleaning as the air gets dusty from the dirt brought in on the clothes and shoes of the patrons.

Where Fresh Air Is Admitted

In such systems the air is best admitted to the theatre through openings underneath the seats, the usual temperature in winter being 60 to 65°. Automatic thermostats controling the temperature of this entering air are located at suitable points in the auditorium. Coming in at very slow speed no drafts are created, yet the air passes up over the bodies of the audience and escapes through registers in the ceiling or side walls. This is the ideal system and has been used most successfully in theatres of all sizes.

Where for structural reasons it is impossible to get the air to the mushroom ventilators under the seats, fresh air is often admitted at the front of the theatre —or rear—and drawn off at the other end higher up. This is sometimes reversed—often the system is made reversible—and the air admitted high up and exhausted at the floor. Where the downward system of ventilation is used it may be necessary to provide other means for heating than this fresh hot air since several state laws permit downward ventilation but prohibit downward heating.

In theatres ventilated by any of the foregoing methods but little direct radiation is needed in the theatre itself, usually only enough being placed near the entering doors to warm any cold air which might enter at these points.

Simpler Systems Often Satisfactory

In many small theatres it seems hardly necessary or economically advisable to install any of these more elaborate—although more efficient—systems. In such cases a fairly satisfactory one can be installed at little expense. Exhaust fans usually of the propeller type are placed high up in the walls of the theatre and as far away from the entrance doors as is possible. Fresh air—warmed in winter by large radiators in the lobby—enters through the doors, which doors should be provided with grilled openings through which the air can pass when the doors a closed. This fresh air then passes throu the auditorium, around and about the pe ple and then out through the fans.

Such a theatre is usually heated by w type radiators placed along the side wal etc., as the entering air will not be war enough to keep the audience comfortab One objection to such a system is the lik lihood of the outer doors being left ope

Problems to Consider in Ventilation

N the installation of the Typhoon Cooling System one of the most important features to be considered, in order to get the desired results, is the size and location of the grills, or opening into the theatre through which the air passes before reaching the audience. No two theatres are constructed exactly alike, therefore, the problems of the Typhoon Engineering staff are entirely different with regard to the grill work, on each theatre job. It is an easy matter, however, to overcome any difficulties which may at first seem impossible to the theatre owner as the Typhoon System is so constructed that it can readily be installed in any size theatre, old or new.

Installations are usually made on the roof, although if the construction of the theatre does not allow for this arrangement, there are other locations such as the attic space, or in a room above the stage, or auditorium. There is still one more location that has in many instances proved very satisfactory, and this one is on the outside wall of the theatre near the screen.

No matter where the installation is made, it is necessary to construct the grill work, which also must be placed in its proper relation with respect to the audience.

Powers at Four Horsemen Premier

Great importance is attached to premier performances these days in order that the production may get a proper send off, and leaders in the motion picture industry, as well as those prominent in the social, political and commercial world, are invited to attend. The Four Horsemen has been announced as a "Million Dollar Picturization" with a "premier unprecedented in the annals of motion pictures." The production details includes such interesting items as a "million dollar production—six months in the making—twelve thousand persons employed—one hundred twenty-five thousand tons of steel, lumber and masonry used and five hundred thousand feet of film exposed."

The accounts of the premier presentation tell of the attendance of ambassadors, millionaires, editors, artists, professors and others noted nationally and internationally. The trade journals said, regarding this presentation: "A presentation of superlative distinction under the personal supervision of Hugo Riesenfeld, Managing Director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres.." It seems probable that some of the details of the preliminary preparations for the projection of a premier presentation of "superlative distinction" might be of interest to exhibitors and projectionists.

After Dr. Riesenfeld had agreed to supervise this presentation Will C. Smith, General Manager of the Nicholas Power Company, was asked to make arrangements for the projection and to supply Powers Projectors. Dr. Riesenfeld and his personal staff, Harry Rubin, Chief Projectionist, and J. La Rose, Production Manager, cooperating with Mr. Smith and his assistants arranged and supervised all the details of the installation and projection in the Lyric. The Lyric is one of New York's noted Broadway playhouses. For premier presentations it is customary to use large public halls or theatres not regularly equipped for the showing of films, and the Lyric comes under this classification. After the close of the house on Saturday night skilled workmen began placing the booth and in this, as all other details of the installation, the exact requirements of the fire and building departments were carefully observed. There is a multitude of rules, regulations and permits for installations, and all of these must be carefully attended to.

After placing the booth two new 6B type "E" projectors were installed. Projectionists know that installations take considerable time and great experience if the job is done properly. It must be done properly. The reputation of all concerned is too largely involved and the expense incurred has been too great to allow for any mishap. All Saturday night and all Sunday the entire force worked and tested their work. When Sunday night came the Lyric filled with notables, invited guests and the public, paying $10.00 a seat to see a motion picture play. Dr. Riesenfeld's assistants, Mr. Rubin and Mr. Rose, with the help of the Nicholas Power Company had completed all arrangements. The projectionists did their work well and the performance may be described as a real success. The premier performance of the Four Horsemen justified the preliminary announcement that this would be a presentation of superlative distinction. Dr. Riesenfeld, Mr. Rubin, Mr. Rose and Mr. Smith of the Nicholas Power Company are all to be congratulated.

Famous Players' Expert Visits Simplex Plant

Among the visitors at the "Home of the Simplex" during the past week, was Mr. Earl J. Denison, the official Projection and Film Engineer of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, who made a most thorough trip through this interesting plant, with Mr. E. M. Porter, General Manager of the Precision Machine Co.

Mr. Denison, who for two years has been charged with the duty of introducing and installing a standardized system of film inspection, repairing, projection and handling throughout the 30 domestic exchanges of the Famous Players Company, has made an exhaustive survey of the film damages and their origin with the result that after a 12 months' study of possible remedies, the Distributing Division of the Famous Players Company adopted the system of standardization now followed by Mr. Denison.

It might be of interest to note that all of the Famous Players exchanges controlled directly by that company, are Simplex equipped, which standardizes exchange projection throughout. For film inspection and repairing, a standardization of the splicing methods through special machines, as well as a uniform kind of cement, is followed out. This means that a Paramount film, wherever used, will contain the same sort of film patches or "splices," thereby doing away with the old method of patching according to the individual ideas of hundreds of film inspectors, each of whom made a different kind of "splice," which "splice" invariably made itself known through the passing of the film through the projector.

Mr. Denison has had a great deal of experience while doing over-sea duty for the Community Film Company, and is now preparing for a six months' period of studio projection analyzing, whereby he hopes to eliminate many of the reasons that today contribute toward the rejection of studio prints, for reasons other than inherent photographic ones, hence his visit to the Simplex plant, and consequent study of studio projection.

Many Agents Appointed by Newman

With the object in view of rendering better service to exhibitors interested in the improvement of their present hobby displays the Newman Manufacturing Co., of Cincinnati, has been appointing agents who will reach the smaller cities and towns.

Beginning at once the State of Kansas will be covered by Harold E. Roach, with headquarters in Wichita. The White Equipment Co., of Bristol, Tenn., will handle eastern Tennessee and the western portion of Virginia.

E. A. Fawcett will take care of West Virginia as heretofore. The Buhler Co., of Columbus, Ga., will continue to cover their present territory.

F. E. Naser will act as representative in Richmond, Roanoke and other points in Virginia along the Atlantic Coast.

In addition, the Newman folks announce, arrangements have been completed for the display of their fixtures in the showrooms of all leading dealers in theatre equipment.

Photoplayer for Palm Theatre, Pueblo

Approximately $40,000 was expended in the renovation and remodeling of the Palm theatre, Pueblo, Colo., to make it the most attractive in this city. The institution of a nursery with maid service, located in the theatre, has been especially attractive to mothers and has made the Palm theatre the family theatre of Pueblo.

The Robert Morton Organ is played by Mr. Leo K. Kindig and Gordon M. Roberts, which assures splendid musical talent in this territory. The instrument is played from 11 o'clock in the morning until 11 o'clock at night, having displaced a large orchestra. The photographs show the small entrance on Fourth Street and the large entrance on Santa Fe Avenue.

There are 700 seats in the auditorium, 250 seats in the balcony and 50 loges. The projection room is equipped with two of the latest type projection machines and a spot light.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

A Study of the Reflection Characteristics of Projection Screens

By Lloyd A. Jones and Milton F. Fillius

In the past a Screen has been a Screen and not much else. It has taken Messrs. Jones and Fillius in their paper printed below which was delivered originally before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to identify the absolute characteristics of motion picture screens. This paper is the most helpful that has come to our attention this year.

When it is considered that the enjoyment of the entertainment offered in the motion picture theatre depends almost entirely upon the visual organs, it will be recognized that the importance of providing conditions which will result in the least possible visual fatigue to the audience cannot be overestimated. There are many factors which deserve the consideration of the motion picture engineer in order that the maximum of visual comfort may be obtained, among which may be mentioned the proper distribution of the interior illumination, the elimination of excessively bright surfaces in the field of vision, and the proper adjustment of the screen brightness. The fact that the attention of the audience must remain fixed for long periods of time upon the projected picture makes it of utmost importance that the projecting system be so adjusted that the screen brightness is neither so high as to cause visual fatigue due to glare, nor so low as to throw an undue burden upon the retinal accommodation.

The optical properties of the surface upon which the motion picture is projected determines to a great extent the ultimate efficiency of the entire installation, and hence should receive due consideration at the hands of the motion picture engineer. While there is no doubt that this is recognized, and that considerable improvement in the quality of projection screens has been made in recent years, it seem that the subject has been approached largely from the practical standpoint and that little quantitative data are available relative to the optical characteristics of the materials used so extensively at the present time.

In view of this deficiency, it seemed worth while to examine critically the reflection properties of the large number of commercial screens on the market. From the data obtained by such examination, it will be a relatively simple matter to choose the most efficient screen surface for a given installation. An examination of the commercial screens obtained showed a remarkable variation in reflection characteristics, ranging from surfaces which almost completely diffuse the incident light to screens of a very specular nature, having very high reflecting powers on the projection axis and very low values in directions departing by relatively small amounts from the normal. When the question of adapting the screen to the shape of the room in which it is to be used is considered, it will be seen that it is quite hopeless to obtain in all cases the maximum efficiency with a screen of fixed characteristics.

For instance, if the length of the room is large relative to its width, a screen of the completely diffusing type is very wasteful of light, and the necessary screen brightness can be obtained over the required angle by the use of a screen which reflects a large proportion of the incident light within a comparatively narrow angle, thus permitting the use of lower amperage in the arc of the projection machine. On the other hand, a screen of the specular type installed in a room where the length is relatively small as compared with the width will not be found satisfactory. Since the screen in this case may be viewed by a part of the audience at a relatively large angle, it will be necessary to use a high arc current in order to make the picture of satisfactory brightness for these observers. This will result in an unnecessarily high brightness on the axis of projection and may result in excessive visual fatigue owing to glare. It should be pointed out also in case the throw is somewhat short that a highly specular screen may appear of unequal brightness when viewed from a single point of observation, since the angle of incidence varies from point to point on the screen, and that for an observer relatively near to the screen the angle of observation is not constant for all parts of the picture.

The problem of measuring and specifying the characteristics of diffusing surfaces has been treated by Dr. Nutting[1] and results on several characteristic surfaces are given. The data given, however, relate almost entirely to miscellaneous surfaces, only two commercial screens being included among the materials examined by him. Recently a paper by Charles W. Gamble[2] has appeared in which he deals with the subject in a more or less general way. Here again the data given relate largely to surfaces which are not extensively used in the motion picture theatre. His results are of a qualitative character and the highest efficiency obtained is that of a mirror ground on the front surface.

Method and Apparatus

The method adopted in this investigation is quite similar to that used by other investigators and consists in measuring the brightness of the surface under examination when viewed at various angles of observation, the illumination being incident normally upon the screen surface. The incident illumination in this case was approximately parallel light, such conditions being considered as more closely approaching those existing in practice than the method used by Dr. Nutting in which case a completely diffused source subtending 1/10 of a steradian at the surface was used. In order to expedite the experimental work which involved the examination of a large number of samples, a special goniophotometer was constructed. A diagram showing the essential parts of this instrument is shown in Fig. 1.

A heavy cast-iron base, A, supports the arm B, at the end of which is carried the photometric apparatus. In order that the observer and the photometric equipment might not interfere with the illumination of the sample at angles approaching closely to the normal, the axis of observation was bent at right angles by use of the total reflecting prism C. A portable photometer of the illuminometer type was mounted at D, and the small lens E placed immediately in front of this photometer permitted the formation of an image of the surface under examination in the plane of the photometer cube. In case the texture of the surface was such as to interfere with precise photometric settings, this lens could be displaced by amounts sufficient to eliminate the disagreeable surface texture. A rigid bearing E supported by the base casting carries a movable arm G on one end of which is mounted the lamp house H, while at the other end a counterpoise weight I is placed. A holder is provided for the sample at J, this is so mounted that it holds the surface of the samples being examined in the plane passing through the axis of rotation of the arm G. The circular plate K is mounted in a fixed position relative to base A. A pointer attached to the sample holder indicates the angle on the divided circle. By means of a pin M the sample holder can be connected rigidly with the moving arm G, so that the plane of the sample will remain perpendicular to the incident illuminating for all positions, and as the arm G is rotated the angle of observation alone varies. This provides for the measurement of the surface brightness at various angles of observation and fixed direction of illumination. By removing the pin M, and clamping the sample holder to the base, A, the arm G moves independently of the sample, and observations of brightness at a fixed angle of observation, but with a variable angle of incidence can be made. In the front of the lamp house is mounted a lens O of such focal length that the source S falls at its focus. Under such conditions the light incident on the sample is approximately parallel. The dimensions of importance are as indicated in the figure. It is also arranged that the lens O can be removed and in its place substituted a disk of diffusing material such as ground pot opal glass.

The dimensions are so adjusted that the effective area of this diffusing material is just sufficient to subtend an angle of 0.1 steradians at the surface of the sample under examination. A 500-watt Mazda C lamp of the concentrated filament type was used as a source for illuminating the samples. A photograph of the apparatus is shown in Fig 2. The voltage was precisely controlled in order to eliminate variations in brightness due to fluctuations in the line voltage. Brightness measurements were made at angles of observation from 0 to 70°. Three complete sets of readings were made by two observers on each screen, and the final result obtained by taking the average of all readings. In practically all cases excellent agreement between the individual sets of data was obtained.

The results are expressed in terms of the reflecting power of magnesium carbonate with normal illumination and observation as 100%. The absolute value of the reflecting power of magnesium carbonate is at the present time subject to some question and in view of that fact it was not deemed advisable to attempt to reduce the measurements of screen reflecting powers to absolute terms. The values given are therefore relative to that of magnesium carbonate. When a satisfactory value for this material is determined that data can then be reduced to absolute terms, if such seems desirable.

Precision Official Away on Honeymoon

WITH E. S. Porter's famous Rolls-Royce car, used as a wedding conveyance, and with historic Tarrytown in Sleepy Hollow as a setting, and far removed from Greenwich Village, whose inhabitants truly mourn the going of their "Mayor," William C. Francke, Advertising and Publicity Manager of the Simplex Company, was married on Sunday afternoon last.

The bride, who was Miss Ester Schram, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Schram of Atlantic City and Manhattan, is well known in the younger musical circles, and but recently finished her education at Villa Maria Academy of Frazer, Pa.

"Billy" Francke has long been a well known figure in Simplex distributing circles, and prior to his coming to Manhattan several years ago, was a well-known Boston, labor leader, politician, political writer and also editor of the famous "Boston Bean Pot." A several years' cruise on one of New Bedford's historic whaling ships can well be included in Francke's very active life, while in nearly every town of consequence in Massachusetts, his electioneering stories and oratory have been heard in behalf of every Democratic gubernatorial candidate in the past ten years, which resulted in an offer by political leaders of a deputyship in the Internal Revenue Service, which he declined.

As legislative agent for various theatrical unions in different New England states for six years, he greatly added to his acquaintanceship in theatrical circles, while as manager of the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, he quickly gained a reputation which resulted in his being brought on to New York as E. M. Porter's assistant in the large Simplex factory.

Mr. and Mrs. Francke, together with Mr. Arthur Foley of the Boston Theatre staff, proceeded by boat to Boston, where they received the congratulations of many friends, after which, several other New England sections were visited before settling down in the brand new household in New Rochelle, until more favorable weather and business conditions will permit an extended honeymoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. C. Francke. Mr. Francke is the advertising manager of the Precision Machine Co.

New England Theatre Planned

The Empire Theatre Company of New London, Conn., which operates a chain of motion picture houses throughout Connecticut, has leased the new theatre in the Tripp block at Mystic, Conn., which the owner, John F. Noyes, expects to have ready for opening early in July. The theatre will occupy the ground floor of the building and accommodate approximately 900. While special provisions will be made to cater to the summer people, many of them New Yorkers, in that section, it is planned to have the house open the year around. G. Victor Grinnell has been selected as house manager of the new playhouse.

Woodland Invents Optical Attachments

What seems to be an invention that truly works to the added efficiency of the optical system of the projector has been brought out by John E. Woodland, chief projectionist at Fox's Folly theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. The attachment has been submitted to this department and has been tried out under different circumstances and in every case the gain in illumination on the screen has been markedly improved. At one place where the device was tested the projectionist had been using 65 amperes d.c., but after attaching the current saver the man was able to adjust his rheostat to 45 amperes and get the same intensity of light on the screen.

It will soon be possible to make other than visual tests on Mr. Woodland's invention at which time they will be published in the NEWS.

Camera Laboratory Picture Making Studio Technique

The Important Part of the Laboratory in the Industry

Discussed by Tom Evans, Widely Known Laboratory Expert

Editor's Note

Over thirteen years of uninterrupted activities, always at the same stand, 416-424 West 216th Street, New York City,—such is the proud record of Tom Evans, who claims the distinction of having the oldest established laboratories devoted to commercial work.

One of the outstanding features of the Evans Laboratories is its wonderful organization. Like Rome, the Evans organization was not built in a day. It took years of steady striving, infinite care, judicious discrimination and a considerable outlay of money to fashion out this splendidly trained, highly efficient and thoroughly harmonious working unit. It stands as a tribute to the perspicacity of its creator and director, Tom Evans, who, despite his youth, is one of the simon-pure pioneers of the film industry. "Tom," who but lately was Major Evans, U. S. A., has undoubtedly had wider and riper experience than most film executives.

Introductory Remarks

Has it ever occurred to you that one of the most essential branches of the motion picture industry—the laboratory—is the least spoken of? You often read about production, exploitation, distribution, etc., etc., but one seldom hears or sees anything pertaining to the real workshop of the picture.

The finished product, whether it be a short subject or a mammoth feature, invariably gives the name of presenter, producer, star, director, author, scenarioist, photographer, art director, musical director, editor, cast, etc., but nary a word is said about the laboratory that made the print. Screen credit should be given to the laboratory. If this were done it would assist in the elimination of the inferior work that is now being perpetrated by some plants. Producers should not only ask but insist upon having the name of the laboratory in each and every print of theirs. The sooner this practice is put into effect the better for the picture in general. It can do no harm and is bound to do a lot of good.

The laboratory can either make or break a production. Indifferent laboratory work plays havoc with the best efforts put forth by director and cameraman, while intelligent and able work not infrequently transforms a poor picture into one of merit.

Outside of laboratory circles very few know that the "lab" is the clinic of the motion picture and that the laboratory people are the doctors of the industry.

When a cameraman falls down on a scene exposure, when some particular effect is desired, when this or that result is wanted, when a scene is marred in some way, in fact for anything and everything that spells betterment for and of the picture, it's always the laboratory that does the fixing. When a "news beat" is made and advertised to be shown at such and such a theatre some hours after the event has taken place, it's the laboratory that speeds up with even greater activity and where everybody is on his toes feverishly working to turn out the job quickly and well.

Tom Evans

Very often the laboratory is consulted on the action and on how this scene should be handled and that scene improved. Verily the work of a laboratory is manifold and most essential. People interested in the success of the motion picture should know a little something of the workings of a film plant. It is high time that the laboratory ceased to be the "silent branch" of the Motion Picture Industry.

Handling of Negatives

As soon as a negative reaches the laboratory it is given to a person qualified to handle it. If the negative is to be cut to conform to the submitted sample print, the work is carefully done in a room especially fitted for the purpose. The negative is put on a rewinder and carefully examined. Defects, such as scratches or mars of any kind, are jotted down, and a complete report furnished to the producer or owner of the negative, so that he may know of the exact condition of his property.

After a negative has been matched to the sample print, spliced and put in proper shape for printing, it is carefully cleaned and polished. This is followed by another cleaning with a high grade velvet to insure the removal of any small particles of dust, and finally, to thoroughly complete the cleaning process, the negative is run through a vacuum especially constructed for this purpose.

And now the negative goes to the "timer." Much depends on the man who does the timing, for correct timing insures the proper exposure to each and every scene and brings out the quality that has been the aim of the director and the cameraman. Timing should always be done by a man who has had worthy experience and whose dependability is unquestioned. Best results are obtained by making a test piece of each scene and screen them in the proper manner, thus correcting the tests under the same conditions that prevail when viewing the finished print. The laboratory that is not easily satisfied does not go ahead with the printing, but first puts through what is known as a "sample print." This is screened as often as the occasion demands, for titles, scenes, tints, tones, etc., are most carefully studied, and whatever changes may be necessary for the betterment of the picture are religiously noted. The laboratory that is particular and wants nothing but the best makes a second sample print. Upon receiving the producer's okeh the negative is ready for the printers.

Mills Makes Novel Switch Installation

The illustrations on this page show two examples of studio engineering designed and carried out by F. S. Mills, Illuminating Engineer for the Famous Players Studio at Hollywood. At the left Mr. Mills is explaining one of the location switchboards made up of Westinghouse-Krantz safety switches. Each switchboard consists of four of these 3 pole, 200 ampere, 250 volt fused switches so arranged that the "live" parts can be reached only when the switch is in the "Off" position.

The right hand photograph shows Mr. Mills standing beside one of the switch units that he has distributed around the stage floors. The feeder cables are connected directly to these switches.

In a recent issue of the Scientific American Mr. Mills had an article describing the means and methods by which certain of the unusual lighting effects are produced in motion picture studios.

Can You Qualify for Screen Authorship?

A NATIONAL educational institution to train photoplaywrights by correspondence during spare time at home has been established in Los Angeles to meet the needs of the motion picture industry.

This institution is directed by experienced writers and sponsored by Cecil B. DeMille, Thos. H. Ince and other prominent producers.

The field for photoplaywrights is lucrative and applicants drawn from every walk of life respond to the call.

Only persons naturally endowed with the gift of creative imagination and dramatic insight, however, can hope for success in this profession, and applicants must be selected accordingly.

All applicants, therefore, are requested to apply by mail to Frederick Palmer, Director of Education, for the Palmer Home-Test Questionnaire to determine their fitness to undertake this course of vocational training.

This questionnaire, scientifically compiled by Professor Malcolm Shaw MacLean, A.M., formerly a Northwestern University instructor of English composition, in collaboration with H. H. Van Loan, noted photoplay author-producer, is the first test of its kind ever adopted by an educational institution.

The purpose of this questionnaire is to help applicants determine the degree of creative imagination possessed by them and consequently their eligibility to enroll in this curriculum.

If successful in making this home test, the Palmer Plan of Instruction in Photoplay Writing is available to you.

TIME AND MANNER OF CHOOSING OFFICERS

Section 3. The officers shall be chosen at the annual meeting of the organization or at any regular or special meeting after the term of office shall have expired.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF OFFICERS

Section 4. Powers and duties of officers shall be those usual to such offices, unless otherwise specified by these By-Laws. The President shall appoint all Standing and Special Committees except the Executive Committee subject to the approval of the Executive Committee at its next meeting and shall also appoint all Special Committees he may desire.

ARTICLE VII.—EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Section 1. There shall be an Executive Committee composed of nine (9) members (including the officers), who shall be elected at the annual meeting or any special meeting called for that purpose. It shall authorize all expenditure of organization's fund, not authorized directly by the organization, and shall approve all Standing Committees. It shall also, with the President, plan all activities of the organization and may appoint such Standing and Special Committees as it may desire.

ARTICLE VIII.—STANDING COMMITTEES

Section 1. There shall be the following Standing Committees: Membership Committee, to secure and pass upon new members; Press Committee, to give out publicity concerning the organization's work; Information Committee, to gather statistics and other information regarding the use of music in the motion picture theatres and its affect on the size of audiences and disseminate same; Recommendation and Public Approval Committee, to study and make recommendations for the development of music in motion picture theatres and to secure public approval and support for those houses which adopt same.

The New Music Forum

Music Editor:

At present the greatest drawback upon theatre musicians is the long hours and the binding character of the work, making it most difficult especially for leaders and organists to find time to seek the benefit of others experiences or to offer their own ideas.

When the musician concerned is also a family man with love for his home and family, he must always sacrifice something of what he considers most valuable in order to do justice to himself and his colleagues when serving upon such a committee.

I can only say that I have read your articles each week in the NEWS that I am whole heartedly with you in the aims you are striving for, and that I feel you are in a position of authority in a field of unlimited possibilities for the good of music and mankind.

My work at the theatre and time I feel I must give to my home will not allow me to offer my services later than twelve-thirty any day, but until that time I will consider it a privilege to give all the time that you desire and in any way you wish.—Robert Berentsen, Piano and Organ Instructor, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I have the copy of your article on the motion picture theatre as a unity house of the future which I read with great interest and which so covers the idea that I had in mind that it seems useless for me to send anything to you at this time on the subject.—Marshall Bartholomew, New York City.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Since my retirement from regular church work, I have been substituting for organists in both church and theatre. I have gained the experience in picture playing and the different styles of pipe organs. I would like now to have a steady position in a theatre for afternoons only preferred.

Will you kindly put me in touch with s exhibitors in New York City and vicinity, l ing for organists.

Can you tell me where I can get a lis theatres where organs are installed.—Wil Till, Organist, Bayonne, N. J.

Mr. Nick McMahon, Jr., Grand Theatre, I ton, Ohio.

Dear Sir:

Your letter of recent date addressed to MOTION PICTURE NEWS has been referred t by their Music Editor.

While it is true that some of the picture porations engage Mr. Winkler to prepare t cue sheets, it is also true that he prepares to convey the idea of tempo, character, etc. asmuch as Mr. Winkler is in the publishing iness it is quite natural for him to suggest own publications, but it is also within province to substitute compositions which might consider of a better character.

The purchase of our publications incl rights of public performance anywhere out payment of any additional fee to us.

Trusting that this letter will give you the formation desired and thanking you for interest in our publications, we are, G. S mer, Inc., by E. B. Hall, Manager.

The Barton Organ

IT'S EASY TO EXPLAIN!

The Barton Organs' popularity with the country's best exhibitors is easy to explain—It is a perfected theatre organ—built to have beautiful tone quality and solid volume backed with a new invention. The Barton Divided Manual—the greatest improvement ever made in theatre organs—It can be played by any organist without special training and has a set of pipes for every stop--no unifying--borrowing—duplexing or double touch.

Music that is an attraction is Barton Organ Music.

Among the list of entertainments provided for the enjoyment of the delegates attending the Three Day Convention of the New York Wholesale Grocers Ass'n, held at the Hotel Astor, was the moving picture feature arranged by H. A. Marin, of the Famous Players Corporation, on Wednesday last.

For the edification of its three hundred members the Entertainment Committee had two moving picture booths set up in the North Ballroom, each of which contained a motor driven Type "S" Simplex Projector. These machines were furnished by the Precision Machine Company and were in direct charge of John Krulish, of that company.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"The Greatest Love"
(Vera Gordon-Selznick)

"THE GREATEST LOVE" is a splendid vehicle for Vera Gordon but that is all. In fact from the opening scenes when the star is seen in the role of a poor emigrant mother in the steerage of an ocean liner bound for New York, the author hasn't allowed her to remain off the screen" for any length of time.

And in doing this her personality is overworked to such a degree that the picture appears to be "all Gordon" with the other actors either playing to her or grouped about the star, waiting until she has given the cue to exit.

As far as the story is concerned, it is just a conglomeration of melodramatic incidents which break out here and there and then for contrast the star "gets busy" and does the usual mother "sob stuff" or pets and fondles her children in the lighter moments.

The plot which goes back to the days of early melodrama, shows Gordon as a Russian emigrant in this country bearing the burdens that befall her lot with her husband and children.

When a subtitle announces "fifteen years later," a beautiful home in the upper section of New York City is flashed upon the screen—and then the trouble commences.

First, the daughter is attacked by a millionaire in his office while trying on a chorus girl's costume—she is interested in amateur theatricals and the millionaire is producing one—the oldest of old time stuff, and then when she confesses the incident to her brother he pleads with her "not to tell mother."

A few scenes later the brother is shown entering the millionaire's office and sees the latter lying dead on the floor. He is seized by the attendants and led off to jail but so stubborn is the young man, that he will die rather than confess what he knows—most ridiculous.

Murder will out, however, and it is the mother who discovers the killer. And it all happens while she is praying in church. There she meets the wife of the millionaire who confesses her guilt-hokum.

The picture reaches a happy ending, is fairly well directed and has a good cast.—FRANK LEONARD.

Kineto Review
(Urban)

THE capital of Brazil, Rio de Janeiro, and the items of interest to be seen by reviewing the city with a camera, forms the subject of this review. We enter the city in a most logical way, via a train, with Cocovada Mountains to be seen in the distance. Rio has a Broadway, with various and beautiful sections, along which run the electric cars which look very much like those used in the States. The Museum of Art in the Averida is of picturesque value, as is the Statue to Don Pedro, the first Emperor of Brazil. There are terraced residential streets near the Bay, and a drive along the avenue is suggestive of it being a good place to go for a vacation.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Fighting Actor"
(Art Accord-Universal)

IF Universal gives Art Accord a run of thrilling stories, this young Westerner of round-up fame will make his mark, for he certainly has ability in the roles he plays. And this is demonstrated in his latest two reeler, "The Fighting Actor."

Activity is his greatest possession and my how he uses it, especially when a horse is near. In fact he mounts this animal from any position with lighting rapidity and in a jiffy is out of sight.

In "The Fighting Actor," Accord performs many difficult stunts in the role of an actor playing the western honkey-tonks, who is mocked and scorned until he proves he is a match for any of the roughnecks.

Among them is the jealous villain who hates the young "feller" because "the gal" seems to take to him.

The windup shows the two antagonists in one of the most thrilling fights ever produced on the screen.

This two reeler is full of action, is well staged, has a good cast and should interest wherever played.—FRANK LEONARD.

Movie Chats—22nd Series
(Urban)

A DESCRIPTIVE talk about things of interest to be seen in Bristol, England, showing some scenes of the famed River Avon, and a suspension bridge which looks as if it could be used to advantage in America.. The public buildings, including the art gallery and museum, King Edward Memorial and Clifton College.

Clifton affords a most interesting zoo with a collection of animals that indulge in amusing antics. One shown is the Kudu, described on the screen as one of the African antelopes. The hippopotamus shown was said to be a young one. The skin of an adult of the species is said to be often an inch and a half in thickness on the upper part of the body. The young one appeared to have a good start.

There are rodents found in the rivers of South America which exceed any in size that have been screened. They are called capybaras. Other interesting animals are the ring-tailed lemurs, which are queer looking cat-like objects with exaggerated tails, upon which the fur is in rings, first black and then white. There is considerable more to be seen in the nine hundred odd feet of this short subject, photographing novel experiences and carrying an even interest throughout.—LILLIAN GALE.

"No Mother to Guide Her"
(Harry Sweet-Universal)

HARRY SWEET the star of this two reeler is certainly a find for Universal and if properly handled should develop into a first class comedian.

No better illustration of this could be given than in his performance of the rube boy in "No Mother to Guide Her."

From the opening scenes when he appears in a Ford and refuses to pass a black cat on the road and indulges in all sorts of antics with the cat, which he finally places in a freight car, only to find the animal perched in the back seat, to the closing scenes when he appears in many funny situations, he is sure fire, plants his gags and lands them when the time arrives.

Although the story is a lot of hodge-podge and is rather disjointed, it makes no difference for the big scenes are ridiculously funny.

To illustrate one scene in particular, Sweet, in attempting to reach his sweetheart finds that he must cross a running brook.

Placing a stick in the water to find its depth the young gallant notes that it is no more than six or seven inches.

He steps out and then—over his head.

This is only one of the funny situations in a comedy that sparkles when it is not amusing.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Sweetheart Days"
(Paramount—Mack Sennett Comedy—Two Reels)

THIS comedy, directed by Mal St. Claire, never gets to be more than mildly amusing. It could almost be classed as polite comedy, for it contains only a small amount of the usual running and falling about. The action opens in a young ladies' boarding school. The youthful professor is far too good-looking to allow the students to concentrate upon their lessons. He carries on his romance with the favored scholar until the young lady's father objects to his daughter's course in osculation. Thereupon the girl is sent to another school where the good-looking teacher eventually finds employment. Again discovered, they are separated once more. But the persistent lover, in disguise, answers the advertisement for a private tutor, and the two elope. There is a second suitor to the girl's hand, and he and the father furnish the little bit of rough and tumble action that the comedy contains.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

DINTY (NEILAN-FIRST NATIONAL) WESLEY BARRY.....DEC. 4
"Melodrama and Sentiment put this one over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Wesley Barry in this picture is proving a worthy attraction and causing favorable comment." "Big business all week. The public wants plays of this kind." "Picture proved very average drawing card. Work of Wesley Barry considered very good but story as a whole failed to please. Almost too melodramatic." "Good picture. Splendid vacation attraction. Big and little folks all like Wesley Barry." "Personally, think this is better than 'Go and Get It,' but it didn't make quite as much money for me. It's a wonderful picture, and they all liked it." "Made a big hit at this theatre, pulling capacity crowds at each performance. Broke house record." "This is a fine picture and brought good business for me." "Played to increasing business each day. Wonderful kid picture."

DYNAMITE ALLEN (FOX) GEORGE WALSH.....MAR. 5
"Disconnected and wildly improbable melodrama."—M. P. News.

813 (ROBERTSON-COLE) WEDGWOOD NOWELL.....JAN. 22
"Interesting moments in mystery story."—M. P. News.

EASY ROAD, THE (PARAMOUNT) THOMAS MEIGHAN.....FEB. 26
"Rather mild for Thomas Meighan."—M. P. News.

EDUCATION OF ELIZABETH, THE (PARAMOUNT) BILLIE BURKE.....FEB. 26
"Billie Burke has real opportunities in polite comedy."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Women came to see Billie and the gowns. Did better than expected, as she has not done well at all of late." "A fair picture. Nothing extraordinary. Average business."

EMPIRE OF DIAMONDS, THE (PERRET-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST).....DEC. 25
"A splendid production given mystery story."—M. P. News.

EXTRAVAGANCE (METRO) MAY ALLISON.....MAR. 5
"Interest dulled by a too lengthy picture."—M. P. News.

FIGHTING STRANGER, THE (CANYON PICTURES-STATE RIGHTS) FRANKLYN FARNUM.....JAN. 29
"Selig produces another thriller, with Franklyn Farnum."—M. P. News.

FELIX O'DAY (HAMPTON-HODKINSON) H. B. WARNER.....SEPT. 18
"A good production from all angles."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fair picture to average business one day."

FIREBRAND TREVISON (FOX) BUCK JONES.....JULY 31
"Buck Jones practically duplicates his last picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not as good as some of the others. Average business two days."

FIRE CAT, THE UNIVERSAL) EDITH ROBERTS.....FEB. 12
"Edith Roberts scores in Carmenesque role."—M. P. News.

FIRST BORN, THE (HAWORTH-ROBERTSON-COLE) SESSUE HAYAKAWA.....FEB. 12
"A title, heart interest and Hayakawa's acting should attract them."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"By far the best picture that Sessue Hayakawa has ever made. It is a true conception of Oriental life."

FLAME, THE (STOLL FILM-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 5
"A good production with foreign setting."—M. P. News.

FLAME OF YOUTH, THE (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON.....DEC. 18
"A pleasing, simple romance with Shirley Mason."—M. P. News.

FLYING PAT (NEW ART-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) DOROTHY GISH.....JAN. 1
"Fairly pleasing offering with Dorothy Gish."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fair picture. Business very good." "Just average box-office results, though the picture is quite good."

FORBIDDEN FRUIT (DE MILLE-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST..FEB. 5
"De Mille scores another ten strike; a great audience picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Elaborately produced and entertaining production that went over for a two week run to capacity business." "Fine picture that drew enormous crowds during opening week of this theatre." "They were terribly disappointed with this. Did not think it lived up to 'Something to Think About' and 'Why Change Your Wife?'" "Broke the attendance record. Greatly talked about. Continued for a second week." "This picture drew well and brought excellent business." "Held over a second week to excellent crowd. Pleased everyone who saw it." "DeMille's pictures always draw immense crowds. This was proved interesting, but not startling. Patrons like the atmosphere of affluence which permeates these pictures. Constantly large attendance." "This one packed the house every performance. A very fine entertaining picture and patrons seemed well pleased." "A fairly good picture with business about as usual."

FORBIDDEN THING, THE (DWAN-ASSO. PRODUCERS).....NOV. 27
"Vivid and vital story rich in spiritual quality."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture to fair business." "A fine production. People stood in line all week to see this picture. Big success." "Well acted and produced but ratner long-drawn out; exploitation put it over to big business."

FOUR HORSEMEN, THE (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 5
"Marvelous production reaches the heights of picture art."—M. P. News.

"Play seems old-fashioned as picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Typical Burke picture, very pleasing, fair business due to holidays." "Just plain trash—it's a pity a good star and real money are expended on such drivel." "Average business. No new angles throughout the entire five reels. Photography and direction good, cast fair, but story weak from being overworked." "Had poor business with this one for entire week." "Very trashy and silly. Audience hardly enthused. Business only fair."

FRONTIER OF THE STARS, THE (PARAMOUNT) THOMAS MEIGHAN.....JAN. 22
"Interesting story of a crook's redemption."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture which brought more than usual business." "Very entertaining feature which the popularity of Thomas Meighan with our patrons helps to put over in good shape. Did excellent business." "Thomas Meighan always draws well for me and this picture was no exception. Business was fair and comments on the picture showed interest, though not the enthusiastic approval of the other pictures which I have played with this star." "Meighan is a great favorite here and will always pack a house. This vehicle is satisfactory, but a startling winner." "Picture pleased generally and drew well. Business fine." "Not up to Meighan's standard. His own work excellent, but support poor and not worthy of him. Business good for Meighan is a great drawing card for me." "This one went over big and continued so during run. Audiences well pleased with the story."

FURNACE, THE (REALART) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC.
"Talky picture has little appeal."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the best pictures I have seen. It has strength and purpose and is wonderfully portrayed by excellent cast. Exceptionally good business." "An absolute sensation. A knockout. Had S. R. O. sign up from opening day till finish of week. One of the best picture I've ever seen." "Unusually good audience picture. Everybody liked it. Opened to big Sunday business." "Very big production. Business better than average." "The plot of the picture is good but the details are not well worked out. It is fair. Average receipts." "Very high-class society picture with beautiful costuming and sets which appealed particularly to the women and did splendid business." "Weak story of marriage that played to average business."

GIRL OF MY HEART (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON.....DEC. 1
"Star fails to enliven very dull story."—M. P. News.

GIRL WITH THE JAZZ HEART, THE (GOLDWYN) MADGE KENNEDY.....JAN.
"Madge Kennedy plays two roles exceptionally well."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This was a corker. I think it the best thing Madge Kennedy has yet done. They all liked it, and I played to capacity houses all week." "Nothing great about this but title is catchy and Madge Kennedy has a following. Result—good houses." "Madge Kennedy has considerable drawing power here. Her picture is not strong but our people liked it."

GODLESS MEN (BARKER-GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 1
"Unpleasant story depending on acting and unusual twist to story."—M. P. News.

GOD'S GOOD MAN (STOLL FILM CORP.) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 2
"A poor production from all angles."—M. P. News.

GREAT ADVENTURE, THE (BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE.....JAN. 2
"More interesting via the printed page."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not as good as some Barrymore pictures but enjoyed and full houses resulted." "A treat for those who like a good time. House was in a chuckle all the time. Good business. Steady all week."

GREAT LOVER, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Slow Moving that depends largely on titles."—M. P. News.

GREATER CLAIM, THE (METRO) ALICE LAKE.....FEB. 19
"Alice Lake scores in ordinary story."—M. P. News

GUILE OF WOMEN, THE (GOLDWYN) WILL ROGERS.....MAR. 12
"Rogers, good story and clever titles make this fine entertainment."—M. P. News.

HEARTS ARE TRUMPS (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 11
"A complex melodrama very well produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"There is nothing startling about this production. Ranks about average."

HEARTS UP (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....JAN. 1
"Harry Carey has satisfying offering here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This picture is a good bet. Audiences seemed very much pleased with it and business was fine."

"A different picture here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the season's finest pictures, in my estimation—and my opinion backed up by the fact that it played to capacity business in a house seating twenty-seven hundred. Consider it an excellent production from every angle." "A good picture but did not draw well at my house." "Splendid production. Well liked by audience. Did capacity business during its entire run." "Excellent. The patrons of this theatre filled the house at each performance every day for the entire week." "Broke all records for two years as the poorest drawing card. One million per cent. overrated and 1,000,000 per cent oversold picture. Otherwise a good picture with none of the muchly promised Hearst free advertising, even an extra $700 advertising appropriation could not put it over." "Thoroughly nice picture. Ought to go with most any kind of an audience."

HER FIRST ELOPEMENT (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....JAN. 25
"Inconsequential and too vapid for feature length."—M. P. News.

HER HUSBAND'S FRIEND (INCE-PARAMOUNT) ENID BENNETT.JAN. 29
"Rather hectic in spots, but keeps the interest."—M. P. News.

HER BELOVED VILLAIN (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....DEC. 18
"French farce adaptation that falls short in American requirements."—M.P. News.
Exhbitor Comment—"A good picture to average business three days."

HER UNWILLING HUSBAND (HAMPTON-PATHE) BLANCHE SWEET.....NOV. 27
"Good production given average story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Satisfactory picture both as an entertainment and as a box office attraction. Average good business.

HIS OWN LAW (J. PARKER READ-GOLDWYN) HOBART BOSWORTH.....FEB. 12
"Trite story makes poor screen material."—M. P. News.

HOLD YOUR HORSES (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE).....FEB. 5
"Comedy titles and good incident make this fine entertainment.—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Just ordinary picture and did just ordinary business." "Fairly good picture. Business about as usual."

"THE MISTRESS OF SHENSTONE"
(Robertson-Cole)

Quiet in Action, Yet Charms With Its Romance and Backgrounds

IT is quite a departure for Pauline Frederick when she elects to play strictly romantic parts and relegates the emotional interpretations to the background. In "The Mistress of Shenstone" the star gets away from her customary dramatic "fireworks" and affords the spectator a chance to witness her versatility. And Miss Frederick may always be depended upon to furnish an interesting portrayal. The title role is ideal for her since she is represented as in the first flush of womanhood. It is a quiet picture and does not build any real dramatic framework. Yet it keeps from becoming theatrical and false for this very reason. Any criticism of the feature may be found in the early reels which do not move with any degree of spontaneity.

There is a slowness of action which retards the interest at times. Yet once the characters are firmly planted, the story picks up in values and finishes with plenty of strength. Too much stress is given the heroine's loneliness and the mourning of her husband. One unconsciously extends her sympathy, surrounded as she is with a vast estate and no one to provide company except a dog and a butler. Then into her life comes a man who stimulates here with a new interest in life. They meet at a retreat on the Cornish coast where the heroine is living incognito. There is a twist to this story which provides the appeal. She has stated that she did not want to know the name of the man who killed her husband. The man she falls in love with is this very man, although he is ignorant of her identity. So she is torn between love and duty—duty toward the memory of her husband who was killed in an accident.

When her ladyship returns home she renews her acquaintance with her lover who is acquainted with the fact that he is wooing his best friend's wife. This is quite a dramatic situation. Though it seems like coincidence it somehow rings genuine. So the hero is torn by conflict. He finds himself in love with the wife of the man he killed. This fact and the determination of the woman to keep her promise to herself precipitates a situation the force of which cannot be denied. Yet in the end love conquers. The picture is remarkably rich in exteriors. The backgrounds of cliffs and ocean and country estates provide a perfect atmosphere. There is not much variety and very little incident is observed. The offering depends mostly upon its romantic conflict. And this romance is so deftly shaded, so finely suggested by the star and Roy Stewart that the picture is lifted above the average. Speeded up in the earlier reels with a little judicious trimming here and there, the picture would strike a high level.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

In "The Mistress of Shenstone," adapted from Florence L. Barclay's story of the same name, Pauline Frederick, popular emotional star, has a role vastly different from anything which she has every before done for the screen. The picture will come to the ———— theatre next ———— for a three days' run. As Lady Myra Ingleby, Miss Frederick has every opportunity for the expression of her rare dramatic ability, but she portrays a sweet, womanly character, rather than the worldly type with which she has been identified in the past.

Lord Ingleby is reported killed, and Myra after many months of loneliness, meets a man who makes of her a confidant and companion; who regards her as the most wonderful being in the world. Than like a bolt from the sky comes news that the report of her husband's death is false. How Myra meets the situation which then arises, how she succeeds in keeping pure the wonderful love of the man who has come into her life, furnish the many dramatic moments in the screen version of the famous novel. The picture abounds with tense situations and is beautifully photographed against charming backgrounds. Miss Frederick's company includes Roy Stewart and Emmett C. King.

PROGRAM READER

What is the "Best In Life?" Is it fame, wealth, the pursuit of empty ideals, happiness, or companionship? These questions are answered in Pauline Frederick's latest picture, "The Mistress of Shenstone," adapted from Florence L. Barclay's story of the same name. In a poignant, appealing manner, the spectator is carried through the twists and turns of the story, delicately blended, to the effective climax, in which the heroine, through suffering and sacrifice finds the answer to all her questions, the best in life. Miss Frederick has a DIFFERENT picture here—one which takes her away from the intensely emotional roles and gives her a chance to appear as an everyday character. Prominent in the cast is Roy

CATCH LINES

The very man she grew to love was her husband's assassin. Yet the man of her heart was innocent. See Pauline Frederick in the dramatic picture, "The Mistress of Shenstone."

"THE SCOFFER"
(Dwan-First National)

Theatrical and Far-Fetched in Incident But Interesting

IT is a daring theme which Allan Dwan exploits in "The Scoffer," and one which does not make good drama except for its characterization and the psychology of its idea. The director has produced it on a purely motion picture premise—which is to provide entertainment regardless of its logic. Where it falters is in the characterization. Sympathy cannot be extended to the protagonist who scoffs at a Supreme Being because of his twisted life. The character seems so ridiculous in his defiance since his attitude is something of a pose. He is sent to prison for five years on circumstantial evidence. He is innocent of the crime and the bitterness of being deprived of his liberty turns him into an agnostic.

The action abruptly switches to a scene up in the far North whither the despoiler of the victim's home has fled with the latter's wife. And the picture develops an arbitrary note when the disciple of hate ventures into the same territory. Of course it is entirely obvious. One knows to a certainty that the misguided man must be brought around to a sane viewpoint—and this must be done through love. But the picture does not develop its characterization so much as it emphasizes the melodramatic touches. The introduction of the hero in the northern camp is linked up with his solicitude toward an injured dog. Being a physician it is easy to tender first aid. The heroine, standing by, arouses his interest. And from that point his arguments against religion are ineffective. The suspense is good in the scene when he is called to administer to the relief of his own wife. And his hate is overwhelming when he maps out a scheme to torture the villain by creating in the latter's mind a tremendous fear. One by one his hatreds, fears, arguments are smashed through the kindly attitude of the girl who never gives up hope of effecting a regeneration.

There are quite a few counterplots which emphasize the virility of the story while destroying its continuity. A drunken husband is shown at the task of wife-beating and finding religion when she commits suicide. Another incident showing the hocus-pocus of a medicine man seems extraneous. The picture is pitched in a morbid key because of the three or more deaths and the exposition of the doctrines of the unbeliever. The figure is never sincere. His defiance might as well be aimed at the elements. In fact he is almost a paranoiac in his selfish ego. Spectators will most likely accept him as a motion picture figure—one far removed from life. The picture is rugged enough and carries enough action and should interest those who skip over its theme. It is well provided with atmosphere and capably acted by James Kirkwood and an adequate cast.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— and ———— is "The Scoffer." This is an Allan Dwan production, which is described as intensive drama. The story concerns a physician of unimpeachable character, who, through a cruel prank of fate unknowingly marries a former mistress of his bosom friend and fellow-physician, a man absolutely devoid of scruples. It resolves itself into a tidal wave of all the emotions, especially when it is entirely through the villainy of the "bad friend," that the good man has to serve five years in prison, for a crime he did not commit.

As an ex-convict, the unfortunate doctor is at first a scoffer of all that's good. But eventually he learns that the world is filled with humanity and his soul goes through a regeneration. The picture builds forward with powerfully dramatic situations. The theme based upon the theory that even a religious man's faith in the Supreme Being can be shaken through adverse circumstances, is one that is fraught with dramatic possibilities. Mr. Dwan has assembled a cast of competent players that includes the forceful James Kirkwood, Noah Beery, Philo McCullough and Mary Thurman.

PROGRAM READER

Could your faith in Providence ever be shaken by misfortune which might be visited upon you? If your faith were shaken under such circumstances could you remain estranged very long? The answering of these momentous questions forms the basic principle upon which is founded the Allan Dwan production, "The Scoffer," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast headed by James Kirkwood. We wish to assure every patron that he or she is going to witness one of the most dramatic narratives of the picture screen in this attraction. The story rotates around a physician who becomes a scoffer at the world because of misfortune. What happens as a result of his scoffing attitude cannot be described adequately with its crowded action, but suffice to state that it offers a rare treat. Don't miss it.

CATCH LINES

HUNDREDTH CHANCE, THE (STOLL-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST...JAN. 8
"Familiar story is well picturized."—M. P. News.

HUSH (GARSON-EQUITY) CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG.....JAN. 29
"Interesting picture on a familiar theme."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big picture, box office receipts increasing each day." "Somewhat different to the usual Young pictures, but pleased about fifty-fifty. Consider it her best, but my patrons didn't agree with me. She was not as pretty as usual, but far more interesting."

IDOLS OF CLAY (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) MAE MURRAY....NOV. 27
"Colorful production marked by good incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Elaborate production and fine photography. Story seemed to hold the interest of our patrons. Played to above average for a week." "Carried fair houses and did enough business to warrant a second week's booking." "Somewhat gruesome. Did big business. Held over second week." "Picture is quite fair. Good business during run." "Went over very well and held over for two days to big business." "A picture with beautiful scenery, excellent acting, a rather mediocre plot and several daring scenes. The acting of Mae Murray and David Powell and the South Sea and London Limehouse settings make the picture well worth seeing. It drew good-sized houses." "Did not expect this to go but it grew each day and what surprised us was that it pleased, or rather we got no kicks." "An extraordinary picture which brought good business." "Consider this a fine picture though it brought us only average business." "Continued to draw big crowds in second week."

IF ONLY JIM (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....MAR. 5
"Carey's latest is amusing and entertaining."—M. P. News.

INSIDE OF THE CUP, THE (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 22
"Conventional melodrama effectively staged."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Going over very well indeed. Good picture." "Playing to excellent business through second week." "Seemed to take with my patrons and we had good business." "Went over very nicely and the box-office showed business somewhat above the usual." "Every seat in the house was taken at two performances for an entire week, people stood in line for hours waiting for a chance to see this picture. A heavy snowstorm one night when the production was running did not keep the people away. The most notable success of the season." "Almost too strong a dose of morals. Medium business on opening and only fair all week." "A good dramatic picture, full of action, which seemed to please." "Picture went over big and packed them in. Held it for second week." "Fine picture but one that appeals most strongly to the thinking class. Held up comfortably for two weeks." "Did a capacity business. A prereview given for the benefit of ministers caused widespread comment, which added to its power of attraction." "Good story, well done. Pleased the masses. We had a satisfactory two week run." "A good picture with which we had more than usual business."

IRON RIDER, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL.....DEC. 4
"Below William Russell's previous work; only slightly interesting.—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A William Russel picture of more than average value and the box-office results were pleasant." "A pleasing Western picture, well acted and produced. Did capacity business."

IT ISN'T BEING DONE THIS SEASON (VITAGRAPH) CORINNE GRIFFITH.....FEB. 26
"Inadequate story, but a veritable fashion show."—M. P. News.

JUCKLINS, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST DEC. 25
"Rural story rich in detail and atmosphere."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pleased those who saw it, but the title not well known enough at this date, with result that it carried no popular appeal." "This feature was well liked by our patrons and went over big for four days." "Very good story. The picture follows the original narrative well and it drew the 'better class' audiences." "Good picture, pulling fairly well." "Had poor business with this, though it seemed to be a good picture." "Great! Monte Blue is just beginning to establish himself, and his following grows with each picture. Business excellent during run." "Rather good, but the name is its worst enemy. Did not draw at all." "Fair picture. The title is poor. Average box office value." "A poor picture, with business below average."

JUST OUT OF COLLEGE (GOLDWYN) JACK PICKFORD.....FEB. 19
"Slender in plot but rather amusing at times."—M. P. News.

JUST PALS (FOX) BUCK JONES.....NOV. 27
"Jones in new type of story; good entertainment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good. Played it one day to big business."

KAZAN (SELIG-HAMILTON-STATE RIGHTS) SPECIAL CAST....FEB. 19
"Another Curwood story makes interesting picture."—M. P. News.

KENTUCKIANS, THE (PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 12
"Very little drama here; backgrounds are interesting."—M. P. News.

KID, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLIE CHAPLIN.....JAN. 29
"Long heralded Chaplin six-reeler lives up to expectations."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Wonderful picture and greatest box-office attraction we have ever run. Broke house records first and second weeks of its engagement and crowds are continuing to come in great numbers on third week." "Broke all records for week run. Carried over for 2nd week." "Smashes all records in the history of this theatre." "Broke all house records first week and was held over for second week." "Played twelve shows a day to excellent business. Consider it a knockout. Immense." "Good second week. Picture caused a world of comment." "This picture went over big. Had two weeks' run." "Wonderfully entertaining. Sure did go over big. Packed houses each performance." "May be ranked as one of Chaplin's best. It continues to hold out crowds at every performance." "Kept crowds standing out on the sidewalk for a week. Now on second big week." "Wonderful business from morning till night. Great picture." "A great attraction. Going big on second week of showing."

KILLER, THE (HAMPTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 29
"Thrilling story given splendid production."—M. P. News.

LAST OF THE MOHICANS, THE (TOURNEUR-ASSO. PRODUCERS) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"A Masterpiece of its kind."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"It's certainly a screen classic. Wonderful realism throughout. Exceptionally good cast. Crowded houses from the first performance of opening day right through the week." "Opened to great business. Assured of great success. Don't miss this one." "One of the best pictures seen here in many months. Wonderful scenery and enough action to please everybody. This is the type of picture that appeals to young and old. It went especially big with the school children." "Here is one that gets the money, though why we can't understand for it is too bloody. The name of this classic is its best advertisement." "An entertaining picture of real historical value. School children appealed to in advertising. Good business for seven day run."

LIFE OF THE PARTY, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) ROSCOE ARBUCKLE.....DEC. 4
"Fun and hokum in Fatty Arbuckle's Latest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An entertaining feature and a good box office attraction." "A laugh-getting Arbuckle comedy which played to good business for one week with an increased attendance the last part of the engagement." "Fine picture. Splendid business. Excellent entertainment. The kind of show it's a pleasure to run. Everybody comes into the theatre expecting to have a good time and go out happy." "Fair picture, fair business. Some thought it great, but it is a question whether or not the public wants Arbuckle in long features." "Good picture as far as entertaining value goes, but did only average business during run."

LITTLE 'FRAID LADY, THE (ROBERTSON-COLE) MAE MARSH..DEC. 4
"Mae Marsh returns to screen, ideally cast."—M. P. News.

LOVE (J. PARKER READ, JR.-ASSO. PRODUCERS) LOUISE GLAUM.....DEC. 11
"Louise Glaum scores in familiar picture, sumptuously mounted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The title's enough to bring all the women. It's thrilling and surprising, but never offensive. Good business at two simultaneous first-run houses." "Fair picture; did average business three days." Just fair. Didn't do anything remarkable, just cleared expenses. As a picture it's awful; as a box-office attraction it just manages to get by." "Failed to draw after big advertising campaign. Louise Glaum's name is not a box-office getter." "A fairly good box office attraction. The plot is nothing new, but the scenery and settings make the picture worth while." "Good picture which brought more than usual business." "Elaborately mounted sex story that held up fairly good for seven day run."

LOVE LIGHT, THE (UNITED ARTISTS) MARY PICKFORD.....JAN. 22
"Production overshadows the star who is not any too well cast."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The star brought the people to see it and they were not disappointed." "Splendid picture and business. Mary Pickford really pleased everyone. Never heard a complaint. Capacity all week." "Very good production and well liked. Business was good." "Fell down badly second week. Didn't seem to satisfy. For total showing went over from average to poor." "Mary Pickford interesting if one would forget the story which utterly failed to measure up to the standard expected. Held for the entire week to our regret." "Drew well for about three days and then fell off considerably. Even Mary's large following in this city did not all turn out to see it. Newspaper reviewers characterized it as 'poor' and it was dubbed as 'rotten' by many of little Mary's adorers." "Picture fairly interesting but disappointed some of the fans. Business only fair."

"Best picture Douglas Fairbanks ever made. We have had such big business during its two weeks run that we are holding it over for a third week." "Very good picture to fine business." "This picture makes a hit with the men. The women do not seem as enthusiastic. Drawing big matinees. Will hold over for another week.'" "Sure did go over well. And the picture is worth it. Had crowded houses during run." "Brought out all the Douglas Fairbanks admirers and then some. It went over big and in the estimation of most people who saw it, it is the best thing Doug has ever done." "One of the best Fairbanks pictures in a long time. Drew capacity houses during its two week's run." "Sure did go over great. Packed houses each performance. Box office receipts very satisfying." "Great picture. Away and the best Fairbanks has ever offered. Packed houses all the time, both because of popularity of star, and because of merit of production."
Consensus—"Excellent picture, big puller."

"THE GILDED LILY"
(Paramount)

Mae Murray's Latest Is a Winner

THERE is a tone and quality about Mae Murray's latest picture, "The Gilded Lily," which places it on a par with "On With the Dance." Those who recall the latter will find in the new presentation the same artistic effort to make something worth while. The theme may be said to have been cut from the same pattern, yet Clara Beranger, the author, Robert Z. Leonard, the director, and Tom Geraghty, the supervising director, have cooperated to the extent of refurbishing it with refreshing detail which is brought out in well molded sequences and logical climaxes. Miss Murray has become an exponent of New York night life in her screen stories. It is a role which excellently becomes her because of her dancing talent and her ability to appear at ease in bizarre costumes.

Miss Beranger has employed the idea of the city girl who is keen for glitter on the surface but in whose heart there is longing for the finer things of life. There is a slight twist to the development which is found in her response to the country youth, who is the personification of all that is sincere and open hearted, but who eventually turns out to be short in character. It is rather of a surprise (and a very agreeable one) to discover that the polished clubman, the man-about town, is the representative of virtue. Which goes to show that every person who bedecks himself in evening clothes and smokes cigarettes in a graceful manner and hails from New York is not necessarily a villain. One can appreciate how the sponsors have cooperated in making this picture appealing. Despite its rather hackneyed theme there is a bid for the interest which is caught at the opening scene and which never relaxes. A compact continuity is at the bottom of this attention on the part of the spectator.

You might think the obvious note is apparent here but you are in for a surprise. For once the youth from the country takes the count. The suspense is maintained because the director has kept Lowell Sherman suggesting villainy when such a course is the farthest thing from his thoughts. The picture is a gentle "dig" at the popular private supper clubs which flourish in the metropolis and is genuine in theme, characterization and incident. The picture is embellished with some Prizma coloring which enhances Miss Murray's beauty. And some big sets are utilized in showing off her dancing skill. "The Gilded Lily" is more genuine than "On With the Dance." This picture smacked of theatrical situations. The composition of scenes is excellent. The titles are commendable. The acting is adequate, with Lowell Sherman giving the best performance. The picture should clean up for the exhibitor.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mae Murray is back in her ever-popular role of a dancer in her latest picture entitled "The Gilded Lily," by Clara Beranger, which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. It is said that Miss Beranger wrote the story especially for the star and with her intimate knowledge of Miss Murray's abilities she was able to create a role which is one of the best she has ever played. "The Gilded Lily" may be compared with "On With the Dance" in many ways. It has the same sumptuous mounting, the rich characterization and the same dramatic features, and it is as excellently acted by a cast that includes Lowell Sherman and Charles Gerard.

It is a story of New York life with Miss Murray cast in the role of Lillian Drake, hostess of a popular private club which caters to the fast set, the spenders, the lovers of the dance and the private liquor stock. She is a salamander who gets all from her train of admirers and gives nothing in return. How she discovers that one of these men has character despite his love of pleasure and learns to love him is told in a most entertaining fashion. The picture builds to a climax of intense power and brilliancy.

PROGRAM READER

She was affectionately termed The Lily because she was a girl of such rare beauty. She was hostess of a popular club in which pleasure was worshipped above everything else. Then one day romance entered Lily's life—romance which came straight from the country, bringing with it the simplicity, the breath of the big outdoors. She longed to be away from the tinsel life of Broadway. How she succeeds in achieving her wishes is material for one of the best pictures which has ever appeared at the ———— theatre. There is a surprising finish which should occasion much discussion. It is our privilege to tell you that Mae Murray the beautiful and popular Paramount star, is coming to the ———— next ———— in "The Gilded Lily," a picture comparable to "On With the Dance." It's a wonderful picture. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

You can establish your mailing campaign for this one and also tell that the star appears in a picture which is comparable to her famous "On With the Dance." Tell that it is a most fascinating story of New York life—of the pursuit of pleasure. Tell that it paints the big town faithfully in regard to its pleasure side. Bring out the name of the director and that of the author, both of whom are well known to the steady patrons. You can tell that Lowell Sherman achieved fame in "Way Down East." Play it up as a brilliant picture of the gay life in New York. Touch upon its various features. Stage a prologue using some ballet dancer and an artistic background. Decorate your lobby with flowers.

CATCH LINES

A remarkable picture is "The Gilded Lily" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Mae Murray.

"BARE KNUCKLES"

THE Fox forces aimed no higher and hit no lower than the average when they produced "Bare Knuckles" with William Russell. It gives the star less acting to do, and a bit more action than in some of his previous pictures. If it does rise higher than the average "two fisted hero" type of feature it is in some of the scenic backgrounds, which abound when the story shifts to the snow-covered mountains.

Russell swings his fists about lustily in this picture, but it does not contain any gory fights which will be the outstanding feature of the production. Instead it moves along with enough good, wholesome action, to keep the interest of an audience up to the required pitch. Russell is given the part of a hard-fisted and soft-hearted Irishman who wins for himself the reputation of being a foreman worthy of respect. He is sent to a contractor's camp, where his employer is endeavoring to build the dam within the required time. The engineer is in league with the employer's enemy, as well as being in love with the employer's daughter. The continuity works up a climax in fine fashion, and Director James Hogan has developed some real exciting moments. This later part is by far the best part of the film. All the elements are there—first, the hero bound and helpless; then the girl brought to a lonely cabin by the villain, and finally a super-villain, or villain number two, to heighten the suspense.

All this, even including the thrilling rescue battle, would not be so effective were it not for the blizzard, apparently real, which is raging all the time. These exteriors cause the climax to be a bit "different," and are all that is necessary to make an audience forget that they have seen the same situation dozens of times before. This climax is sufficient to send an audience home satisfied—provided, of course, that they are not expecting a picture of great love interest, spectacular appeal, of deep theme. "Bare Knuckles" has no theme. It is just an attempt to give the fans a thriller that will entertain them, and it succeeds in good fashion.

Not even the leading lady, Mary Thurman, has any chance to impress. All of the cast are fully competent, and Russell presents his usual personality.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Bare Knuckles," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— is a story starring William Russell which is just as thrilling as the title applies. It is a picture with action as its dominating note Romance, however, is not neglected, and on the whole, the production is a well rounded photodrama intended to please everyone who enjoys clean, active drama enacted by a capable cast under capable direction.

William Russell plays "Brute" McGuire, a simple, uneducated man, but one who is forceful and powerful in body and mind. There are many ways of dealing with men, but "Brute" McGuire knew only one. Others might use diplomacy or logic to subdue their enemies, but McGuire used only his swiftly moving fists. And, it so happened that bare knuckles were the most powerful and only argument that the rough and ready contractors' camp could understand.

A great many of the scenes of this picture were taken in the Sierra mountains with a result that some of the most realistic snow and blizzard scenes ever filmed were obtained for this picture. "Bare Knuckles" will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

PROGRAM READER

There are many ways of handling men, but Tim McGuire knew only one. That was the method he used when he fought as a youngster his classmates in school. Others might use logic or soft persuasive powers, or subtle intrigue, but Tim only used bare knuckles and used them well. Tim McGuire, in this case is William Russell, the popular Fox star, and the picture which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— is aptly entitled "Bare Knuckles." This picture is all that its name implies—it is filled with thrilling action and gripping situations, but it is more than that, for it contains a clean romance, and has some of the most elaborate and beautiful scenes taken in the Sierra mountains for its background. Some blizzard scenes which appear in the picture are among the most realistic ever filmed.

"Bare Knuckles" is a film version of a story of a contractor's camp by A. Channing Edington. It will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is another typical William Russell picture—lots of action with a "he-man" hero—the kind a good number of your patrons worship. These certainly will not be disappointed if you advertise this feature as one that will hold them enthralled from beginning to end by the sheer force of Russell's personality and the vigorous fist fights which are contained in the picture. There are also some snow scenes here which will appeal to the lovers of outdoor pictures. Its title is catchy and you could run a teaser in the daily paper reading—"One way of dealing with men—bare knuckles!" This could be supplemented later by a picture of Russell and finally by the name of the theatre and the date of the attraction.

CATCH LINES

William Russell in the kind of a picture you love—a thrilling tale of a two-fisted man who does his job and does it well.

"THE UNKNOWN WIFE"
(Universal)

Interesting Picture on Favorite Theme

THERE is no sign of inspiration behind this photoplay which stars Edith Roberts. It is based upon the redemption of a young crook through the power of love—an idea which has become a favorite one with scenario writers ever since the success of "The Miracle Man." Yet, despite its cut and dried theme, the picture is interesting because of the intimate touches—the spark of pathos, the sympathy of the characterization. It doesn't take any ingenuity to know just how it will develop. The director has not attempted to give it fresh treatment. One sees the young crook leaving prison and getting his redemption early because he thinks enough of the girl to marry her. And they are married in the second reel.

A measure of suspense is indicated here for one is not certain that happiness will be maintained in the home of the couple. It devolves upon the author or director to cast in another direction for the interest. The husband has never told his wife of his erstwhile life of crime or the fact that he is an ex-convict. When he loses his position she goes to work to support the little home. There is a gap in the direction here. The director allows Miss Roberts to wear an expensive wardrobe upon a stenographer's salary. This would be permissible if she had only herself to support. But despite the fact that the romantic note is established early the picture builds with adequate situations and conquers because of its appealing plot and characterization. The husband has a pair of crooked associates who seem out of place in the little town when they endeavor to urge him back in the life of crime. And toward the conclusion one of them pays with his life for violating the law. It is then that the wife learns her husband's true identity. But her steadfast nature asserts itself and the husband, relieved of his worries, is able to face the world with conviction of the power of faith.

The minor flaw of the "yegg" who is badly wounded, receiving a second bullet, falling four stories and living through it all, for a time, will pass unnoticed even though it seems quite impossible. The title finds meaning in the masquerading of the wife as single in order to keep her position. When an admirer goes to her home he is surprised to find that she has a husband and that the latter is the chap he sent to prison in the discharge of his duty as prosecuting attorney. "The Unknown Wife" did not cost a great deal of money. It is a story of common, everyday people and the director has staged it with the proper atmosphere. Casson Ferguson has a bigger part than the star and plays it well.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Edith Roberts, the dainty Universal star, will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— in "The Unknown Wife." This is a picture of the redemption of a crook through the power of love. The young convict is released from prison and finds employment in a factory where Miss Roberts, as Helen, is employed as a stenographer. Romance comes to both of them and after a short courtship they are married. The happy couple move to the city where eventually he loses his position which forces his wife to take up secretarial work again.

She does not permit her new employers to know that she is married and this attitude causes her to be courted by the very man who was responsible in sending her husband to prison. The husband is willing to give up his wife, feeling unworthy. But she proves herself sincere by remaining steadfast in her affections. Eventually she learns of his convict days and happiness is their reward with the difficulties, worries and petty fancies driven away. The picture generates a deal of heart interest and is well acted by Casson Ferguson and Edith Roberts.

PROGRAM READER

He did not tell his wife that he was an ex-convict. Years in prison had brought care and sorrow to his face but the kindness and affection of the girl had made him supremely happy. When he lost his position and his wife was forced to go to work to support them, he decided he was quite unworthy. Then she discovered that he was formerly a criminal. Did she lose her affection for him or did she cling the closer? Did she have faith in him? Did he return to a life of crime? Did he realize that human nature is fickle—that there is no need of having faith? These questions are answered in the vital, and vivid, and, very human photoplay, "The Unknown Wife," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a Universal attraction starring Edith Roberts. You will like the star in this fascinating picture.

CATCH LINES

He was a crook but his wife didn't know it. What happened when she discovered him to be an ex-convict? Did she remain steadfast in her devotion. See "The Unknown Wife."

She palmed herself off as single when she was really married to a crook. Why? See Edith Roberts in "The Unknown Wife."

"NUMBER 17"
(Fox)

Convenient Melodrama Carries Some Excitement

IT has devolved upon the sponsors of this photoplay to provide the athletic George Walsh with something to do in the way of melodramatic high jinks and "Number 17" is charged with all the tried material which is calculated to send a thrill up and down the spine. But the very fact that Walsh must have stories with elaborate "kicks" in them takes away any element of story interest. One simply accepts them as vehicles for the expression of the energetic star. Hence one takes them with a grain of salt. "Number 17" is rather trite of plot and its incident is entirely commonplace yet the offering looms up as an improvement over some recent features.

In the first place it is crammed with exciting action which starts off like a crack of a gun and the echo is heard at the finish. The picture belongs to the old ten, twent', thirt' days of melodrama when the disciples of right and wrong were sharply divided—when every thing depended upon the upright hero emerging triumphant over the villain. It is a thriller—make no mistake about it and because of its high fault in incident, interest never lags. The plot is dependent upon the wily Oriental who pursues the white girl until such time as he takes the count in the approved fashion. There is a mysterious murder in Chinatown and also a tong war, and between them the spectator is compelled to pay attention through the exploitation of the thrill. The director has kept up the suspense. In fact it is the keynote of the picture. Every detail, every incident is dependent upon its suspensive value.

There is a woman murdered in Room 17, and the hero observes the father of his fiancee leaving shortly after. The underworld atmosphere is brought forth here in a manner which will make the pulse beat faster. There has been a deal on by the father and the victim to aid the Chinese republic and the murder has been done by Chinese imperialists, who have planned the death of the man and his family. The action resolves itself into the efforts of the hero to circumvent the wily Orientals. A rival tong and the police cooperate in an efficient manner. There isn't much play of romance. Really there is no necessity for any love interest with such extravagant melodrama being exploited. To those patrons who relish unadulterated action regardless of its unrealities, "Number 17" should be highly entertaining. To those who have outgrown the dime novel days the picture will seem old-fashioned. Yet they must admit it carries a kick. —Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

George Walsh, the athletic star of Fox pictures, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "Number 17," a picture which is said to be ideal in action and expression for his personality. The star appears as Frank Theydon, a young writer who exposes the life of the underworld. It is a role which permits him all kinds of adventure and excitement and saturated as it is with action he is able to stimulate a deal of interest. In exposing the underworld life, he undertakes the troubles of the Forbes family, New York society people.

A certain Mrs. Lester is murdered and suspicions point to Mr. Forbes, father of Evelyn, the girl Theydon loves. The crime is connected with Chinese plottings, the murder being inspired from her husband's dealings against the Orientals. A young tongman is the real villain and it is in a battle between his cohorts and an enemy tong which proves the innocence of the Americans. The picture is equipped with good atmosphere, which is always heightened because of the crackling action. In Mr. Walsh's supporting cast are Mildred Reardon, Louis Wolheim, Lillian Beck and others. George Beranger directed from a story by Louis Tracy.

PROGRAM READER

George Walsh, the athletic star of Fox pictures, is coming to the ———— theatre next ————. A George Walsh picture is always certain to arouse interest among those spectators who delight in crisp action and suspense. A George Walsh picture is always crammed with adventure, romance and excitement and "Number 17" will afford the patrons of the ———— theatre an hour of satisfaction. The star appears in the role of a young writer, who exposes the ways of the underworld. How his enthusiasm brings him into various troubles from which he only extricates himself after daring adventures is told in five reels of fast action. In the cast are Mildred Reardon, Louis Wolheim and others. George Beranger, who has directed the star on a number of occasion, is the director here.

SUGGESTIONS

The best manner to advertise this picture is to play up the star and his ability to handle himself in an athletic way. Tell that a Walsh picture is always crammed with adventure and excitement. You can stimulate a lot of interest by bringing out the title. You can link it up with several enterprises. Describe it as a fast and exciting melodrama which gives the star an opportunity to display his talent and athletic ability. You can mention the names of the cast if they mean anything to your audiences. Get your crowd out by promising them an evening of adventure—an evening packed with excitement.

"THE NUT"
(United Artists)

Entertaining in Spots, But Needs Editing

AS shown at the Strand theatre, New York, Doug's latest, "The Nut," seems to be in need of a judicious trimming that would eliminate numberless titles, mostly of a romantic or story telling nature, and me superfluous scenes that are neither entertaining or necessary in the evelopment of the strictly farce comedy plot.

There are plenty of good laughs in the offering, but after an auspicious art covering about a reel, they are sandwiched in between sequences hich are just continuity and in consequence the production drags at times. owever, the finish is strong and possibly the fan will not be so critical pecially when one considers that Doug is the star.

It is a truly humorous idea from which "The Nut" has been evolved. oug is an eccentric resident of Greenwich village very much in love with other "nut" whose fad is preaching a theory that if the "best people" ould entertain the children of the slums regularly, said children would come "best people" through the association. In an effort to aid the rl Doug pulls all sorts of "nut" stunts, including the stealing of wax gures from a museum. There is, of course, a villain who has to be warted, with the star as the principal "thwarter."

Many new gags have been evolved and there is a wealth of original cident of a humorous and semi-humorous nature. The star is less of the hlete and more of the farceur in this than in his previous pictures. In ct his work resembles Lloyd's to a considerable degree. Slapstick is re-rted to at times and at no time is the story told to be considered riously. The production is just good entertainment that might be better some of the dead wood was eliminated, thereby quickening the tempo and ving the entertaining sequences a chance to register for their full value.—ength, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Doug's latest motion picture, "The Nut," is to be the film attraction at the ——— theatre for a ——— days' showing beginning ———.

In "The Nut" the star will be seen as a Greenwich villager, a "nut" among uts" with a passion for eccentric inventions and a willingness to do fool stunts the hope of winning the hand of his "nut" sweetheart who has a plan, based her own theories, of reforming the children of the slums by having them enter-ned regularly by members of the "400."

The story idea presents Fairbanks with many unique and humorous situations d the picture is a series of mirth provoking scenes, more or less ridiculous rhaps, but for all that clean wholesome entertainment. The role played by the r is a new one for him in that he discards for the time being much of his hletics and becomes a finished farceur. Those who remember Doug's first big ccess, "His Picture in the Papers," will best know what to expect in "The t." In support of the star is pretty Marguerite Delamotte and a picked cast well known players. The picture is in six reels and was written by Kenneth venport. The direction was by Ted Reed. The release is through United Artists.

PROGRAM READER

The one and only Doug in his latest feature picture, "The Nut," is scheduled the ——— for a ——— days' engagement beginning ———.

this picture the most popular male star now appearing in picture, has the role an ecentric resident of Greenwich Village, New York, that presents opportunities clean farce comedy stunts not unlike those of his first great success, "His cture in the Papers," a Triangle release that many will remember. Many are e new gags that are pulled in this fun maker. The star is assisted by a com-tent cast which includes pretty Marguerite Delamotte and others who are good es and accomplished farceurs.

"The Nut" is the kind of photoplay entertainment that every American likes, od clean fun with lots of action, new stunts and some of Doug's athletics mixed

It will amuse young and old, but is an especial treat for the youngsters. The cture is in six reels, every foot of which is entertaining.

SUGGESTIONS

The title of this picture lends itself well for freak exploitation. Decorate your by with as many different varieties of nuts as you can find, with prizes for the rson who names the greatest number correctly. Place nuts in windows on the der of the old "guess how many coffee beans" stunt. Extract the meat from ft shelled walnuts, insert small heralds advertising the attraction and glue shells gether again for distribution as novelties. Get window tie-ups with candy stores their nut varieties. Since one of the principal scenes of the production has to with a museum, wax figures of famous historic characters or part wax and part al persons can be used in many ways. For a prologue adopt the idea which is ing used by Manager Joseph L. Plunkett of the Mark Strand theatre, New York, is week. Description of same will appear in next week's issue.

CATCH LINES

The "nuttiest" picture that Doug has made since "His Picture in the Papers." crisp and delicious as best nut you ever looked at. That's "The Nut," that oug is offering for your entertainment.

"TESTIMONY"
(Stoll Film Corporation)

Good Combination Makes Interesting Story

"TESTIMONY" is unquestionably the best picture the Stoll Film Corporation has produced. And the credit goes to Guy Newall, who wrote the scenario and directed, for he has grasped the right idea in the selection of a strong, heart interest story, which has many tense moments and has developed it in a thoroughly logical manner. In fact, from the opening reel to the very last scene in the closing reel, the story and continuity travels along as smooth as a running brook, now touching the high spots and again falling to its own level, to remain there until something happens or some obstruction gets in the way which again raises it up and over the treacherous passages.

The direction is all that could be expected and might be classed with the work done by any of our most competent men, with this exception that there is a little too much time given to detail.

Mr. Newall, however, has been greatly assisted by his actors who are typical in their roles and seem to live the characters they portray.

Ivy Duke and David Hawthorne, who play the leading roles, are sincere, convincing, and possess the rare ability to make their personalities count on the screen. But the credit should go to Mary Rorke, the hard hearted mother who objects to her son's marriage to the "willful butterfly girl," for the way she handles this difficult role. It is really worth witnessing.

There is one fault which, if corrected, would give these English made pictures greater value—the lighting effects. In many of the important scenes the faces of the actors are dimmed either in walking to or away from the foreground. More attention should be paid to lighting up back stage.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Testimony," the Stoll Film Corporation's latest feature, which will play the ——— theatre, is said to contain enough of the homey interest to attract and amuse the patrons who attend this theatre. Its story tells the tale of a young farmer, Guillian Lyons, who married a modern young woman who has come to his village to teach school. Guillian's stern, old-fashioned mother, who has always had him under her thumb, had picked out as his wife one of the village girls, and his choice of the gay willful butterfly instead precipitated the first flare-up of the family. The two women of the household were at odds from the moment the young bride came to the farmhouse, because Althea knew nothing of baking or sewing and cared less.

When her baby came, a particularly fierce quarrel resulted in the older woman leaving the farmhouse. The baby dies and Althea by good fortune learns that she has a rich uncle who has returned from America after many years absence. He writes her that if she were unmarried and heart-free, she could come and keep house for him and inherit his fortune. One day when our young heroine is severely criticized, she disappears. When her uncle learns her secret, she is turned out and returns to the farm. But she is received in a different way, for the older woman, remorseful, keeps up her courage, until Guillian, returning hopeless, made the reconciliation complete.

PROGRAM READER

What would you do, young woman, if you married a man and your mother-in-law objected to you from the first and persecuted you so that when opportunity presented itself, you fled in despair from the house?

Would you return if your husband remorsefully sought you? Would you be willing to forgive him if he had previously coincided with his mother?

These were the problems which confronted the young heroine of "Testimony," the latest Stoll Film Corporation production which will play this theatre on ——— of next ———.

The young woman, a school teacher, had married a farmer who had a stern, old-fashioned mother, who had always had him under her thumb, and had picked out as his wife one of the village girls, and his choice of the gay willful butterfly instead precipitated the first flare-up of the family. In the end the young woman unable to bear the insults any longer, flees to a rich uncle, who has lately returned from America and is received into his household. Believing that she is unmarried and heart-free the uncle seeks to marry her to a young aristocrat. What did he do when he found out her secret? Did he turn her from the house?

See "Testimony," its strong and interesting story should make you think.

SUGGESTIONS

There is only one question in the writer's mind as to this production and it is the story. From an English point of view it will certainly interest, but with an American audience it may not go so strongly.

You can advertise it, however, as big as you want to for the theme is bold and is bound to attract their attention—and the story will not disappoint.

Aside from the story play up the cast. Mention Ivy Duke and David Hawthorne in the leading roles and do not forget to mention Mary Rorke in the mother role. for she will certainly make them sit up and take notice.

Advance Information On Film Releases Will Appear Again In Next Week's Issue

"BARS OF IRON"
(Stoll Film Corp.)

THIS production runs along at a good smart pace for about three reels and then suddenly pulls up until the last reel, when it spurts to a pretty good finish. The opening reels are full of action and show the hero and his antagonist engaged in as thrilling a rough and tumble fight as one would want to witness. It ends in a melodramatic manner, one of the participants, not the hero, being killed.

It is in Australia that this happens and when the story shifts to England, and the love interest begins to develop, there is plenty of action.

During a hunting scene, several views of which are shown and are very interesting to say the least, a dramatic moment is reached when the heroine refuses to allow the hunters to take a fox when he is cornered.

This situation brings hero and heroine together and the following scenes show plenty of action and tense moments.

Up to this time the story is well worth witnessing because the plot is new, the action is strong and convincing and the actors play their scenes against some of the most beautiful backgrounds ever seen upon the screen.

It is when the story begins to repeat itself and we see the hero, his father and the rest of the cast entering and exiting in the same manner, and either indulging in emotional scenes or waiting for something to happen, that the picture grows monotonous.

And there is one other fault which seems to crop out here and there—the subtitles, which are entirely too melodramatic for an American audience and seem to revert to the speeches we used to hear in many of the old-time road shows.

"Bars of Iron" is, however, one of the best productions the Stoll Film Corporation has produced and should interest.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Alice Denys ..... Madge White
Eric Denys ..... Leopold McLaglen
Piers Evesham ..... Roland Myles
Col. Beverley Evesham ..... Eric Lankester
Dick Guyes ..... Gordon Webster
Rev. Stephen Lorimer ..... Lewis S. Ransome
His Wife ..... Gertrude Sterroll
Dixon ..... R. Townsend
Crowther ..... J. Edwards Barber
Dr. Lennox Tudor ..... J. R. Tozer
Victor ..... William Lenders
Ina Ross ..... Olga Conway
Jeanie ..... Iris Lunan

SUGGESTIONS

This production starts off like a house afire for about three reels, then lets up for about two, and then picks itself up again in the last reel and makes a rather strong finish.

The story, of course, is of the English variety and you must be very careful and not bill it in any way which would mislead your patrons to believe it of the American variety. This does not mean that the production is not interesting, but that it is well to let your patrons know the type of picture you are playing. Bill the big hunting scenes strongly and use your town papers.

PROGRAM READER

What would you do if you believed you were a murderer and then found you had married the former wife of the man you had killed?

Such a thing happened to Piers Evesham, the hero in "Bars of Iron," a Stoll Film Corporation production which will appear at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

He had been forced into a fight with a giant sheep-ranger and notorious bully named Samson in an Australian dive. Using his wrestling knowledge, Piers succeeds in hurling his opponent over his shoulder and to his death and then flees back home, pursued by the shadow of murder and the fear of encircling bars of iron.

Later Piers falls in love with Alice Denys, a governess at a nearby vicarage and proposes to her, defying his father who has already made a match for him. Alice a widow with a past, rejects him, but relents when the father dying, extracts the promise from her to make Piers happy.

Piers sees in an album a photograph of Samson and discovers that he was Alice's husband. A breaking-up is imminent when Dixon, one of the witnesses of the brawl, tells the real facts—that he put poison in Samson's drink just before the fight and it was that which caused his death.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Bars of Iron," the latest Stoll Film production, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

This is one of the best attractions this company has released and runs the gamut for romantic, tense and interesting moments.

The opening scenes show Piers Evesham, heir to the Evesham estate and title, in a fierce fight with Samson, a giant sheep-ranger and notorious bully, in an Australian dive.

As the fight progresses Piers is forced to use all his wrestling knowledge and succeeds in hurling his opponent over his shoulder. Samson is found to be dead, and Piers flees back home pursued by the shadow of murder and the fear of encircling bars of iron.

Piers falls in love with Alice Denys, governess at the nearby vicarage, and proposes to her, defying his father who has already made a match for him. Alice, a widow with a past, rejects him, but relents when the father dying extracts the promise from her to make Piers happy.

And it turns out that Alice is the former wife of Samson. A breaking-up of the family is imminent, when Dixon, a witness to the brawl, is forced to blurt out the real facts—that he put poison in Samson's drink just before the fight and it was that which caused his death.

CATCH LINES

After she had married him she discovered that he had killed her former husband. What did she do and how did it turn out? See "Bars of Iron" at the ———— theatre.

"THE BLUSHING BRIDE"
(Fox)

Exceedingly Weak; Might Have Made a Good Sunshine

THESE farce-comedy concoctions are coming pretty fast for Eileen Percy and the latest, "The Blushing Bride," belongs to the same category as the rest-weak entertainment. There isn't a flash of genuine comedy in the entire five reels. No humor is generated and the action resolves itself into an exposition of opening and shutting doors and running helter-skelter from one room to another. "The Blushing Bride" might have made a good Sunshine comedy had it been properly burlesqued and supplied with the regulation crowd of comedians.

The cast that interprets it is woefully weak in farcical characterization. Most of them indulge in farcicial grimaces and over-act terribly. Jules Furthman has attempted to be the chief cook and bottle washer here and the effort nearly swamps him. Five reels are too much for the expression of bedroom antics and character disguise. Compressed into two, or, at the most, three reels and turned over to the Sunshine sponsors, the picture would doubtless carry some entertainment value. The story is episodic and it is extremely difficult to find any thread of plot. One sees the various characters assembled in a room. A sequence follows and they follow one another about in a sort of satire on the old time game of "Follow the Leader." The feminine characters are attired in negligees in most of the scenes and the male contingent appears in evening clothes or bath robes. There is a swimming pool which is utilized for the slapstick portion of the comedy. A player loses his balance and falls in or else he allows himself to be shoved.

There is so much topsy-turvy to the thing that it takes on the form of a puzzle. One sort of wonders what it is all about. A couple of second story men are employed to build suspense; a bride is supposed to blush because of the risque situations in which she is placed; a certain individual indulges in too much hooch and wanders aimlessly from room to room; a butler allows himself to get into tight situations from which he is unable to extricate himself because of his portly girth. No bit of action is definitely outlined and the lack of humor must have been appreciated by the title writer who went the limit to give it punch and failed with the rest.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Blushing Bride" is the title of the picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Eileen Percy as the star. It is an original story by Jules Furthman who is also responsible for the direction of the picture, and tells of the experiences of a young girl of the Follies to take up domestic life as the wife of a young millionaire in the home of his aristocratic parents. They believe her to be related to an English duke who is invited to attend the wedding supper, but find her real relative to be the family butler.

The amusing action starts when her husband discovers her predicament. The butler is really the duke who is living incognito to escape his shrewish wife. The picture is said to be uproariously funny since it presents a grand secret. The wife doesn't want her husband and his relatives to discover her identity; the butler is determined to keep his identity a secret, and the others are equally determined to get at the bottom of things. Naturally this precipitates a deal of amusing complications which keep building and generating humor. Miss Percy plays her part with considerable vivacity and her support is praiseworthy.

PROGRAM READER

She had just left the Follies to become the wife of a very wealthy man. When she reached his home her worries began because she discovered that the butler was related to her. The house took on the form of a grand party. People arrived, others departed, and in the grand mix-up she discovered that "hooch" was a valuable asset to the jovialities. She also discovered that burglars were present. It is a merry mix-up which confronts Eileen Percy in her newest farce-comedy, "The Blushing Bride," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. Jules Furthman wrote and directed the feature which is enacted by a large and capable cast that includes Harry Dunkinson, Philo McCullough and Herschel Mayall. The comedy breezes with plenty of vigor and humor and offers a most satisfying hour.

SUGGESTIONS

You had better feature this picture as a satisfying picture and let it go at that. By giving the plot away you might keep some people away. It isn't a story which will stand detailing. It doesn't carry enough surprises for that. Simply state that it is a merry farce-comedy which has to do with a young pair of newly-weds. You can touch upon the large cast—a cast that includes some well known figures in the screen world—such names as Philo McCullough, Herschel Mayall and Harry Dunkinson. Present stills of Miss Percy and announce that she is resplendent in a handsome wardrobe. Treat all your copy in a snappy fashion.

CATCH LINES

She came home feeling quite superior to think that she had landed a millionaire. Was she surprised to discover that the butler was related to her? See "The Blushing Bride."

The Strangest Things

Man Has Ever Seen!

OUT of earth's darkest spot, out of a land never before penetrated by white men, Dr. Vandenbergh has brought the most amazing real life pictures ever made.

Until motion pictures are taken of the men on Mars, you will never again see anything so strange and interesting.

You will see the lives of hitherto unknown races, their tribal dances, funeral rites and marriage celebrations. You will see their monstrous mutilations and gruesome customs, their wierd witch-doctors and barbaric surgery.

You will see the killing of a man-eating lion—and the slaying of a hippopotamus in a river filled with the savage monsters.

You will see the pygmies, a race lower than animals, tinier than children, a race no white man has ever seen before.

You will see more strange and fascinating things in these pictures than you have seen in your whole life before!

The New York Globe says: "One of the real events of the screen year. More thrills in a single flash than a drama could have in all its five reels."

"EAST LYNNE"

The greatest screen achievement of the day. Every living soul knows the name "EAST LYNNE" either as a book or as a play. Now, in picture form, it will attain to new heights of popularity never before dreamed of, for it is one of the finest productions ever made. Hugo Ballin, who produced and directed it, is an artist to his finger-tips and his artistry is shown in every foot of the film. Hundreds of thousands of people are waiting to see "EAST LYNNE."

"PARTNERS OF THE TIDE"

As a director of pictures dealing with the sea and its folk Irvin V. Willat recognizes no peer. This was proven in his masterly handling of "Behind The Door" and "Below The Surface." Joseph C. Lincoln's novel from which "PARTNERS OF THE TIDE" was adapted to the screen gives him even greater opportunities than did those two splendid stories just mentioned.

HODKINSON SERVICE

"The Breaking Point"

An engrossing society drama splendidly enacted. Bessie Barriscale handles perfectly what is undoubtedly the most powerful emotional role of her career. As the young mother who fights for her child and for her happiness, she gives what critics have declared to be a truly marvelous performance. The great cast which supports her further enhances the box-office values of this picture.

"A Certain Rich Man"

John Barclay's lust for gold made of him a ruthless relentless machine. He feared not God, neither regarded he man. Then came the change. A strangely fascinating story which is delineated by a most distinguished cast drawn from the ranks of Screendom's favorite players. The production values are very great and the direction is noteworthy.

"THE NUT" FAIRBANKS' BEST

If there is any doubt about the popularity of Douglas Fairbanks it certainly wasn't in evidence last Sunday at the Madison, where his latest picture, "The Nut," is having its first presentation in the state. The crowds packed the lobby all afternoon and evening. "The Nut" is full of novelties and surprises; it has many new and novel ideas and is different from anything he has ever made before. We'll say this much for Fairbanks — we have yet to see him make a poor picture. His stuff is clean—his comedy is always good—and you always feel that you get more than your money's worth. If the screen had more like Fairbanks and more pictures like he makes, there would never be any need of censorship or adverse criticism. His picture, "The Mark of Zorro," is still cleaning up and we predict that "The Nut" will be even a bigger success. Hats off to you, Douglas.

Does He Read His Trade Paper?

A Letter from the Temple Theater, Toledo, Ohio

¶ "I believe the reproduction of an ad is the best form of publicity and the greatest aid to fellow exhibitors of any department in the NEWS. I'm forced to admit that after planning four ads one week, I am often stumped as to what to do for the next show until I reach for my copy of your publication. A good press book does wonders, but for the details that are needed to tone an ad your little department can't be beat. F'rinstance, we got the famous Temple clock from the NEWS; the orchestra from Sid Grauman's ad in the NEWS; the program idea; several perfect ideas of ways to tie on comedies; pretty borders; and goodness knows what not."

What of the Audit?

¶ "We desire to state that we have read your A. B. C. audit over carefully and cannot help state that a wonderful showing has been made. We wish to compliment you on the practical and intelligent manner in which this circulation audit appears. It is very valuable to advertisers in the Motion Picture News.

First National Business Reports

PASSION

CRITERION THEATRE, Atlanta, Ga.—Broke box office records. Patrons praised it to the skies, especially the more educated people. Made more money than any other picture in this theatre on a week's run. Advanced admission.

HAVEN THEATRE, Olean, N. Y.—Broke both attendance and box office records, taking in $2,100 on the first day with a seating capacity of 1,200. Patrons showed intense interest from start to finish.

SUPERBA THEATRE, Raleigh, N. C.—Took in $2,001.45 in three days with a seating capacity of 663, breaking all previous records for this house. Patrons were delighted with the picture.

WALNUT THEATRE, Cincinnati, Ohio.—In one week all house records were broken by $1,000. Held over for a second week. Audiences were delighted.

THE KID

COLUMBIA THEATRE, Pittsburgh, Pa.—Both attendance and box office records broken. The audiences voted it a "knockout." Now running the fourth week and still doing more business than any other picture on the first night.

RIALTO THEATRE, Omaha, Neb.—Broke both attendance and box office records. Played to 40,000 persons in a week, one-fifth the population of the city. Held over and attendance increased. Patrons unanimous in calling it best Chaplin ever seen.

STANLEY THEATRE, Philadelphia, Pa.—Played to average of 5,000 a day for a week, more admissions than any time in the history of the theatre.

EMPRESS THEATRE, Oklahoma City, Okla.—Playing to capacity at every show. All previous records of this or any other house here smashed to pieces. It is positively a sensation. Every one pleased and many come back to see it again.

California Shows the Way

LOS ANGELES (By Wire), CALIFORNIA, is showing New York and the national industry the way to complete industrial unity in such battles as censorship.

Los Angeles held a meeting last week at which were represented the various local film organizations.

A charter was immediately applied for under the name of the Affiliated Picture Interests.

Note the name, "Affiliated." Just that is meant.

Every single organization irrespective of its individual aims and policy, irrespective of its position within the industry or its relation or feeling toward any other branch of the industry, enrolled beneath a common banner—a common banner with but a single slogan and a single aim, namely, to protect the industry, the entire industry against a common and outside foe.

Producers, distributors, exhibitors enrolled as one. No factional or commercial relations were permitted to enter into the situation.

And with the theatres, exchanges, and studios lined up the enrollment had only begun. The employees will also become members—directors, writers, players, cameramen, bookers, ushers, operators, carpenters—all of the several thousand people whose livelihood is dependent upon the motion picture industry.

Other enterprises, outside of this industry but commercially interested will be asked to aid with money and influence.

A large fund is sought and will be raised; but names, not merely money is wanted.

At the second meeting the Allied Amusements of Northern California were represented by Judge Golden and Eugene M. Roth.

Judge Golden, in a very able address, one we should like to hear often in the councils of the industry in New York—waived aside all consideration save a united organization of the picture interests of the State of California. He tendered his organization "Write your own ticket for us."

"All of us," said he, "are of one mind on censorship. All of us have but one aim—self-protection. Then all we need is to unite under intelligent leadership."

Amen!

Comment seems unnecessary.

But we will add just these two thoughts.

With such an organization there need be no fear of preying busybodies in California.

And, secondly, if such a spirit of affiliation prevailed throughout the industry and such an organization were effected nationally there would be no present or future danger of iniquitous oppression.

Can any argument of any kind possibly prevail—for one moment—against an industry united for its own self preservation?

Like Tennyson's Brook

WE have been gravely informed recently that the industry will pass through a crisis in 1921.

Which brings to mind the fact that we were so informed in 1920, 1919, 1918—and so on back to 1913, when we were first advised that the industry was about to undergo a grave crisis.

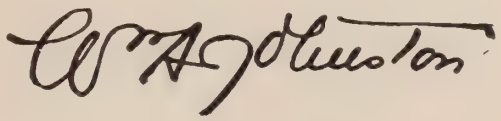
Crises come and crises go; but the industry seems to go right along—and regardlessly.

* * * *

The Great God Hokum

WE don't like the Chicago Tribune's attitude toward motion pictures and we consider its reviews about the most unfair—unfair to the public as well as the picture—of any published.

But we do subscribe to the following editorial sentiment: "One trouble with the movies is that they have not learned yet to be on the square. They think too much of hokum. The better producers are getting more and more on the level with the people, but hokum is a great god and his worshippers turn timidly from him."



Recent Incorporations in State of New York

The Cataract Theatre Corporation, with its principal place of business located at Niagara Falls, and a capitalization of $1,200,000, filed papers with the Secretary of States' office at Albany, N. Y., for the purpose of engaging in the motion picture industry in New York State. The directors are Adam C. Hayman, Arthur Killian of Niagara Falls, and Joseph Schuchert of Buffalo. Other companies incorporating during the past week include:

Carter Cinema Producing Corporation, $250,000, Alex Begg, George A. Conroy, J. J. Mangini, New York; Globe Productions, $300,000, Henry L. Gates, George Perry, Allan Rock, New York; Gardner Hall Amusement Co., Inc., Troy, $2,000, Charles W. Armstrong, James S. Miller, J. H. Broderick, Troy; Boulevard Amusement Co., $20,000, Jacob Brandt, Abraham and Pauline Kalfus, New York; Jack Curley, Inc., John Curley, Great Neck; Frank Kaeppel, Allan Doremus, New York; Frivol Films, Inc., $35,000, C. H. Ferrell, Otto and Magdalene Kloth, Brooklyn; Keorpath Corporation, $1,000, Harvey Watkins, Frank Jones, John Hopkins, New York; Vera Art, Inc., $50,000, Davide Caloagni, Victor Consiglio, V. A. Gianett; Frontier Features, $100,000, Anders Randolf, F. T. Buckley, New York; H. B. Ragsdale, Brooklyn; Johnston-MacFarland, Inc., $500, H. L. Cross, J. W. Phillips, J. S. Collins, New York.

Dissatisfied with Kansas City Censor Official

Dissatisfaction with the enforcement of the movie censorship of Henry Goldman, censor of the Kansas City censor board, rather than with the ordinance itself, was expressed at a meeting of representatives from twenty-five civic organizations in Kansas City on Thursday of last week. A committee was appointed to confer with the Film Board of Trade in the interest of better moving pictures.

The meeting was composed of representatives of civic organizations chosen to take some action in regard to the regulation of motion pictures. That such action was necessary was decided at a mass meeting last month.

The majority of civic representatives agreed that it was not necessary to advocate a change in the laws to accomplish what they desired, but, instead, to obtain the co-operation of the film board.

San Francisco's Film Ball Proved Decided Success

The motion picture ball held at the Civic Auditorium, San Francisco, March 5, under the auspices of the Allied Amusement Industries of California, as the opening of a campaign entered into by San Francisco business to advertise the northern part of the state, was a success from every standpoint. Many "stars" attended.

A.M.P.A. Is Selected to Represent Industry

That the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., have been appointed to represent the motion-picture industry in the huge re-consecration meeting to be held at Madison Square Garden, March 18, and that the association has accepted the appointment and fully concurred in the purposes of the meeting were developments of the A. M. P. A.'s weekly meeting at the Cafe Boulevard, March 10.

The Re-Consecration meeting, consecrated to the upholding of Americanism and American ideals, is being fostered by many patriotic societies of national or local organization.

For the A. M. P. A., President Paul Lazarus appointed the following committee to co-operate with the organizers of the meeting in the preparation of slides and trailers for advertising purposes; Victor Shapiro, chairman; Tom Wiley and E. P. McNamee. Wells Hawks will act as liaison officer between the A. M. P. A. and the committee for the Re-Consecration meeting.

Film Men Attend Silver Wedding Anniversary

Alfred Weiss, vice-president of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, and Mrs. Weiss, celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary at the Hotel Biltmore Saturday evening, March 11th. Mr. Weiss has been prominent in motion pictures for sixteen years and the affair was attended by some of the foremost film executives of the country. As an intimate part of the evening, motion pictures of the anniversary couple were shown.

British Ban on Building of Theatres Big Set-Back

One of the greatest boons that can come to the motion picture industry of Great Britain today would be the lifting of the embargo on theatre buildings, according to Major W. H. Burdon Evans, a director of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., who has just completed a visit of ten days at the New York home-office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In company with Col. B. Williamson, general manager of the Cambrian railroad of England, Major Evans came to New York on March 7, for a brief holiday. The two returned home on the Caronia which sailed March 16.

"What we need in Great Britain more than anything else at the present time is more theatres—theatres of the type of your Rivoli and Rialto," declared Major Evans. "Once we have theatres of this type, the spirit of competition will be more evident in showmanship, and the pictures will be given much better presentation. The government embargo on luxury building is not the only obstacle confronting our industry at the present time, as the high cost of building is a most serious problem. Building costs are 200 and 300 per cent higher than they were during the pre-war days, and, unless these costs drop in the near future, theatre building operations will be slow in getting under way once the government restrictions are removed."

N. Y. Mayors Will Discuss Daylight Saving Plan

ALBANY, March 15.—The meeting of the New York State Conference of Mayors, which will be held at Albany on March 17 to discuss a plan for a uniform Daylight Saving ordinance for cities of the State, will be of interest to motion picture exhibitors generally. Buffalo, one of the chief opponents of the Daylight Saving repeal, favors a five-months duration of the system for municipalities. Fiorella La Guardia, president of the New York City Board of Aldermen, has been invited to participate in the conference.

F. P.-Lasky Issues Statement on 1920 Earnings

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY Corporation's consolidated statement (which includes the earnings of subsidiary companies owned 90% or more) reports for the year ended December 25th, 1920, net operating profits of $5,337,129.79, after deducting all charges, reserves and Federal income and excess profit taxes. This compares with $3,132,985.22 earned in the year 1919.

After allowing for payment of dividends on the preferred stock, the above earnings are at the annual rate of $21.77 on the 208,403 shares of common stock outstanding in the hands of the public, compared with $15.35 per share earned in 1919 on 199,675 shares outstanding at that time.

Crafts and Other Reform Leaders in Heart-to-Heart Talk

Epoch-Making Session with National Association Holds Bright Promise

IMAGINE the scene: Dr. Wilbur P. Crafts, head of the International Reform Bureu, Mrs. Ella Boole, of the W. C. T. U., H. C. Barber, head of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, Mrs. Clarence E. Waterman, of the Woman's Federation, Dr. O. R. Miller head of the New York Civic League—and William A. Brady, president of the National Association, Gabriel Hess, chairman of the Association's censorship committee, Percy L. Waters, and other film representatives.

All gathered in the executive rooms of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; all talking amicably, in heart-to-heart fashion, smiles aplenty, and apparently reaching a common agreement.

Can you imagine it?

You can't.

Especially if you are one of the "warhorses" of the industry, one of the veterans that journeyed to Albany and other State Capitols for censorship hearings, that heard the "lie" flung fast and furiously, saw the red flush of anger and bitterness on faces wrought up over the pros and cons of censorship.

But it's all true.

The scene described above is the setting at the National Association headquarters on Monday, March 14th, of this year that will long be remembered—1921.

So, before we go on to give you the account of the event in accepted news fashion, let's pause a moment to distribute the credit for an event that no film man had ever expected to see. Primarily, the instigator of Monday's heart-to-heart session was Benjamin B. Hampton, in his correspondence with Dr. Crafts growing out of the Pictorial Review articles; secondarily, credit must be given to Gabriel Hess, since the beginning a staunch believer in the value of the Hampton articles, and William A. Brady, for their prompt use of the opportunity presented.

And for the results achieved by the afternoon's meeting one must at no time forget the courteous spirit shown by Dr. Crafts, Mrs. Boole, Dr. Barber, and the understanding of the industry's problems and desire to help evidences by Mrs. Waterman.

All in all it was a great day—as you can see when a news story starts out by distributing flowers.

The net results of the meeting are, first, the declaration by Dr. Crafts that he will withhold all agitation within his control for an indefinite period pending the formulation by the industry of plans to enforce the recently adopted "thirteen points;" secondly, the advancement by both "sides" of various constructive suggestions that seem to bear possibilities for compromise legislation satisfactory to all; thirdly, the flat statement by both Dr. Crafts and Mrs. Boole that they did not seek censorship as censorship, that they were willing to accept any reasonable form of "regulation" that would aid in cleaning the screen.

Speaking for the industry, Gabriel Hess declared that while motion picture men would oppose "to the dying breath" any attempt at pre-publicity censorship, they too would welcome any reasonable effort at cooperative regulation.

Former Supreme Court Justice Henrick presided as chairman of the meeting.

Dr. Crafts was the first to address the meeting. He explained how it came about that he was present at the get-together and assigned full credit to Benjamin Hampton for the opportunity of meeting the producers. He took particulars pains to distinguish the movement which he sponsors from that which has come to be known as the "Blue Law Movement," under which the agitation for Sunday closing of places of amusement is being conducted. He insisted that the issues of censorship as sponsored by him and the interests he represents were not to be confounded with the Sunday Blue Laws in any way. In elaborating further on the character of the organization which he heads, he explained that moving-pictures were not the only object of interest to his organization. Gambling, divorce and the drug problem were pointed out to be matters with which his organization was also concerned. Mr. Crafts next indulged in a few passes at the National Board of Review and wound up this phase of his talk by asserting that the recent adoption of the "thirteen points" by the film producers was an admission on their part that the pictures were in need of some cleansing treatment.

And then Dr. Crafts got down to remedies. If only the ladies would organize, he suggested, and declare all theatres "out of bounds" which showed indecent pictures the results realized would undoubtedly make for cleaner pictures. And then there was the existing police powers. A more extensive application of them would bring about improvement. Furthermore, suppose the thirteen resolutions adopted by the producers were made part and parcel of the license granted to the exhibitors with the provision that an infringement of any of these regulations would entail forfeiture of the license. This plan would certainly bring beneficial results, he believed.

The speaker following Dr. Crafts was Gabriel L. Hess of the Goldwyn organization. In his reply to Dr. Crafts he declared that the National Association was in favor of the enforcement of all existing laws prohibiting the presentation of objectionable films. However, he emphatically pointed out that the producers were opposed to legalized censorship and would combat it wherever and whenever proposed.

The proposal of a question at this juncture by Dr. Crafts caused the precipitation of a brief issue between himself and Mrs. Clarence E. Waterman. Following the line of Mr. Hess's address, Dr. Crafts asked Mr. Hess whether the plan previously proposed of making the thirteen points an integral part of the exhibitor's license with penalties for their violation would not prove helpful. Before the Goldwyn executive could make reply, Mrs. Waterman, who declared she was the representative of a women's organization embracing 35,000 members and supporting the proposed Clayton measure at Albany for state censorship, branded Dr. Craft's licensing suggestion as impracticable. She maintained that the License Commissioner did not have the necessary machinery to enforce any such regulation, as that proposed by Dr. Crafts. The latter replied that the closing of a theatre by municipal authority for showing questionable pictures had already been accomplished in actual fact and cited the instance of the closing of a picture house by an order of Mayor McClellan in New York City.

The licensing suggestion also brought a comment from H. C. Barber of the Society for the Prevention of Crime to the effect that such a plan would not eradicate the root of the evil. He held the producers responsible for unclean pictures and insisted that a change of methods on their part was the real solution of the question.

"Some Picture"

ONE of the most select audiences that has ever witnessed a New York film premiere was on hand last Monday evening for the opening of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," the latest William Fox special to make its bid for Broadway long run honors. The trade critics have already sounded the praises of this Twain modernization, but the critics haven't said it half as loudly as the continued laughter and applause of the first night audience.

William Fox is hitting the bull's-eye with a regularity that is cheering to all who admire this square-shooting showman. "Over the Hill" is still setting records, and now "A Connecticut Yankee" arrives for a long stay at the Selwyn Theatre. Next—"The Queen of Sheba."

California to Have United Organization

Los Angeles and San Francisco Film Interests to Combat Censorship

THE north and south of California are united to fight Censorship in that State and elsewhere if need be, the combining of forces having been brought about Tuesday evening, March 8, at a meeting held in Los Angeles by Organizers of Affiliated Picture Interests and Judge I. M. Golden and Eugene Roth representing Allied Amusement Interests of San Francisco. These factions of the film industries in California are in accord and united to prevent the passage of any Censorship laws or ordinances and to fight anything unjust to the film interests.

It can also be said that the San Francisco and immediate adjoining territories is now 100 per cent organized. Outlying districts in Northern California are being brought into the organization and in Los Angeles efforts are being made by members of fifteen organizations to bring into the Affiliated Picture Interests every person in any way identified with the film trade. It is expected the Los Angeles Organization will have membership of more than 10,000 within two weeks.

At the joint meeting reports of various committees were made showing that the organization of the industries would, no doubt, be 100 per cent in membership. Judge I. M. Golden was introduced and gave a resume of the formation of the San Francisco Anti-Censorship Organization, telling in detail the widespread need of a united front by motion picture and amusement interests, in order to successfully combat the forces now working to regulate amusement fields at costs of millions to the people who have investments in the motion pictures.

Judge Golden renamed the enemies of the Film and Amusements Interests "Blueshevicks" and pointed out that small minority with a capable leader and sufficiently financed can put over a movement without difficulty unless there is a sufficiently financed opposition, well organized.

The plan of the organization and fund raising system of the San Francisco Organization differs greatly from that of recently formed Los Angeles incorporation but it is the consensus of opinion of the leaders that this will, in no way, prevent a harmonious affiliation of the two bodies who are both striving for the same ends. The two organizations will be kept in close touch and work together for the benefit of the Industries throughout California and expand their efforts to other States if need be.

In reports of the various Organizations' representatives the first to prove its 100 per cent membership was that of American Society of Cinematography. President Phil Rosen of that Association delivered a check in payment for seventy-six initiation fees and six months dues for each of the society's members. The Christie Film Company was the first studio to be 100 per cent in membership. A check for 25 memberships was presented. William D. Taylor reported more than 100 membership had been secured at Famous Players Lasky Studio. Chairman Frank E. Woods stated that the Screen Writers Guild of the Authors' League of America would be 100 per cent within a week and representatives of other organizations reported applicants for membership totaling nearly 1,000.

Incorporation papers are expected within the next few days and a mass meeting will be called shortly for the complete formation of Affiliated Picture Interests Corporation.

Kansas Exhibitors Win Legislative Rights

Organized Efforts Secure Passage of Deposit Bill; Missouri Expects Like Victory

THE Legislative Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, consisting of R. G. Liggett and M. Van Praag of Kansas City and H. Woody of Lincoln, report a series of signal victories in the legislature.

The efforts of the committee had been concentrated on a measure designed to guard the advance payments of deposits made by exhibitors to producers or exchanges for the purpose of securing the payment of film rentals.

The measure provided that all money deposited as security for film rentals by exhibitors must be kept by the producer or exchange in a bank in the county where the depositor resides. The deposit must bear the character of a trust fund and is subject to all safeguards which the laws of Kansas throw around trust funds of this character. The bill also provides for the payment of interest to the depositors at stated intervals. One of the most drastic features of this Anti-Deposit bill is the penalties which will be imposed for its violation. Any violation of the law is punishable by the forfeiture of twice the amount deposited and the forfeiture goes to the depositor. In spite of the bitter and well financed opposition which the exchanges in the Kansas territory organized against this bill seeking to impede its progress at every turn, the organized exhibitors of the State succeeded in passing the bill though both houses of the legislature by substantial majorities.

A number of amendments to the present censorship law had been introduced, all with a view of making regulations now in force more drastic and sweeping. The exhibitors showed a united front against all these bills and were successful in defeating every one of them in the early part of the session. Another creditable victory of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, due to the energy and sleepless vigilance of their legislative committee was the defeat of a bill copied from statutes now in force in some of the Eastern States, prohibiting the admission of children under sixteen years of age from attending motion picture theatres without the accompaniment of parents or guardians.

Word comes from Missouri that the Anti-Deposit bill designed to safeguard the deposits of exhibitors from unscrupulous or irresponsible producers and exchanges has passed the State Senate by a substantial majority. There was no opposition to the bill in the House and the vote in favor of it was unanimous. The bill is now in the hands of the Governor who, it is confidently expected, will affix his signature to the measure at an early date. This bill, it is said, had encountered the bitter hostility of the producing and distributing interests who fought it at every step but without success.

Most gratifying reports are at hand from Texas, where, according to a communication from E. T. Peter, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Texas, the organized exhibitors defeated all attempts to enact hostile legislation, despite a very powerful lobby. The legislature has adjourned sine die. The Censorship bill which had been introduced at the very opening of the legislature and which had lively support from many quarters, was killed in committee. A law enforcement bill, the effect of which would have been to close up every motion picture theatre in Texas on Sunday, was reported out of committee with a majority report against it. There was also a minority report, and the bill was printed in the House on this report. The chances for its passage, however, seemed so poor that its advocates never attempted to take it from the calendar and force it to a vote. The bill which would have collected three per cent of the gross receipts from the exhibitors of the State was killed in committee despite several efforts to discharge the committee from further consideration and transfer the fight for its enactment to the floor of the House. The Governor has announced

Wm. A. Brady Makes Report of Tour of Western and Midwestern States

Visited Sixteen States; Combatted Hostile Legislation; Urges Union

WILLIAM A. BRADY, President of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has returned from his 10,000 mile tour of the west and middlewest. He visited sixteen states where legislation hostile to the screen was pending, appeared before many legislative bodies, exhibitors and exchange organizations, discussed the problems of the picture business with hundreds of prominent statesmen and leaders of industry, and returned with a thorough first-hand knowledge of conditions which confront the picture interests in the states he visited.

The purposes of Mr. Brady's trip were primarily to combat adverse legislation and to emphasize the wisdom of all factors of the industry getting together for the common good. In discussing conditions as he found them, Mr. Brady said that the professional agitator must be driven from the picture industry if it is to thrive and prosper. He stated that no constructive move in the direction of a powerful and permanent organization can be made until that is done.

"All other big business operates along the lines of thorough organization, with all branches functioning together in harmony," he said. "The time has come when the motion picture industry must, for its own protection, organize itself in a similar way. Everyone realizes this and understands its importance. And everyone is ready for it. It only remains for proper plans to be arranged to bring it about.

"In all big enterprises there must be one central head or central committee to pass upon matters of vital importance—similar to that of the American Federation of Labor, where all business disputes and differences are settled by arbitration, with smaller arbitration boards in every territory or zone. This can well be applied to the motion picture industry, so that the interests of the weak can be protected.

"The small exhibitor has just as much right to a square deal as the big and powerful one. He can get it through the proper organization of the industry in such a way as I have suggested. As conditions are at present, the smaller and poorer exhibitor is being taught dissatisfaction and destructive methods. But the big and strong men in the industry are ready and willing to lend a helping hand to those who are not strong.

"The difference of opinion about uniform contracts and advance deposits can readily be ironed out when professional agitators are eliminated and the industry is organized along the lines of other great businesses."

Mr. Brady said that the right steps have been taken in this direction in many states he visited where a strong measure of co-operation exists between exhibitors and exchange organizations — all working amicably together for the common good. This he said was particularly noticeable in Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, California, Utah, Idaho, Colorado and several other states.

In Minnesota, Mr. Brady said he found all branches of the picture industry working in complete harmony, largely through the efforts of Benjamin Friedman, President of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, Theodore L. Hays of the Finkelstein & Ruben organization, and W. E. Steffes, President of the United Theatrical Protective League.

In Nebraska, he declared, effective organization work along the right lines is being accomplished largely through the activities of Stuart Gould, Business Representative of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners; President Premer of the same organization, Jane Bowen, Secretary of the Omaha Film Board of Trade, and others identified with the exhibition and distribution of pictures in that territory.

In South Dakota he found that the burden of the fight for freedom of the screen has been borne for many years by J. E. Hipple of Pierre, who co-operated heartily with him during his visit to that town, he said. In North Dakota, he found a well organized body of exhibitors and exchange men all of whom were on the job to combat hostile legislation.

In Montana L. W. Marcus, representing the exchanges, Rolla Duncan of the Regent Theatre at Billings, and several wide-awake exhibitors of Butte, together with William Myers of that city, were among those who were found to be doing all within their power to protect the interests of the industry in that state, according to Mr. Brady.

Claude Jensen and his partner, Mr. Von Herberg, together with J. A. Koerpel met Mr. Brady in Seattle. Assisted by other exhibitors and exchange men, they have accomplished much in presenting an effective showing against measures which seek to restrict the freedom of the screen in the state of Washington, declared Mr. Brady.

In Oregon, he found Mayor Baker of Portland a good friend of the industry, and Jensen and Von Herberg doing all within their power to build up the industry's organiation there.

In the West Mr. Brady stated that he found the industry has many friends among the men in high public office who are helping the picture men solve the problems that beset the business—such men as Mayor Rolph of San Francisco, Attorney General Wellington Rankin of Montana, Governor McKelvie of Nebraska and Governor McMasters of South Dakota, with all of whom Mr. Brady discussed the affairs of the industry during his trip.

"In the West, the picture industry will have its greatest growth in the future," said Mr. Brady. "In many places, however, I found men who had large investments in picture theatres refer to the business as a side line, ready to blow up at any moment. They do not realize that they are a part of a great industry in its infancy, and not a game that may be raided at any moment—an industry mightier in its power than the newspaper and which already ranks fifth among the great industries of the nation.

"I also found a well defined inclination among many picture men to overlook the great national needs of the industry and to concern themselves only with their local needs. These men must rise above this short-sightedness and pull with us all in the great national development of the motion picture industry.

"In every state and in every community there are groups of bright young men ready and waiting to be organized as units of an organization whose sphere of usefulness will be found in every city, town and hamlet throughout the land.

"The industry now is facing many perils. Censorship is only one. There are persons and interests who are growing jealous of the popularity of the motion picture and who seek to destroy it. We can fight them successfully only by organization of the most comprehensive kind—an organization as complete as that of Henry Ford or the Standard Oil or the Texas Oil Co. with service stations everywhere—even on the desert."

One necessity for immediate and thorough co-operation between all branches of the picture industry was found by Mr. Brady in the brand of organization that apparently exists between the group of censorship and blue law advocates throughout the country.

"I was amazed to discover," he said, "that no matter where I went these self-appointed saviours of the public soul used the same arguments. They varied hardly a word, and their campaigns merely started with arguments.

"I saw legislators hooted in the halls of State Capitols by organized bands which seemed to me to have been rehearsed for the part they were playing. When so-called reform measures were under discussion in legislative chambers the galleries were invariably packed, and everywhere there appeared to be a claque of iron-palmed men and women who knew perfectly why they were there and operated accordingly. In practically every State Capitol I visited I got the impression that every move made by these self-appointed guardians of public welfare was staged in advance, and well staged.

"No one who has not been through the country recently can appreciate what these fanatics purpose and what they are already to an alarming degree accomplishing. Their determination to be the sole arbiters of the pleasures of your life and mine goes far deeper than the censorship of motion pictures, Sunday closing of baseball and the like. These things, in their master minds, are merely the beginning of an indigo millennium in which they see themselves crowned with blue halos. Recently in both North Dakota and Utah bills were passed prohibiting men smoking in public. That is an example.

"They are amusement haters, pirates whose prize is the public's pleasure, and they must be called to time. The only laws they recognize as safe are those they draft themselves. Their attitude toward the motion picture, for example, is indicative of this. During the war there was no question of legislation affecting the screen. It was daily proving its worth as a morale builder to millions of troops in France. But because in the opinion of these folk the motion picture since the war has suddenly developed faults, the vast majority of which they have been unable to advance, except to their own satisfaction, it follows that what on the screen educates and instructs cannot perform those vitally important functions except at the dictation of these people. Why? There is no answer, except that that is the line of reasoning on which their campaign is being conducted. It is thoroughly false, and the sooner the Americans awake to that fact the better for them.

"The public conscience is sometimes slow to awaken. We are for the most part an easy-going folk. We don't take things seriously until they become so serious in themselves as to precipitate a crisis. That crisis, in connection with this alleged reform agitation, in my opinion is here now, and once the American public awakes to a full realization of what this mad minority is trying to put over on them, we may hope for a nation-wide wave of wrath that will put the blue laws and their backers where they belong.

Wire Briefs From the Coast

J. D. WILLIAMS left for the East on March 14 after spending a week with producers. He stopped at San Francisco to see Turner Dehnkin.

Jesse D. Hampton left for the East on March 12 to look over the distribution market.

W. W. Hodkinson has had a number of conferences with the directors of the Chamber of Commerce and men of local banking interests who desire to bring the distributing offices to the Coast. The outcome is unannounced.

The Affiliated Picture Interests, now incorporated, will wage their first fight on the proposed Blue Laws at Pomona, Cal., where the voters on April 5 will decide upon Sunday closing. The Gore Brothers and Lesser own only three theatres in Pomona. A theatre manager of that city refused to give his house to the Church people for a revival this winter and the ministers are trying to close up the town. Addresses on censorship by eminent men of the industry are staged at the theatres every night and slides and circular letters are being used. Rupert Hughes and Peter Kyne were the first speakers. The Screen Writers Guild of the Authors' League are preparing a number of fifty-foot films showing authors and statements by them on the question of censorship. The list includes Frank E. Woods, Montague Glass, Gouverneur Morris, Rupert Hughes, Thompson Buchanan, Edward Knoblock, Rob Wagner, Rita Weiman, William A. Johnston, Irvin Cobb, Gertrude Atherton, Elmer Harris and others.

Edgar Lewis is preparing to resume production. Releasing arrangements are indefinite. He has been invited to join the Associated Producers' program.

John Galsworthy, the famous British novelist, is here conferring with producers regarding writing for the screen.

The Painters' Union have introduced a bill in the California Legislature prohibiting the use of spray guns in applying paints containing poison. Practically all painting of studio sets require the use of guns.

Hodkinson and Vogel Sign Big Export Contract

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and William M. Vogel, the well-known motion picture exporter, have entered into an arrangement whereby Mr. Vogel assumes the active management of the export activities of the present and future Hodkinson releases with complete rights to the world distribution, exclusive of the United States and Canada. The deal represents one of the very largest of recent export affiliations from the standpoint of productions involved and foreign exhibition values, it is declared.

The products already listed for release and manufacture comprise features made under the supervision of Irvin V. Willat, Hugo Ballin, Benj. B. Hampton, J. L. Frothingham, Rockett Bros. Dial Film Company, National, Irene Castle Productions and other Hodkinson units.

The offices of Mr. William M. Vogel are temporarily located on the fourth floor of the Longacre Building, 1476 Broadway, New York.

Gus Metzgar of Portland, Ore., on Censor Board

Gus A. Metzgar, manager of the Rivoli theatre, is one of the two newly appointed members of the Portland, Ore., board of motion picture censors. The other member is Ralph McAfee, secretary of the Church Federation. Mrs. Alexander Thompson, who served on the board last year, is the hold over member. The two vacancies occurred due to the resignation of C. S. Jensen, senior member of the firm of Jensen and VonHerberg, and of Rabbi Jonah B. Wise. This board is now operating, although an ordinance providing for a new form of censorship is before the city council.

New 1500 Seat House Will Be Built in Portland

Announcement has been made by Gus A. Metzgar, of the Rivoli theatre, Portland, Ore., that a modern photoplay house with a seating capacity of 1500, will be built on Portland's east side during the summer. Construction work will start before June.

A corner lot at 39th and Hawthorne avenue, directly across from the largest Masonic hall on the East side and in the heart of a thickly populated section and business district, has been purchased for $15,000. The theatre building will also contain on the ground floor several spaces for stores. A huge three manual Wurlitzer organ will be installed. This theatre will be the first modern theatre of any size at all to be built on the East side of the Williamette river which divides the larger residential section from the old business district.

Refute Argument Against Use of Girl Ushers

Protest has been made by Portland, Ore., film men to the A. P. story put on the wire at Chicago and recently published by a local newspaper in which 85 per cent of the fire marshals of the United States declared themselves opposed to the employment of girls as ushers in motion picture houses. "Men ushers are safer," the marshals said.

Judgment in time of panic does not depend on sex but the individual, say Portland theatre men. Girls have proved to be much more efficient, courteous and pleasing than the usual "pimply-face" boys which sometimes do this work, they assert. There are men employees about every theatre regardless of the sex of the ushers, was another argument used against the firemen's contention.

Brady Confers with Nat'l Ass'n Executives

A meeting of the producers and distributors divisions and members of the executive committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held at the Hotel Claridge Friday, March 11, for the purpose of hearing President William A. Brady's preliminary report of his six weeks' tour of the United States in opposition to censorship legislation and to foster a stronger bond of unity between the various factors of the motion picture industry.

After his report a resolution was proposed by Adolph Zukor extending a vote of thanks to Mr. Brady for the work he has accomplished. This resolution was unanimously adopted.

A resolution was proposed by P. L. Waters to the effect that a committee be appointed by President Brady to meet with a committee of the National Board of Review for the purpose of discussing a practical application of the set of standards which has been adopted by the National Association. This resolution was also adopted and the committee will be announced shortly.

Those at the meeting and the companies represented were: Adolph Zukor and Lee Counselman, of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Earl J. Hudson and E. B. Johnson, of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.; Gabriel L. Hess, of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; R. A. Rowland and W. E. Atkinson, of Metro Pictures Corporation; J. S. Woody, of Realart Pictures Corporation; C. C. Pettijohn, of the Selznick Corporation; P. L. Waters, of Triangle Distributing Corporation; H. Goldstein, of Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Saul E. Rogers, of Fox Film Corporation; E. W. Hammons, of Educational Film Exchanges; Murray Silverstone, of International Film Service, Inc.; Albert Grey, of D. W. Griffith, Inc.; Joseph M. Schenck, of Norma Talmadge Film Company; Hiram Abrams, of United Artists Corporation; Oscar Price, of Associated Producers, Inc.; Paul H. Cromelin, of Inter-Ocean Film Company; Thomas G. Wiley, Frederick H. Elliott, Lloyd D. Willis.

In response to a request of the executive committee of the National Association, Mr. Brady will, within a few days, resume his tour.

Beatrice Dominguez Dies Following Operation

Beatrice Dominguez, noted as the most beautiful Spanish-type actress on the American screen, died in the Clara Barton Hospital, Los Angeles, recently, following an operation for appendicitis. Miss Dominguez was taken ill in Universal City, Cal., during the filming of the fourth episode of the serial, "The White Horseman." Just prior to being engaged for the Universal serial, Miss Dominguez completed a colorful role in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," in which she appeared as an Argentine dancer.

Illinois Exhibitors' Convention Postponed

President Joseph Hopp of the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance announces that owing to unforeseen circumstances the convention scheduled for March 22 at the Hotel Sherman in Chicago has been postponed to a date which will be announced within the next few days.

Several Censorship Bills Fail as Legislative Sessions End

Measures in Kansas, Texas, Indiana and Oregon Fail to Pass

WITH legislative sessions in the various States either closed or swiftly drawing to an end, news comes of the defeat or probably abandonment of several censor bills. The week can practically be regarded as a week of victories for the motion picture interests.

After spending an entire day on the motion picture censor board bill and recommending, in committee, the measure for passage, the lower house of the Kansas Legislature slaughtered the measure on the third reading. The vote was 52 for and 50 against. The bill provided an increase of $300 a year to members of the State censor board. The chairman of the board now receives $2,100 a year and the other two members, $1,800.

The work of the State board was condemned by members of the house, who declared that higher salaries would result in more efficient censorship. Opponents argued that the remedy for alleged immoral pictures shown in Kansas lies in prosecution by county attorneys and that a more strict parental guidance of children was needed.

The censor bill in North Carolina was also defeated. Reports state that the measure was killed in both houses. In Texas the Legislature has adjourned sine die, but it is expected that the censorship bill, which was introduced early in the session, and which was killed in committee, will be introduced again in June, when a special session will be called by the Governor.

Oregon Bills Killed

Bills relative to State censorship and all motion picture regulations were defeated in the Oregon Legislature on the eve of its adjournment. Having waited to see what State action might be taken, the Portland faction desiring stricter surveillance of the screen, has immediately introduced a new city ordinance.

This ordinance provides for a censorship board of five members, and also creates three positions of motion picture inspectors, each inspector to be paid $150 a month.

A number of men and women spoke in behalf of this ordinance, maintaining that a board of three members could not function properly and that it would be necessary to increase the board to five members to gain proper results. This argument was opposed by the representatives of the theatre men, who held that the present censorship board is handling the work as well as possible, and that the only change provided in the new ordinance was the creation of three new $150 jobs.

Victory in Indiana

The Indiana State Legislature adjourned without having passed any of the threatened censorship and Sunday closing bills. The Nelson censorship bill, which combined the features of several other measures, got through the House and into the Senate, where it died by a vote of 23 to 18 on the last day of the session.

Missouri Bill in Doubt

The session of the Missouri Legislature is swiftly drawing to a close, and as the Senate is expected to be clutted up in a mad rush at the finish, the fate of the Senate censor bill is in doubt. Two censorship bills were introduced in the State early in the legislative session. The House bill was passed March 3 and sent to the Senate the following day. The Senate bill was reported out favorably by the judiciary committee and now is on the State calendar for engrossment. Upon reaching the Senate, the House bill was referred to the committee on criminal jurisprudence, where it has been allowed to remain —apparently to die peacefully.

The Law Enforcement Association of Kansas City, organized recently to aid in civic and moral problems of the city, has taken a stand for a State board of motion picture censorship for Missouri. State senators and representatives will be notified that the association is desirous of obtaining a censorship body and will be requested to take steps toward that end.

The executive committee of the association has been considering such action, but a final decision was not reached until last Wednesday. The matter was referred to the association by the Kansas City chamber of commerce.

The committeemen expressed the belief that there was a laxity of supervision of both the pictures shown and the advertising matter placed before the public. Howard McCutcheon is president of the association.

The Nebraska Bill

Censorship for Nebraska received the recommendation of the lower house on March 15 by a vote of 53 to 38 after a ten-hour day spent in hot debate and ending in personalities. The Hyrum Gifford bill, with penalization amendments, was killed by practically the same vote.

Bitterness was noted when Representative Williams, acting chairman, refused to permit Representative Rodman to introduce an amendment calling for a State referendum on motion picture censorship. Mr. Williams held that a gentlemen's agreement, made by both sides, barred the introduction of amendments.

The passing of the censorship bill is laid to incessant lobbying by club women. The arguments in favor of the bill were primarily aimed at licentious pictures and pictures in nude thrown on the screen. It was declared that local conditions would not make prosecution for these pictures possible and that censorship was the only cure.

At the end of the meeting Representative Rodman declared that he would get his amendment in when the bill comes up for its third reading, when he can ask to have it recommended for a specific amendment. Those opposed to the bill said that if the vote of the people was taken, as Rodman proposed, they would be found to hold different ideas than those possessed by club women clamoring for censorship.

The bill in brief, which must be considered on its third reading and in the lower house and then go to the Senate, provides for a board of three censors, appointed by the Governor, the Attorney General and State Superintendents of Public Instruction, who shall view all pictures shown in the State and delete any scenes they see fit.

The Week's Tribute

J. E. HIPPEL is the lone exhibitor of Pierre, South Dakota. J. E. Hippel is also the individual to whom William A. Brady declared this week the industry cannot give too much recognition for his work in combatting obnoxious legislation single-handed at the South Dakota Capitol. In addition to conducting the Bijou theatre in that city, Mr. Hippel is also publisher of a local paper. We welcome the opportunity to put Exhibitor Hippel's name in the black and white of recorded gratitude. "Personalities."

New York F.I.L.M. Club in New Quarters

F. I. L. M. Club's new quarters were occupied for the first time on Wednesday of last week. The grievance committee heard and determined twenty-five disputes between exchanges and theatres in the afternoon. General meeting of the Club was held in the evening. The grievance committee is now composed of three exchange men and three exhibitors. The arrangement is working out very satisfactorily to all litigants after two months' trial.

Mr. Ben Schwartz, formerly Select's branch manager, is back in the Club representing Warner's exchange.

Mr. Sam Zierler and his hard working committee which arranged the new quarters for the Club and the Hoy Reporting Service were given unstinted praise for the arrangement.

The Hoy Reporting Service will occupy the offices in connection with the Club rooms. All committees will meet in these quarters instead of at the Exchanges as heretofore.

President Chadwick appointed a new grievance committee of exchange managers as follows: Messrs. Henry Siegel of Select, Lester Adler of Realart, George Uffner of Universal; alternates: Messrs. Landau of Stoll and Broskie of Jans. Exhibitor members are Messrs. Goldreyer, Gainsboro, and Suchman.

An arrangement committee was appointed by President Chadwick to provide accommodations, etc., for the exchange managers who will attend the second annual state convention to be held in Rochester on April 5, 6 and 7. The committee is as follows: Messrs. Rosenbluh, Buxbaum, Siegel, Eckman, Rodner.

Coals to Newcastle

AN enterprise is being launched which promises to win new fields in Greece and the Balkan States for the American-made motion-picture production and which is destined to introduce American stars and players in localities of Southern Europe where heretofore only French, Italian and German screen personalities have been known to any great degree. The man heading this enterprise is Melton Phelos, who has been prominent in the Ohio exhibiting field for the last fourteen years. Associated with Mr. Phelos in his new venture is John Pekras, who has been Mr. Phelos's partner for many years. Both these men have acquired during their period of service in Ohio an intimate knowledge of the exhibiting and exchange phases of the picture industry which, it is expected, will stand them in good stead in carrying on their work abroad.

Mr. Phelos sailed for Athens on Tuesday, March 15th, aboard the S. S. Alexandria. In an interview with a representative of the News last week, he outlined his plans. A company headed by Mr. Prelos to be known as the Greek-American Film Exchange has bought three theatres in Athens, one in Salonika and one in Smyrna. These houses are to be remodelled after the fashion of the most up-to-date picture theatres in America. In them will be presented, exclusively, American-made pictures in strictly modern American style. This presentation will entail American methods of exploitation and advertising. A prominent and cogent feature of Mr. Phelos's presentation will be the insertion of all sub-titles in Greek in the print itself. According to Mr. Phelos, present-day methods of exhibition in Greece and the Balkan States take practically no account of exploitation or advertising; no attempt is made to instill atmospheric presentation into the program; and sub-titles appear in the original language of the producing company except in some instances where a slide containing a Greek translation of the sub-title is interposed at the required time, the picture being stopped meanwhile to permit this insertion. Mr. Phelos predicts that the introduction of his American methods and the use of the Greek sub-titles in the print itself will exert a tremendous influence in popularing American-made pictures in sections where American productions are but little known.

One other prominent feature is found in Mr. Phelos's plans. An exchange headquarters will be established in Athens. It is expected that following the introduction of American pictures in the Phelos theatres a demand will be created for American releases throughout Greece and the Balkan States. In anticipation of this demand, Mr. Phelos is bringing over with him an adequate supply of American serials, features, comedies and scenics, all of which have been equipped with Greek translations of the original sub-titles. These pictures, to which Mr. Phelos has secured the Greek and Balkan States distributing rights, will be handled from the exchange headquarters established in Athens. Negotiations are under way for a periodical shipment of American-made pictures from various producing companies, which is designed to maintain a constant supply of releases abroad through the Athens exchange. Future releases shipped abroad will in every instance be provided with Greek sub-titles in place of the original English titles, declared Mr. Phelos.

¶ Bringing Art to Greece Sounds That Way, But in This Case Its the New Art of Motion Picture Presentation That Melton Phelos Is Exporting.

Provisions have also been made for lithographs in the standard American sizes. The lower parts of these lithographs will be left blank for the insertion of titles and names in Greek. The latter part of this work will be done abroad. It is not infrequent for twenty-five theatres to club together and buy up about three inches of newspaper space, said Mr. Phelos. In this space only the name of the theatre and the kind of entertainment furnished, vaudeville, pictures, etc., are given. Present plans of the new company provide for extensive use of newspaper space after the American methods.

"One can scarcely tell whether a structure contains a grocery-shop or theatre," said Mr. Phelos, "as no attempt is made to beautify the theatre front or make it attractive. The installation of lobbies and electric signs and lights will prove a startling innovation, and we intend to do just this sort of thing in our houses abroad. From the angle of our exchange business, we will make it clear that our main purpose abroad is to circulate American releases in the Balkan States and popularize them. We shall be ready with our suggestions and service in bringing the theatres of the Greek and Balkan exhibitor up to American standards.

"We will also act as agents for the Simplex projecting machine and the Argus screen and accessories. When abroad a year ago I was surprised at the poor projection that I found in Greek picture houses. The jumping motion of pictures on the screen made it difficult to follow the picture for any length of time. When I informed one exhibitor of our improved methods in America and the fact that we had secured a steady projection on the screen, he was extremely surprised. Besides popularizing American pictures, therefore, we shall also introduce the American projection machine in the territories that we shall cover as well as electric theatrical accessories."

Jacob Wilk, who will act as the American representative of the new Greek-American company, was enthusiastic in his endorsement of the venture. He characterized it as a pioneer enterprise deserving of the greatest support on the part of the American producer as it was the American producer, he declared, who would eventually reap the reward in the opening up of these new fields to American-made releases.

U. S. Supreme Court Ends Jewel Carmen-Fox Suit

A unanimous decision has just been handed down by the United States Supreme Court which ends the action brought nearly three years ago by Jewel Carmen, motion picture actress, against Fox Film Corporation and the William Fox Vaudeville Company.

The litigation grew out of contracts entered into between Jewel Carmen and the two Fox concerns named, by which the actress bound her services for a number of years. While this contract had several years to run, Miss Carmen is said to have entered into a contract with the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation. Fox notified the actress that he would hold her to her contract and served notice upon the Keeney corporation that he would hold that company liable in case they made use of her services.

Suit was brought by Miss Carmen in the United States District Court, in which she asked a perpetual injunction restraining Fox from interfering with her contract rights and in which she also asks damages. The finding of this lower court was in favor of the actress and it issued the injunction and awarded her damages in the sum of $43,500.

Fox appealed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. This court reversed the finding of the lower court and the United States Supreme Court has just handed down a unanimous decision denying the application to re-open the case.

Never Say Quits

¶ Industrial Depression Is Not Causing a Slow-up in Detroit — Instead They Are "Giving 'em the Gas" of Good Pictures and Live Advertising.

DETROIT exhibitors, faced with a business depression that has never been equalled in the history of the city, due to the suspension of practically every one of the automobile plants which are the mainsprings of the industrial life of the community, are using special means of keeping attendance in their theatres up to a paying basis, which should suggest ideas to every exhibitor in the country who has weak days at his house.

Mondays and Tuesdays, the standard weak days in the Detroit exhibitors' calendar, no longer have any significance. Following the closing of the Ford, Packard and other large automobile plants, the average showman discovered that he would have rows after rows of empty seats every night unless special efforts were made to induce citizens to part with admission prices.

Street stunts, garish fronts, special heralds, booking of exclusive specials, reduced prices, installation of serials, and a general boost in the quality of the pictures booked are some of the devices which have been resorted to. Each one of them has proven successful in individual cases, dependent chiefly upon the location of the house.

J. F. Sellers, manager of the Iris theatre, holder of a sub-franchise in Associated First National Pictures, Inc., favors the better pictures program. The Iris is situated about midway between an exclusive residential section and a section filled with foreigners, and has been able to keep attendance up well above the average of Detroit theatres. Mr. Sellers says: "I believe that the only remedy for light attendance is the consistent booking of good, and only good, productions.

"I believe also that every exhibitor, once he has a real high class production booked, should get behind it to the very limit of his exploitation ability. Heavy exploitation behind really good pictures is always successful, but woe to the man who brings them into his theatre on false pretenses.

"Give me the good pictures every day in the week and I won't have any weak days," concluded Sellers, "and therefore I won't have to resort to serials or misleading statements to drag them in."

Arthur Baehr, manager of the Crystal theatre, in another section of the city, has a couple of natural weak days that bother him occasionally and he favors the idea of getting out some special throwabouts, slides and newspaper ads to back the productions he plays on those two days.

"Monday and Tuesday are the days for which I have to think the hardest," said Mr. Baehr. "While I do not favor booking big specials, particularly on those two days, I aim to have a picture on which I can base some particular snappy and novel advertising and exploitation.

"For instance, on last Monday and Tuesday I set in Constance Talmadge in "Dangerous Business," because in looking over the picture and the press matter that accompanied it, I was able to devise a scheme for interesting my patrons that I knew would bring them in. I believe that every exhibitor should shop well and hard for pictures that will lend themselves to such exploitation on weak days."

A. J. Petersmarck, who operates the Bluebird theatre, also a First National franchise holder, and the Baker, two fine neighborhood theatres within a few blocks of each other, is situated in a section where he claims people have just so much money to spend each week on amusements, and that they spend it at such odd intervals that he has been unable to ascertain with any degree of precision just which day in the week is his worst.

Petersmarck favors a couple of serials a week in his houses because they have increased his receipts and allow him the opportunity of slipping in a feature that he can buy at a fairly reasonable price.

Another who favors consistently good pictures as a means of preventing the appearance of weak days is James C. Ritter, president of the Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, who directs the Rialto, one of the largest of Detroit's neighborhood houses. Mr. Ritter says he aims to play the highest class productions and big specials on weak days, supplemented by the finest short subjects he can obtain. He also uses a serial on Saturdays to take care of the clientele that demand that sort of entertainment.

Charles Darrell, director of the De Luxe theatre, for John H. Kunsky, books in three or four acts of vaudeville and a fairly good program picture on his two weakest days—Monday and Tuesday—and has been getting wonderful results with the idea. He varies this occasionally by giving his patrons a double bill of features, purchasing at a very nominal figure a couple of older releases of well known stars and advertising the program heavily as a classic revival.

Every day in the week would be poor to fair, instead of big, if it were not for the fronts devised by L. H. Gardner, of the Royal Theatre, which is in the heart of the foreign downtown district of Detroit. As Gardner explains it, few of his patrons can read and naturally he has to knock their eyes out with splashes of color and plenty of action. These fronts are specially prepared by workman constantly in the employ of the Royal Theatre and often extend from the sidewalk to heights far above the marquise. Society dramas are tabooed by Gardner and only productions that have plenty of melodramatic effects are used by him.

Albany Children Matinees Highly Successful

With the wives of many of the New York state officials, and other women prominent in the society life of Albany, N. Y., acting as hostesses to large groups of children, the Junior Movies, given at Harmanus-Bleecker hall each Saturday morning, at an exceedingly low price of admission, are proving the biggest kind of a success.

Mrs. Parker Corning entertained 100 children last Saturday morning from the Trinity Institute, F. F. Proctor, owner of the theatre, turning over the proceeds of the morning to the institute, Mrs. George D. Pratt, wife of the State Conservation Commissioner, is another liberal entertainer, taking large numbers of children from the various schools to the entertainment. Mrs. Nathan L. Miller, wife of the Governor, is also on hand each Saturday morning and her reserved section is always filled with children.

Illinois Exhibitors Will Meet Soon

President Joe Hopp and Secretary Fred W. Hartman, of the Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, the state branch of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, have sent out a call for a state convention to be held at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, on a date to be announced later.

A large and enthusiastic meeting is predicted as the Alliance has grown rapidly in the past year, and exhibitors throughout Illinois are vitally interested in matters which will be taken up.

One of the matters to be disposed of at the convention is the election of delegates and alternates to the national convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to be held at Minneapolis on June 7, 8 and 9.

Proposed state legislation that would be injurious to the motion picture business will also be discussed, including several bills coming up at Springfield at this term of the legislature and also a bill regulating deposits.

Expect Big Attendance at Rochester Convention

The Rochester, N. Y., convention is less than three weeks away, and its scope and attendance are growing far beyond the most sanguine expectations of the committees in charge, announces a statement during the week from the M. P. T. O. of A. headquarters. One of the features of the convention will be a great demonstration against censorship in general and against the censorship measure in Albany, N. Y., in particular. Many leaders in the civic and political life of the state have been secured as speakers at the convention, among them editors of great prominence, it is declared. All these will enter their protest against censorship legislation.

A great gathering of stars are also expected to be on hand. Mr. John Farren, Chairman of the committee on stars, will be in New York this week to complete arrangements for the securing of the foremost luminaries in the galaxy of the motion-picture firmament.

Another feature of the convention will be the visit of the delegates to the Eastman Kodak Plant, where extensive preparations have been made for receiving and conducting them through the entire plant.

The local press of Rochester and the city authorities are conducting a vigorous campaign on behalf of the convention. The fullest measure of hospitality will be assured to every motion picture man who makes Rochester his home on April 5, 6 and 7, the dates of the state convention, it is declared.

In view of the growing requests for reservations, exhibitors who wish to attend are earnestly advised to get in touch for their reservations without delay with Mr. I. M. Salyards at the Victoria theatre, Rochester.

William Stoermer Made New Selznick Manager

William Stoermer has been appointed general business manager of the Selznick News Weekly, according to an announcement by Myron and David Selznick.

As general business manager of the Selznick News Mr. Stoermer's duties will probably encompass a trip to Europe in order to organize a foreign camera staff and a tour of Selznick exchanges to aid the selling force.

Could the producers in favor of clean pictures bring about a change of policy in the production activities of the other producers who might not be so particular in the brand of product they turned out, was another question proposed by Dr. Crafts to Mr. Hess. The latter answered that a more rigid application of existing laws to offenders would be sufficient. O. R. Miller, secretary of the New York Civil League, disagreed on the adequacy of the penal laws and expressed his opinion that censorship was the only solution to the difficulty.

Stray Notes

Stoll Film Company is reorganizing. No more salesmen, etc. All distribution, advertising, etc., by Pathe. Ralph Proctor remains as general manager.

Alec Lorimore writes from Australia that he is no longer connected with Famous-Lasky, but now active in the exhibiting field.

Clarence Schottenfels has become associated with Frederick Dahme, the art title specialist.

Operators' Bill Unopposed at Albany, N. Y., Hearing

Not one iota of opposition developed at a hearing before the cities committee of the New York State Assembly, in connection with a bill which was recently introduced by Assemblyman Flynn and which is intended as a general safety measure in requiring more competent operators in New York city, Buffalo and Rochester, the bill dealing solely with first class cities in the state. Under its provisions, an apprentice must serve with a licensed operator for six months at least, and his application for a license must then have the O. K. of the operator under whom he served.

The bill is the first one given consideration by the committee today. The operators were represented by Samuel Kaplan and E. Stewart, of New York city, and Dewitt L. Martin, of Local No. 233, of Buffalo, all three speaking in favor of the bill.

In going on record in favor of the bill, Mr. Stewart said that for four or five years, there had been an effort in New York state to amend the law licensing operators, on account of the present law being little more than a farce. He said that a man could appear before the New York city board of examiners and, providing he had a theory, he could get a license, even though he was not a practical operator. He cited one instance where a woman answered a few questions and was given an operator's license.

Exhibitor Association Wins Battles

he will call a special session in June, and it is expected that the Censorship bill will be introduced once more and a renewed fight made for its passage.

The exhibitors of South Dakota will have a state convention on Tuesray, March 22, at Huron, S. D. The State is being circularized with that end in view and, if possible, a representative of the national organization will be in evidence at the State convention.

From Lexington, N. C., H. B. Varner, secretary and treasurer of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North Carolina, writes to headquarters, saying that censorship has been killed in both houses.

Would Double Aggregate Pay of Censor Board

A bill that would more than double the aggregate pay that is now received by the Pennsylvania State Board of Motion Picture Censors and its employes and which would create a number of new jobs under the board, was introduced March 8, in the Legislature at Harrisburg, by Senator William C. McConnell, of Northumberland County.

The board, which started ten years ago with a payroll of $2,700, today has a salary list of $32,460, and it is now aimed to increase this by $44,180, which would make the total $76,640. The measure also would provide for the $3,000-a-year salary of Dr. Ellis P. Oberholtzer, of Philadelphia, a former member of the board who was removed from that job and made a "director."

The chairman of the board under the terms of the bill, would get $4,000 instead of $3,000; the vice chairman $3,600 instead of $2,500, and the secretary $3,600 instead of $2,400. Though the present law does not provide for the salary of a director, Dr. Oberholtzer has been receiving $3,000, which the new bill would now authorize. The bill also provides for a new executive clerk at $3,000; and two other clerks at $1,200 each, to take the place of the chief clerk at $1,800, and also provides for two assistant clerks at $1,500 and $1,200, respectively. Stenographers inspectors and operators would also receive increased salaries under the new arrangement.

Julius Trinz, of Chicago, Dies of Pneumonia

Julius Trinz, one of Chicago's most popular managers, died Monday, March 7 of pneumonia. Mr. Trinz was a nephew of Joseph Trinz of Lubliner and Trinz and was well liked for his sunny disposition and good nature. He was for several years manager of the Columbia theatre in Milwaukee, and prior to his death was manager of the Crawford theatre in Chicago.

Wm. A. Brady Completes Trip

"And down under that wave, I believe, will go those politicians of high and low degree, who as a matter of political expediency or what not, are catering to the advocates of a sour Sunday and a woe-begone week.

Mr. Brady, during his trip, told many groups of exhibitors that there was no desire on the part of the producers and distributors to evade responsibility for certain improper matter that has occasionally crept into the screen.

"But there is no producing company in this country that can enforce a contract for an indecent subject, he told them. "It is not fair for you to attempt to alibi yourself and to say it is up to the producer alone. It is really up to you. You say you control your screens. Then don't allow anything to be shown upon them that would stamp you as a law breaker. You have as much right to arrest a film as the police authorities have to arrest you for showing it.

"Every exhibitor in this country has a great moral responsibility. He can become an instrument for far reaching good in his community. And thousands of exhibitors are doing so. They are co-operating with the churches and civic societies for the public good, they are giving special performances for children under the auspices of local associations, aiding in community undertakings, and in many other ways winning the respect and love of the people with whom they come in daily contact. But there are more exhibitors who are not doing these things."

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Miss Irma Beck and Miss Mary McGranahan, cashiers, who for several years have been connected with Famous Players-Lasky Chicago Exchange, and are known to hundreds of exhibitors, proved themselves heroines this week and have been kept busy receiving congratulations of motion picture men on their bravery and presence of mind. Monday the girls had been to the bank to draw money for the payroll, which amounted to in the neighborhood of twenty-eight hundred dollars. As they were on their way back to the exchange a robber grabbed the money which was wrapped in a newspaper and ran. The plucky cashiers pursued the bandit for a block and a half and were joined in the chase by Detective Sergeant John Prendergast. The detective collared the fleeing robber just as he threw away the package of money, which landed almost in the arms of Miss Beck, who was hard on his heels. Miss Beck is reported to have said that if she had had a gun the robber wouldn't have worn that silly grin very long after he was arrested.

Maurice Choynski journeyed to Hot Springs, Arkansas, this week where he will spend a vacation of indefinite duration. When interviewed he would not state whether golf (African or outdoor) or horseback riding would be his main diversions.

Thomas Kilfoil has been appointed branch manager of Paramount's Chicago Exchange, and already is on the job. Mr. Kilfoil comes from the home office and has had a wide experience as a traveling auditor and efficiency man. Mel Shauer, manager of the accessory department, was visiting at the Chicago exchange this week. Milt Kusell, recently appointed assistant district manager, has returned from Rock Island, where he signed up Joe Hopp of the Fort Armstrong Theatre, and Carl Miller, of the Spencer Square, for Paramount service.

A complete sprinkling system is being installed at the Paramount Exchange, 845 S. Wabash Avenue, and the offices have been more or less torn up for the past few days, but will be straightened out by the end of the week.

One of the three boy burglars who attempted to rob the Hub motion picture theatre on West Chicago Avenue, was slain by police in a revolver battle, another was shot twice and was captured with the third companion. The trio were attempting to cut their way into the theatre through the skylight when the police were notified and a battle on the roof and fatal shooting ensued.

Maurice Fleckels was among the New Yorkers visiting Chicago this week. Mr. Fleckels, who is one of the principal owners of the Favorite Film Corporation, came on for a conference with his partner Ike Von Ronkel, who, since the establishment of this new exchange, has built up one of the biggest businesses enjoyed by any independent concern in Chicago.

Monday was the day for the general release of "The Kid" in Chicago territory, where more than three hundred thousand persons, at a conservative estimate, have already seen Chaplin's record breaking picture during its showing at the Randolph in the Chicago loop. On the general release date this picture went into twenty-five houses. It will go into twenty-five others Thursday, twenty-five more on the following Monday and twenty-five on the Thursday following, making one hundred theatres in Chicago which will show the picture in two weeks. The number of prints being used on this release is believed to beat all records in this territory.

Manager Seery, of First National, is preparing to move into the big new exchange at 829-31 S. Wabash Avenue on or about March 26th and by May 1st, practically all the exchanges in Chicago will be concentrated in the district centering at the corner of Eighth and Wabash.

Henry Berman, of Universal, stopped off for a day this week on his way from New York to the West Coast, where he will remain for several days looking over production work at his company's coast studio.

Harry Ascher and Harry Baumont, of Ascher Brothers organization, were in Cincinnati this week completing plans for the opening of the Capitol, the big downtown Ascher house which is rapidly nearing completion in that city.

J. M. Browarsky, the theatre builder, is reported to have completed plans for a two million five hundred thousand dollar picture house on the half block fronting south in 63rd street between Blackstone and Harper avenues. According to Fridstein and Company, architects and engineers, the construction will begin May 1st if business conditions show signs of improvement by that time. The building will front four hundred and fifty feet on Blackstone, four hundred feet on Harper and two hundred feet on Sixty-third street, will be sixty-one feet in height with fourteen stores on the ground floor and a large number of apartments above, which will overlook Jackson Park. The district already has the Tivoli, Balaban & Katz's palatial theatre, which is conceded to be the finest motion picture theatre in the United States, and the Woodlawn, which Andrew Karzas has made one of the most successful houses in Chicago, so that competition will be keen in this district when the new house is completed. Mr. Browarsky up to date has refused to divulge the names of the parties behind the proposed new theatre, but it is reported that the owners of one of the big circuits will operate it.

Aaron Gollos, president of Gollos Enterprises, announces that he has contracted with George Kleine for the Chicago and Northern Illinois rights for "Deliverance," the much talked of production starring Helen Kellar. According to Mr. Gollos, plans already are being made for the rental of legitimate theatres for a downtown showing of this production. The method of distribution for this picture throughout the territory will be made public in a few days by Gollos Enterprises.

Sales Manager Belford, of Independent Films Association, has returned from a trip to New York, where he was working on plans for the foreign distribution of the Neal Hart series and other pictures released by Independent.

Al Picker, owner of a large circuit of theatres with headquarters at Ironwood, Michigan, was in Chicago this week looking over forthcoming releases and booking for his theatres. Mr. Picker reports a slight Lenten slump in attendance but states that indications are that the Spring business will be up to the average in the district where he operates theatres.

Harris F. Wolfberg, vice-president and general sales manager of the Lake & Export Coal Company, spent the week in Chicago at his company's offices. The former district manager of Paramount said he finds selling coal a very different proposition from films but that he is rapidly getting on to the ropes and already has closed some big contracts.

It is reported that Ascher Brothers are preparing to put up another great moving picture house, which will be located at Lawrence and Spaulding Avenues and seat three thousand persons.

Lee Herz, of Silee Film Exchange, will handle "For The Freedom Of Ireland," Creation Film Company's feature picture, in Northern Illinois, according to an announcement just made by B. Herbert Milligan. Other territories which have been closed on this feature during the week are Minnesota, North and South Dakota, which have been taken over by the Elliott Film Exchange of Minneapolis, and the state of Indiana, which has been purchased by the Statecraft Film Sales Corporation of Indianapolis. J. Hoddy Milligan left Chicago Tuesday to road show "For The Freedom Of Ireland" throughout Iowa where it will open at Davenport next Monday.

The Star Theatre Building, on Madison street, near Clark, has been purchased by Jones, Linick & Schaefer for a purchase price of forty thousand dollars, with a ground lease of one hundred and three years. They will take possession May 1, 1921. There are several leases in the building which extend beyond that date, and which Jones, Linick & Schaefer will permit to continue under their ownership.

S. J. Stoughton has returned from a trip to Pittsburgh for the Rothacker Industrial Division. George J. Kilgore is spending a week at the New York Rothacker Industrial office.

Phil H. Pierce, for many years in the musical instrument and motion picture business, who has been made manager of the new Dallas, Texas, branch of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, located at 2022 Main Street, that city

Music and The Picture

Consider the Organist

By Charles D. Isaacson

I MEAN to say: Consider the Organist. He is a problem that calls for some special thought and he generally is an object for gentle consideration—at least a little more than he is getting.

It seems that I have started something, or at least I was the cause of Mr. William Brandt starting something. For at the Motion Picture Musical Conference, our good friend, Mr. Brandt, representing five hundred theatre owners, declared that the exhibitors simply could not find organists. To be exact, this is what he said:

"I want to sound a note of warning—the exhibitors are progressing faster than the musicians—that the small neighborhood theatres cannot get proper musicians. The exhibitor is perfectly willing to spend fifteen or twenty thousand dollars for a good organ, but he cannot get a good organist to play it! I am talking from actual experience—and I know for a fact that the musicians are not keeping pace with the exhibitors. Would that the world were full of Riesenfelds, then what an easy lot the exhibitor would have!"

At the same time, Mr. Joseph Weber, president of the National Federation of Musicians, was present and added to the dramatic tension of the situation by adding the following words:

"I agree that perhaps we have not enough good musicians, but the matter will be remedied as best and quick as possible and you will soon have more musicians than you need for your theatres. The question of supplying musicians will be solved as far ts the American Federation is concerned."

I felt that the character of Mr. Brandt's statements was such as to deserve the widest publicity and I gave the remarks to the press of the country and myself commented and emphasized the matter in my department in the New York Globe and also in the magazine Musical America.

Well, well! I have been beseiged by all kinds of letters, telephone calls and visits. Chiefly from organists, of course. At first I tried to duck my responsibility by referring all comers to Mr. Brandt, but many came back from Mr. Brandt, without having had any particular satisfaction.

But I knew that Mr. Brandt knew exactly what he was talking about and that he is not the kind of man to have made any rash statements. Therefore I have asked him to provide me with the names and addresses of all exhibitors who are seeking organists or any other kind of musicians, and I have all kinds of channels through which to discover the right people without any difficulty.

In the meantime however, many quite remarkable things have come up. For instance, the National Association of Organists, as indicated in a previous issue of THE NEWS, has drafted a committee to furnish information on all organ matters, without charge to exhibitors. Dr. William Carl of the Guilmant School has been asked to jump into the situation and give the benefit of his assistance, which to date he has not done—he has been ill, and very much involved in his season's work. But I believe that Dr. Carl can be relied upon to give this problem his ardent aid.

I have heard from several schools that they are eager to know the theatres seeking their pupils—for their pupils are seeking these theatres.

Then there have come to my desk some letters which are so pregnant with points and facts, that I feel they ought to be published. I refer to the remarkable document—the challenge to Mr. Brandt from Scott Buhrmann of the American Organist. I refer to the letters of William Hamilton and G. H. Federlein, which I have selected from the vast correspondence, as being most typical and most explanatory.

Just before these are reached, I should first desire to make some observations, which may serve to clear the atmosphere. I will state the case from the two points of view. The exhibitor finds himself with a theatre in which he feels that he must put an organ. He is not born with any knowledge of organ-history and traditions. He buys an organ. The manufacturer is selling his own instrument. I do not mean to indicate that the manufacturer has not the best interests of the art and the seller at heart. But he sells his instrument. Most often it is a good buy for the exhibitor. Most often there is no trouble from that end. But in some cases, the exhibitor has been fooled. The organ is not truly musical, is not well-placed, is not well-voiced, is a white elephant on his hands. In this latter condition, the organist is up against it, to use the vernacular. The exhibitor is angry, and thinks it the fault of the organist. Or when he tries to engage a good musician, the artist won't accept; it would be against all his scruples to marry a cheap bit of clap-trap (for the organist figuratively marries his organ).

In the first place, the exhibitor has no right to buy an organ without consulting a real organist and acoustician. Pay a man and it will pay the buyer.

After the organ, comes the organist. The exhibitor is not expected to realize the temperamental side of an artist. The organist works hard, he is the most physical of all the musicians. He's using arms and legs and head and heart all the time. He cannot possibly be expected to understand the organist's desire, unless it is brought to him in a way like this. He may think the organist is lazy, because he won't play all the time. He may imagine the organist is stupid because he declares that he cannot improvise with the pictures incessantly. Now on the other hand, the organist should be made to realize that the exhibitor is new to all these conditions. Music is to him at first just an additional department in his business. He cannot at first consider the art aspects; this is beyond him.

We must seek to create an understanding between organists and exhibitors.

Speaking for the organists, I would say to the exhibitors of the country, bow to this guild. The organists are of the oldest sect of musicians in the world. They are as a class the most seriously musical, and indicate by their very choice of the pipes, a turn of mind which declares them to be somewhat ecclesiastical in nature. In the older days, the organist was the first musician, everything revolved and developed about him. The organ is the only all-sufficient instrument. The violin and all stringed instruments (even the piano) do not approach it in this respect. The organ attempts to encompass all other kinds of music and to translate even the flute and clarionet into its language. The organist I have observed is the most sensitive musician, and feels keenly every slight. He is a loyal creature as a class, much more loyal than others I could name. It comes about through the organist's association with the organ. For the organ is so purifying and noble.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FIRST NATIONAL

The Kid—
The record breaker for the season. Held over for a third week by a house that seldom departs from the week run custom. (Middle West.)

Went over big in two houses. People are anxious to see it and well satisfied when they do. (East.)

Went over big on second week. May hold over for another week. (West.)

Second week to big business. Wonderful as an attraction. (West.)

Mama's Affair—
Delighted our people. Box office kept busy. (Middle West.)

Dinty—
Very good feature which brought more than the usual business. (West.)

Dangerous Days—
Very good attendances and in spite of inclement weather on closing nights crowds stood for hours. (East.)

Curtain—
Katherine MacDonald's beauty aid much in making this story of stage life attractive. Miss MacDonald's popularity is increasing in this city. Business good. (East.)

Peaceful Valley—
A mediocre story that only drew fair houses. It was suited to the

Not Guilty—
A real show. I thought so and the audience thought so. Box office proved it so. Biggest opening in five or six weeks. Holding up strong. (Middle West.)

Love, Honor and Behave—
A splendid drawing card. Played to a packed house all week. The picture is an excellent diversion from the more serious presentations. (Middle West.)

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Brewster's Millions—
"Fatty" went over in this picture in a surprising manner. Picture played to capacity for seven day run. (East.)

Don't miss this one, a really big box office play. (West.)

The Inside of the Cup—
Plot a little difficult to follow but on the whole picture was above the average and we played to good business during week it showed here. (Middle West.)

The Gilded Lily—
An exceptionally fine picture, but the box office receipts fell off somewhat during the second week. It really didn't draw the business it seemed to deserve, but that fact can probably be laid partly to the spring-like weather. (East.)

Forbidden Fruit—
Very good. The people came the first day in response to wide advertising and they told their neighbors it was a good picture. (East.)

A very good picture. Handicapped by strong opposition. (West.)

The Jucklins—
A fair picture with business about as usual. (West.)

Beau Revel—
A wonderful picture which sure did go "over the top." Brought large box office receipts and much satisfaction from the audiences. (West.)

Fairly good picture with average business. (West.)

The Education of Elizabeth—
One of the star's best but it only drew fair business. (East.)

The Passionate Pilgrim—
Went over big for week. Is exceptionally good feature. (Middle West.)

The Price of Possession—
An average picture which appealed to admirers of Ethel Clayton and pulled fair business during the week. (Middle West.)

Don't Neglect Your Wife—
Fair picture only. Average business. (East.)

The Frontier of the Stars—
Thomas Meighan always sure box office winner at this house and this picture, clean and wholesome throughout, was enjoyed by everyone. (East.)

The Kentuckians—
Did neither draw nor satisfied. That director missed more good chances than a cat has flees. (West.)

Midsummer Madness—
Very well produced picture but it brought too much advance criticism and for that reason I don't favor too many of these kind of plays. Let's clean up the screen a bit ourselves. We want pictures with a universal box office appeal. (West.)

Why Change Your Wife?—
Had capacity business with this one. Everyone seemed pleased and it sure did make a hit at my house. (West.)

Chickens—

GOLDWYN

The Branding Iron—
Not more than a fair week. (East.)

Prisoners of Love—
Charming, dainty picture. Opened to better Sunday in several weeks. Well liked but no unbounded enthusiasm. (Middle West.)

The Concert—
Accurate photoplay of stage success. Moderately popular. Not enough action in it to make it a big success as a picture. (Middle West.)

METRO

Billions—
Not up to some of Nazimova's previous efforts, but pleasing. (Middle West.)

Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse—
Packed them in on this one. People curious to see it. Great box office attraction. (West.)

Polly With a Past—
Went over very well. An elaborate fashion show prologue and several vocal selection by a prominent singer helped pack the house. (East.)

REALART

The Snob—
Very attractive. Just the kind of picture to appeal to high class neighbor audiences. Pleasing throughout and thoroughly proper. (Middle West.)

Out of the Chorus—
Good business for first two days and also the final day. (East.)

Eyes of the Heart—
Did not draw so well the first two days, but played to a well-filled house the balance of the week. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

A Mad Marriage—
Pretty good picture and we had somewhat more business than usual. (West.)

Society Secrets—
Very poor picture. Business was much less than usual. (West.)

Tiger True—
Average production. While the plot is interesting, it is much the same as many others now running. (East.)

All Dolled Up—
A very good picture, though we had only average business with it and it did not come up to my expectations as a box office attraction. (Middle West.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

Lying Lips—
Completed a four weeks' run here, in which it drew over 80,000 people. This is one of the greatest records in the history of the city. (Middle West.)

Drew a good house for a week, but the picture does not justify its advance advertising. An average picture. (Middle West.)

A Small Town Idol—
Second week to good business. (West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Nut—
Exceptional business for week during Lent. Picture not up to Fairbanks' standard. (Middle West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

One Man in a Million—
Clean, high-grade picture which appealed strongly to patrons. Did excellent business for week. (Middle West.)

A Slave of Vanity—
Good entertainment and it brought good business. (West.)

EQUITY

Hush—
We thought picture up to Clara Kimball Young's usual standard but played to poor business for week which we attribute to bad weather. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Madonnas and Men—
Opened big. Everyone thinks it a big picture from every standpoint. Fine box office attraction and splendid audience picture. (Middle West.)

Isobel, or the Trail's End—
A fine production and it brought good business. (West.)

PATHE

The Devil—
A picture that aroused the curiosity of the public. A good house all week. An artistic production. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

The U. P. Trail—
Regular Western with lots of action. Opened to more than usual and held up well all week. (Middle West.)

Carmel MYERS in "The Mad Marriage"
Directed by Rollin Sturgeon
Temperament was his middle name. She wanted to be interesting and wicked. But WHAT SHE SUGGESTED EVEN SHOCKED HIM AND GREENWICH VILLAGE.
He often told her:
"A woman must not only SEE life; she must LIVE it."
She remembered that! Look what happened!

Old County Fair Stunt Used for Picture

Manager Wrigler Wakes Up Hannibal, Mo., With Ancient Idea

THE fact that the circus had passed up his town on its annual trip this year afforded Tom Wrigler, manager of the Park theatre, Hannibal, Mo., the idea of a clever exploitation stunt. The result of the novel advertising, the latter part of which was accomplished with the aid of Barney Rosenthal, manager of the Universal's St. Louis office, attracted the largest crowds in the history of the theatre who were glad to pay fifty cents to see Priscilla Dean in "Outside The Law." Hannibal is a town of 22,000 inhabitants and the Park, which is the town's largest house, accommodates approximately 900 persons.

The stunt began three days before the picture was scheduled for showing. On a corner lot less than 100 feet from the lobby of the Park, Wrigler had erected at a small cost an outfit which resembled the ball-throwing galleries so common to circuses. At one end of the outfit was a counter, racked to hold about 100 cheap baseballs. At the other end about thirty feet distant was placed a large screen with a perforation in the center to enable a man to place his head within and allow it to protrude on the other side.

The man who was allotted the privilege of placing his head in the hole, permitting persons from the other side to hurl the baseballs at him, was a negro porter. The negro's face was smeared with whitening and gave him the appearance of a human freak.

Every man or woman who passed was urged to throw the balls free of charge with the promise that if the negro was struck the thrower would receive two passes for any of the three nightly performances. Every day large crowds swarmed about the throwing stand and took their share of exercise. The negro was a clever dodger of the thrown missiles and his cleverness resulted in only 22 pairs of passes being distributed. The excitement of this part of the exploitation alone spread over the entire town and children would rush to the gallery immediately upon the dismissal of school each day to try and "hit the white devil." Those who failed to secure the passes by their throwing ability, no doubt, wanted to see the picture for which they had tried to win passes.

Then Rosenthal appeared at Hannibal and executed the other important feature of the exploitation. A woman in costly furs was seen parading about the streets of Hannibal wearing a black mask on her face. It is contrary to the laws of the municipality to permit anyone to appear on the streets masked. The fact that the masked woman was pulling something which was "outside the law" attracted the already-informed police. A patrol wagon was drawn up at Hannibal's busiest corner during the lunch hour of the day preceding the opening of the film, and the masked lady was escorted to jail. Of course, the whole thing was pre-arranged with the police, but the newspapers carried three columns telling of the first arrest under the particular city ordinance since 1891.

When it was finally divulged that the woman was an employe of the Universal Exploitation Department, it added further interest to the already curious public.

All records for a three-day run were smashed.

Jackson Sets Fast Exploitation Pace

"Outside the Law" Given Thorough Campaign at Tudor Theatre, Atlanta

FOLLOWING one of the most spirited advertising campaigns that the South has seen in many moons, "Outside the Law" opened at the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, for a week's engagement. The campaign began six weeks ago, and lasted up until the opening day, when the lobby and some snappily written copy for the usual amount of space was left to carry on the good work.

At the height of the "blue law" agitation, when Tennessee was defeating the first "blue law" bill to be introduced into the southeastern territory, glaring yellow twenty-four sheets, lettered in black and red, sprang up overnight, on all the most prominent corners in the residence section, as well as down-town. Not one word about the picture had been given out, and the title, therefore, meant nothing to those who read the twenty-four sheets and marvelled.

These twenty-fours read: "Don't be Deceived! You are not OUTSIDE THE LAW if you motor on Sunday!" "Do you play cards for money? Then you are OUTSIDE THE LAW!" "Is it fair that Sunday movies should be OUTSIDE THE LAW?" and so on, tying up with the blue law excitement, and with the very hot fight that was being waged in Atlanta over the Sunday movies and censorship questions.

Four weeks after these were posted, and two weeks before the opening date, streamers were printed, with similar sentiments and attached to automobiles. Several thousand automobile tie-cards were printed, reading: "No parking here! OUTSIDE THE LAW!" These were in a close imitation of the cards used by the traffic officers in an effort to relieve the traffic congestion, and such as those tied on cards when the owner is to receive the well-known and justly celebrated "copy of charges." These cards were quite effective, and were used extensively.

The newspaper campaign began two weeks before the opening date, with a modest amount of space, such as the police department use in advertising for escaped criminals.

Mr. James F. Jackson, manager of the Tudor, gave a special screening one night after his regular show had closed, and the invited guests were two newspaper men from each of the three local papers. So interested did they become, that one of them, the Editor of the Motion Picture Department of the Constitution, offered Mr. Jackson the front page of his section, on the Sunday preceding the opening.

On Sunday before the opening, the lobby was ready, and proved most effective. Throughout the decorations of the lobby, the one pose of the star, Priscilla Dean, had been used—five cut-outs from twenty-four sheets composed the main portion of this display. Three were mounted, one on either end, and another in the middle, of the new marquee; at the left of the lobby, this cut-out had been mounted over a board on which was the caption—"You liked her in 'The Virgin of Stamboul'—you'll rave about her in 'Outside the Law.'" At the right, a bay-window, cleverly arranged, curtained, and lighted with dim red lights, caught the attention. Back of this, a cut-out of Miss Dean, in bed, in a sort of half-sitting posture, as if suddenly awakened, stared into the street with horror-filled eyes. At the bottom, a sign, printed in imitation of a woman's writing, read: "If I live to be a hundred, I'll never forget what I saw that night!"

Another angle that was used to create interest was the ever popular contest idea. But it was used this time with a thumb-print. The thumb-print of Priscilla Dean was published, with an interesting reader, stating that the Motion Picture Editor of the Constitution was interested in the thumb-print theory advanced by the picture, "Outside the Law," and that he was going to give prizes to the people whose thumb-print most nearly resembled that of Miss Dean. Two cash prizes and a number of tickets to the picture were given as prizes, and several hundred people answered.

While the billboard campaign was going on, a picture booked to play in Atlanta was withdrawn because of the spirited protest made by some of the so-called reformers. And the next day, several hundred white cards, the size of window-cards, and lettered in red, appeared on billboards, blank fences, and every available space. These cards, in flaming scarlet letters that were visible half a block away, read: "Should Outside the Law be played in Atlanta?" Under this startling query, in small letters that were outlined, and, therefore, not visible more than ten paces away, were the lines: "At thirty cents, or $1.00?" At first glance, the card looked like a serious protest against the propriety of playing the picture.

Later in the week, attractive window-cards, giving a portrait of Miss Dean, and pointing out her facial characteristics, giving warning that she was a dangerous crook, reported to be on her way to Atlanta, were placesd in a number of window, and tacked up in conspicuous places.

Skouras' Passion Campaign

St. Louis Theatre Gives Negri Picture Thorough Exploitation

SANE exploitation, which remained within the bounds of conservatism and which accomplished results, was carried out by Skouras Brothers at their two first-run St. Louis houses, the New Grand Central and the West End Lyric theatres, in connection with "Passion," which has just played a most successful week's run.

The weekly mailing list was again put into proper and beneficial use, by John Baker, exploitation manager for the Skouras Enterprises. "Passion rules the World," was the neat and enticing statement which teased the palates of the letter readers, "Passion is Coming to St. Louis. Keep Your Eyes Open."

Then two hundred bill posters were scattered about St. Louis and suburbs and many 24 sheet stands covered. Then there followed a spectacular newspaper campaign which began with teasers several days before the definite announcement and had St. Louisans wondering what "Passion Is Coming" actually meant.

The prologue, which was presented in connection with the film, was most elaborated designed. The curtain rose on a scene depicting the jail cell of the French Revolution. On both wing curtains were painted large candlesticks arranged to hold three immense electric-lighted candles. Then a dancer, bedecked in sparce-veils, appeared from a wing and danced interpretively on the life of the famous Madame Du Barry. As each culminative event in her life was reached, lights behind the stage were flashed, displaying on the veiled-scenery of the background the pictures of Louis XV, the Guillotine, and the Storming of the Bastile. And as each of these three scenes were exposed, one of the lights in the two large candlesticks on the wings was extinguished. The prologue ended in utter darkness as the last strains of the overture, Robespierre. Newspaper critics, who gave descriptions of the presentation, praised it highly.

A singular bit of newspaper advertising, which came gratis, was a story in the magazine section of the Sunday edition of a large local daily, written by a special writer of an Eastern syndicate, describing the picture and giving all details concerning its production. The story was scheduled to run three weeks ago, but special arrangement with the Sunday editor of the paper resulted in the advantageous delay.

All ushers and attendants at the two theatres were attired in costume of the period of Louis XV as an added touch.

"The greatest picture of the year and our best drawing card," was the statement of Spyros Skouras.

Wendt Goes After Collegians for "The Snob" Showing

Figuring along the line that the romantic like romance: lovers, love stories; adventurers, stories of adventures, etc., Harold F. Wendt, publicity director of the Rivoli, Toledo, decided that "The Snob," which is a story of college life, would especially please collegians, high school and university students. Accordingly he made a play for their patronage. He advertised his picture to the entire student body of one college, one university and four high schools in Toledo at the cost of twelve cents—six two-cent stamps.

Being an ex-college student himself, Wentdt realized that there is one thing that every student in such an institution reads, and that is the bulletin board. So he wrote letters to the heads of the various schools, telling them that he had a picture which if the student body saw it would materially benefit it in many ways, as well as offer a wealth of entertainment. So he inclosed a typewritten letter to be posted on the bulletin boards. The letter explained that "The Snob" was a picture which every student would go wild over. The students were there—they read—and came in great numbers to see "The Snob."

Gersdorf's Exploitation for "The Jailbird"

The accompanying cut shows how Phil Gersdorf, manager of the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., decorated his lobby for the showing of "The Jailbird."

The man shown in the illustration, the Arcade doorkeeper, worked the streets with a "Have You Seen the Jailbird" sign on his back the week previous to the showing and for the first two days of the run carried a sign which read: "The Bars are Down, as the Jailbird is Here."

The same man was used in the lobby during the last days of the run.

Davish Has Dog Reunion for "The Scarecrow"

The Majestic theatre, Columbus, O., recently played "The Scarecrow" and advertising manager, C. B. Davish, decided that an opportunity had been presented for some stunt exploitation. Consequently he announced in the Columbus papers that the Majestic wanted to locate the Columbus dog that most resembled the canine which appears with Buster Keaton in the picture, and that he would hold a dog reunion at the theatre.

Owners of the first 100 dogs appearing at the Majestic, provided they were attached to the canines by a lead string of some sort, were offered a ticket to a special show for children. To the owner of the pup most nearly resembling Keaton's "Buster" a prize of $5.00 was offered.

The judges were to inspect the canines at 4:00 P. M. At 2:15 eleven dogs and their juvenile masters or mistresses had arrived in front of the theatre. By four o'clock, according to Mr. Davish, more dogs than anyone would believe existed in one city, were on the job.

A parade followed past an improvised judges' stand, with an audience of children and grown-ups that would have done credit to a circus. Signs announcing the feature picture for the week, "Don't Neglect Your Wife," the coming attraction, "The Nut" and "The Scarecrow" were carried by the youthful marchers.

The judges selected the pup which looked like "Buster" awarded the $5.00 prize to his owner and also designated some other prize winners. Appearing on this page is the first prize dog and an "honorable mention" canine and his mistress.

This shows two of the "pups" that drew prizes in the Majestic theatre, Columbus, Ohio, "dog reunion" as told above

Arcade Theatre's Lobby Display for "County Fair"

Phil Gersdorf, manager of the Arcade theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., continues to put over the show and "The County Fair" a recent bill was no exception.

A lobby display, reproduced herewith boasted of the usual "County Fair" attractions, dogs, fowls, etc., all of which made a noisy and novelty advertisement for those who came within a block of the theatre.

The striped banner shown in the cut was attractive and Gersdorf's house force were dressed up as "rubes" for the showing.

A soloist was "dolled up" in regulation "rube" attire, working the street daily in between shows and a seat was reserved for him on the front row at night, from which he rose at his cue to make his way to the stage, there to make a character speech before singing his regular role.

The stunt was the talk of the town and the Arcade's box office profited exceedingly thereby.

Capital Has Atmospheric Interlude

For the presentation of "A Tale of Two Worlds" at the New York Capitol theatre this week, S. L. Rothafel is staging a musical interlude between the Chinese and American episodes that overcomes the usual objection to stopping the projection band serves a double purpose in providing atmosphere for the second part of the offering and also of giving audiences a short intermission in a tense production that possibly might become tiresome.

At the end of the first episode and before the title announcing that the locale has been transferred to America, the image is allowed to fade out, the picture screen is removed and a stage setting reproducing one of the principal scenes in the feature, a balcony of the house in Chinatown where "Sui Sen" resides, is disclosed.

From this balcony, Miss Elizabeth Ayres, soprano soloist sings the Chinese lullaby from "East is West," impersonating in costume and makeup Leatrice Joy as "Sui Sen." Drapes, decorated with Chinese symbols, mask both sides of the stage setting and artistic lightings are used to flood the singer and the scene.

Ryan Celebrating St. Patrick's Day

Among the theatres which make a specialty of printed novelties as exploitation mediums is the Garfield of Chicago.

Managing Director Charles H. Ryan has gotten out some thing in celebration of St. Patricks Day and for "Dinty" which is the bill for the 17th.

A herald advertising the show with green ink used for cuts and text, a tag equipped with a string of green cardboard and advertising the picture on one side with tribute paid to St. Patricks Day on the other and a book mark with an original Irish poem were used effectively.

Goldman's Idea Gets Results

"Brewster's Millions" Exploitation at St. Louis Goes Over With Bang

ANOTHER of Managing Director William Goldman's unusual publicity stunts at the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, was executed in connection with "Brewster's Millions," which played a week's run beginning Feb. 19.

In addition to the regular newspaper advertising and an intensive sign-board display over the entire city and suburbs, Goldman planned a stunt which filled the Missouri not only with an unusually continuous stream of patrons in the adult class but brought forth an extremely large proportion of the school children of the city. In some of the local high schools there are courses in the modern drama, and subjects such as the original "Brewster's Millions" are studied extensively. It so happened that in the curriculum at two of the local high schools at the present time classes are being held which are taking up the contents of "Brewster's Millions." They are studying the dramatic technique and the other elements which go to make a successful play—and incidentally a successful motion picture production.

Accordingly, J. Reeves Espey, publicity manager for the Missouri, had 25,000 cards printed bearing in the center a drawing of Roscoe Arbuckle throwing his greenbacks to the winds. On one side of the picture was this information:

You have been named one of the heirs to—

Brewster's Millions.
MISSOURI THEATRE.

And on the other side:

For full particulars see
Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle

Beginning Sat., Feb. 19, for 1 week.

Then there was perforated in the center of the entire card, which measured about 3½ x 6 inches, two slits the length of the diameter of a penny. In these two slits was inserted a Lincoln penny.

Of course to distribute 25,000 cards required an expenditure in pennies alone which amounted to $250, but according to Goldman, the first afternoon performance showed an increase over the usual opening afternoons large enough to stand for the cost of the entire exploitation stunt.

The cards bearing the cent messenger were distributed at the high schools and in the theatre lobbies for several days prior to the opening. Four men were stationed at the high schools for the distribution work, and when it was learned that money was being given away simultaneously it became impossible to keep the students in school.

The picture receipts equalled those of the best week the Missouri has ever experienced.

Art Gallery Exhibits Used in Lobby

When Arthur L. Skinner presented "Idols of Clay," at the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, he almost transported the entire Albright Art Gallery exhibit to the lobby of the theatre. Arthur has the honor of being the first exhibitor in Buffalo to ever have any of this famous gallery's property in its house and the display which he arranged on "Idols of Clay" was sure an eye-catcher.

Arthur engaged a motor truck and going to the Deleware park institution, arranged with the director to borrow some of the "Idols of Clay," reposing there, the load including a life-size statue of Venus. These works of art were set up on their standards in the lobby of the Victoria with a large sign in the center of the exhibit with the title of the picture "Idols of Clay" on it.

The display attracted no end of attention by those entering and leaving the theatre and it was undoubtedly one of the most original stunts put on in the city.

Strand, Shelbyville, Ind., Gets Out Special Section

The Strand theatre of Shelbyville, Ind., recently celebrated its fifth birthday and as a part of the extra exploitation and publicity campaign conducted for the event, ran a special section in the Shelbyville Democrat in which the various coming features were advertised both in text and display.

Noble's Electric Advertising Novelty

Liberty Theatre, Portland, Ore., Pulls New Exploitation Stunt for "The Kid"

PORTLAND was shocked into recognition of Charlie Chaplin and "The Kid" by an electrical campaign many thousand volts bigger than any other theatre exploitation ever before attempted in the northwest as a result of Manager Paul Noble's stunts at the Liberty theatre.

Work, ingenuity and skill not only of the usual Liberty force but of many outside helpers was necessary to put over "The Kid" campaign but the reward was such bigness that for the first time in years, the theatre announced that the usual booking of one week's duration would be carried over for a second seven days run.

In preparing the campaign great care was taken to have all advertising novelties electrical—even to the advance outdoor exploitation. Of course all electrical material was in addition to the usual newspaper space which was increased considerably, to bill board display and the customary helps such as window, hotel lobby and menu cards.

The week before "The Kid" opened at the Liberty theatre two immense circles were placed at either end of the foyer. The edges of these circles were a mass of electric bulbs which kept flashing on and off aided by a flasher of the "run away" type. The coloring of the circles was of the poster nature and the wording was to the effect that Charlie Chaplin was coming in "The Kid," a picture that had taken a whole year to make and was in six reels of joy. One of these circles was placed in the front foyer into which the patrons are immediately ushered from the street. So brilliant was the display that it would have been impossible for the two circles to be in the same foyer, so that the other was placed at the end of an adjoining foyer where the crowds stand which were waiting to be seated. These circles were afterwards used at either side of the lobby together with an immense electric streamer in poster colors measuring 42 feet in length by five feet in width with the word "Chaplin" in electric letters with a picture poster at either end.

This cut will illustrate the accompanying story of how Paul E. Noble, manager of the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., exploited "The Kid" electrically

Now for the knock over!

For the first time in the history of any theatre in the northwest has the entire decorative scheme of the front of the theatre been changed for a single attraction. The immense statue of liberty with its wording "Liberty Theatre" in electric lights and standing some 50 feet high was changed through the aid of tinners, electricians, painters and much hard labor to the principal scene of the picture where Chaplin and the kid are found hanging on to a lamp post.

The scheme worked out ideally as there were the same number of letters in the words "Liberty Theatre" as there are in the name "Charles Chaplin" so that the new tin sign fitted against the old one and the individual letters were plugged into each other with the same flashing effect of letters continued.

The torch in the hand of Liberty (the statue) was utilized by covering it up and putting instead the lamp post with illuminated words, "The Kid," one on top of the other. This was also connected with the flasher and then the lights in the body of the statue were cut out and spotlights used to bring up the detail of the figures.

Used in the sign were 400 sockets; and 1200 square feet of tin. The installation took one entire night, the job being complete as the doors were opened at 10:45 o'clock in the morning.

An imitation Charlie and the kiddie were engaged to parade Portland streets during duration of the booking. Here trouble and also pay checks rose. Portland youngsters found the imitation Charlie and the tagging youngster an ideal target for stones and jests.

Patterson's "Passion" Plans

Atlanta Manager Turns Reformers Protests Into Exploitation Aid

JUST when the agitation over the blue laws, Sunday movies and censorship reached its height at Atlanta, Williard Patterson, manager of the Criterion theatre, booked "Passion." Local advocates of censorship immediately protested against the title of the picture.

But Mr. Patterson is far too astute an exhibitor to be caught napping. The moment word of these protests reached him, he forestalled the reformers by sending out invitations, to a carefully selected list of representative Atlantans, asking them to see the picture on Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. Included in the list of invitations were ministers—those who were known to be bitterly antagonistic as well as those who were known to be friendly to pictures, and to Sunday movies—teachers, in the various high schools, colleges and private schools of the city, to members of the library staff, and to the people who have something to do with moulding public opinion in Atlanta.

At three-thirty, the house was comfortably filled, and Mr. Patterson made a brief speech in which he told something of the making of the picture, the star, and the story. He asked that members of the audience who were familiar with French history pay particular heed to certain scenes, and locations—in short, his speech was quite to the point and aroused an interest even keener than that already shown.

Cards had been given to each person as they entered and they were asked to write their opinion of the picture, briefly, stating whether or not they thought it a worthy subject, and so on.

There were twenty ministers present, seventeen of whom endorsed the picture heartily. The other three objected only to certain relatively unimportant scenes. The head of a woman's club, which had been most active in favor of censorship, gave her unqualified approval of the picture, and remarked upon its good taste.

The newspapers next day all carried stories on the showing, and the opinions of those who had seen it. One or two of the reporters forgot tradition and grew almost lyrical in their praise of portions of the picture.

For the showing, the advertising matter at the front of the theatre was hand-drawn—dull brown letters on a buff background—because the stills used were in a sepia tone, and this matched it better than the usual black and green.

Love Light" Lobby Display Brings Business

Lobby displays as an effective business tonic for the second run house has been given further demonstration by the Strand theatre, of Atlanta.

The lobby of the Strand is small, but the best possible use of it was made. The center was occupied by a large compoboard lighthouse, rising from a two-foot high platform. The lighthouse was painted in clever imitation of the storm-beaten rocks that are usually used for such structures, especially of the old type.

At the top, a light had been arranged on a revolving top, with a reflector, so that as the light revolved, the reflector caused it to glow through first one window and then another, just as the revolving lights in "reg'ler" lighthouses.

The little cottage at the base of the structure, occupied usually by the families of the lighthouse keepers, was cleverly done, and a wee cut-out of Miss Pickford, looking through one of the heavily barred windows added to the effectiveness of the whole thing.

Around the base of the two-foot high platform which supported the lighthouse, had been tacked large well-colored pictures of Miss Pickford, in all sorts of make-ups and, too, a number of them as herself.

Around the back of the lobby, were tall wicker flower-stands filled with deep red roses, and in the hearts of these bouquets were little electric lights, making the basket glow with warmth and beauty.

Artist Wenger of Capitol Staff, Resigns

John Wenger, the noted Russian painter and scenic artist has resigned as art director of the Capitol theatre, with which he has been associated since its founding to devote his entire time to independent art production. Specifically, at this time, he is fulfilling an engagement with the Famous Players Corp. to institute an art policy for each of their three newly-constructed motion picture playhouses in Canada.

Besides his ability as a creator of scenic designs, Wenger is a painter of rare accomplishments. At a showing of his works last year at the Ralston Galleries, the critics and professionls were unanimous in acclaiming him as one of the masters of the impressionistic school. This show created a tremendous stir, because it was little known that Wenger was an adept master in the use of pigments and canvas in the traditional style. From time to time Wenger contributes to the exhibitions of the National Academy of Design, the Pennsylvania Academy and art galleries throughout the country. To opera-goers, he is known for his markedly original settings for the Metropolitan Opera House production of "Petrouschka" and at the Boston Opera production of the Ballet in "Prince Igor."

Shadowgraph Prologue Pleases Milwaukee

Shadowgraphs were used at Saxe's Strand theatre, Milwaukee, recently as a prologue for "The Old Swimmin' Hole."

The accompanying photograph shows what effect was produced. An immense white sheet was dropped at the front of the stage and the silhouette scenery thrown upon it with the orchestra softly playing "Huckleberry Finn" and a professional elocutionist reciting James Whitcomb Riley's poem "The Swimmin' Hole." The character representing Charles Ray sauntered out on to the stage and after performing various capers proceeded to fish in a scenery pond supplied with water which fell over a large mill wheel. Sand was used for the shadow water. The climax of the little skit consisted of the fisherman landing a catch at the close of the recitation when the lights were extinguished as the photo play started on the silhouette sheet. As soon as the stage had been cleared of the scenery this sheet was slowly raised and the rest of the photo play exhibited on the regular screen.

Newman Theatre Gets Novel Effects

One of the most novel effects ever seen at any theatre marked the opening of "Forbidden Fruit," at the Newman theatre, Kansas City. The innovation consisted of a transparent, hand painted, illuminated frame constructed about two feet around and in front of the regular screen, representing different kinds of fruit in accordance with the suggestions made in the press book issued on the picture by Paramount's advertising department. As a result of this design the flat appearance of the picture on the screen was removed and in its place there was substituted so much actual depth that the character, in many scenes, seemed to be real and moving. With the single exception that it was found necessary, after the first performance to dim the lights back of the stage so as not to detract the attention of the audience, the scheme was a tremendous success. Manager Milton H. Feld, who in Mr. Newman's absence is conducting managerial duties, has invented a plan that gives promise of making a hit and spreading to other theatres in the country.

Manager Feld had a hand painted panel, five feet high, two feet deep and 24 feet long, put in the lobby. It cost several hundred dollars; but it was worth it because it brought more publicity and favorable comment to the theatre than anything that had been attempted in Kansas City for a long time.

Home Talent Week Planned by Newman Theatres

Frank L. Newman, owner and manager of the Newman theatre in Kansas City, has planned a novel feature for the week beginning March 20. Since the erection of the Newman theatre, Mr. Newman has made music one of the paramount attractions at his play house. He now has arranged for a "home talent" musical week.

Prior to each performance, thirty minutes will be devoted to the playing of selections composed by Kansas City composers. This, Mr. Newman believes, not only will prove of extraordinary interest to the theatre-going public, but to scores of musicians as well.

"Kismet" Prologue First to be Presented at Albuquerque

"Kismet" is beginning to play the smaller cities now, among which is Albuquerque, N. M. Manager Williamson of the Ideal theatre, in presenting the picture, staged the first prologue to be given in the city.

A special orchestra was engaged and the services of six girls and a female impersonator to give an oriental dance secured.

One of the Albuquerque papers in reviewing "Kismet" said:

"The presentation of 'Kismet' marks a new advent in staging motion pictures in Albuquerque. The march of the harem girls through the dusk, the oriental dance in the red glow of the harem, by Louis E. Turner, with the faint odor of incense which pervades the theatre, supplemented by the oriental music by the Duke City orchestra, combine to make one feel the days of old Araby even as the opening scenes of the play unfold."

Meyer Gets School Co-operation

Fred S. Meyer, manager of the Palace theatre, Hamilton, O., in playing "The Last of the Mohicans" made a direct appeal to the principals and teachers of the schools with a circular letter. He also obtained an endorsement of the film from the Board of Education and entertained the Board and the faculty of the several schools during various shows of the three day engagement.

The interest taken in the feature by the teachers and educational authorities was one of the strongest box-office assets the picture had.

Northern Atmosphere for Southern Theatre Lobby

A very attractive northern atmosphere was lent to the entrance of the Isis theatre, Richmond, Va., for the showing of "The North Wind's Malice," by having painted a twenty-four sheet sign which was placed above the doors leading from the lobby into the theatre.

The name of the picture was strung across the top of the 24-sheet sign in large but snow-blurred type, while the author's name and the rest of the lettering was in black type.

As a faint background for the whole sign was a northern landscape in winter, hills and pine trees covered with snow. The sign gave a very pretty atmospheric effect to the lobby and attracted much comment.

Eddie Zorn Gets Publicity From Accident

TOLEDO photoplay houses depend upon the Community Traction Company to furnish them juice, and with almost startling regularity the power flickers and dies with the result that the exhibitor loses a considerable amount of money. This happens on an average of once a month. Eddie Zorn, of the Temple, through his advertising man, arranged a private screening of "Inside the Cup," and about fifty of the Toledo ministers responded to an invitation. The screening was scheduled for 9:30 A. M. on Friday preceding the week of showing. Things were going along nicely at 9:40. Zorn was seated in the last row with editors from all the papers, the organist was playing church music to the best of his ability, and the strange crowd were warming to the action nicely. At 9:45 the lights faded away, the organ music died and a moment of silence preceded a general discussion of "The Inside of the Cup," while all hands waited for the coming of light. Lack of time made it necessary to call off the showing, but the ministers and their families were given tickets to return during the week of showing.

The result of such an occurrence, however, was not so disastrous as one might suppose. The Temple theatre is a remodeled church and the newspaper people hurried to their typewriters and wrote first page stories of the event. One in the Blade was headed "Lead, Kindly Light, Think Preachers, as Lights Go Out." The body of the yarn told of the story and the purpose of the ministers being present. The ministers' discussion brought at least two sermons from the pulpits of as many churches. The picture opened big on Sunday, one patron buying forty tickets for his entire Sunday school class.

Builds Papiermache Elephant's Head for Lobby Display

A novelty theatre front display for the showing of "The Revenge of Tarzan," was arranged by Goldwyn's exploitation representative for the showing of that photoplay at the Garden theatre, Baltimore. The tropic vegetation which has characterized all "Tarzan" lobby exploitation was retained, but in all other respects it differed materially from former "Tarzan" theatre front displays.

A huge elephant's head of papier mache was constructed and placed on the front of the ticket seller's booth, the elephant's trunk running down to about the right height for a youngster to throw peanuts into the cavities in the end of the trunk. The head and trunk was painted grey, the tusks a yellowish white until it all had very much the appearance of a live elephant's head. Underneath the extended trunk was a neatly lettered sign reading, "Tanor, Tarzan's jungle pet. See him in 'Revenge of Tarzan.'"

The front of the theatre was supplied, for the occasion, with hundreds of dark green lights entwined with the rich green of tropical plants while here and there were "punchy" photos from the picture and the posters.

What Small Theatre Can Accomplish in Prologues

An effective home scene provided a prologue for "Humoresque" that proved a veritable riot when the picture played at the Kerrigan theatre, New Albany, Ind. In addition to offering a prologue that combined artistry and charm, the setting, according to Oscar A. Kantner, Paramount exploiteer at Indianapolis, offered a vivid example of what a small theatre can accomplish in the way of prologues under skilled hands.

The scene was laid to harmonize with the story of the feature picture. The dingy furnishings of a tenement flat provided the locale. The middle aged mother seated at the half cleared dinner table offered the inspiration for her son to follow, on his violin, the records of some of the masters as reproduced by the phonograph. The prelude came to a logical conclusion as the phonograph ceased playing and the boy, having mastered the art of the violin, broke into the soft strains of "Humoresque." At the conclusion the audience broke into frantic applause.

A local furniture store supplied the phonograph, the records and the settings used in the scene, so that the only expense accruing to the theatre management consisted in the salaries of the two characters, "Mama Kantor" and her boy, "Leo," taken from the picture. The ease with which this theatre, located in one of the smaller towns, was able to present a delightful program in masterly manner, gives a concrete example of what can be accomplished with limited facilities and even more limited budget.

Here is a cut showing the ballyhoo which Howard Frankel, manager of the Majestic theatre, Columbus, O., used to help put over "Brewster's Millions"

Hick Comedy Stunt Goes Over Again

Two "country hicks" who went around the streets of Columbus, O., peddling "Brewster's Millions million laughs" stage money for the Majestic theatre, got a million chuckles out of Columbus people and no end of business for the picture, by their antics.

The important point to the stunt for almost every exhibitor in the country, is its sure fire evidence that the old hick comedy is still good for a laugh. Norman Dixon, newly appointed exploitation representative for Paramount Pictures in Cincinnati, co-operated with Manager Frankel of the Majestic theatre in the exploitation which centered around the rube act. The two strangers, hired by the theatre, promenaded the main thoroughfare, gave away 10,000 of the "Brewster's Millions Laugh Greenbacks" on the first day of the picture's opening and by Tuesday it was necessary to order 7,000 more.

"The Kid" Makes New Records in Philly

So great is the popularity of "The Kid," which just finished a week's run at the new Stanley theatre in Philadelphia, that the picture made new records for the house. It not only packed them in in the afternoon and evening, but it brought a rushing morning business, a thing that no other picture has ever done. The Stanley usually opens at eleven o'clock and runs the feature first at 11:40, but to accommodate the huge crowds during the run of the Chaplin film, the doors were opened each morning at ten, and by eleven there wasn't a seat in the house. As a result of the picture's great popularity it has been scheduled to play simultaneously during the week of March 7 at both the Victoria and Palace, which are usually first-run houses.

Admits Old People Free as Exploitation Stunt

That the exploitation of a picture pays and pays big is the viewpoint of Manager Frank Burlingame of the Strand theatre at Dubuque. Mr. Burlingame is practically the only Dubuque theatre manager who goes in for exploitation stunts with the result that he has a complete walkaway where big profits are concerned.

During the week of March 6, he scheduled "Conrad in Quest of His Youth." The Sunday previous to the showing of the film a large notice appeared in the Telegraph-Herald to the effect that all people in the city, over sixty years of age, would be admitted free to the show, as the guests of the paper. This invitation helped greatly to further the interest of the people of Dubuque in "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," with the result that the Strand did an excellent first night and splendid business during the remainder of the picture's run.

Another feature stunt that put over a picture far beyond the expectations of the management occurred a short time before the showing of "The Restless Sex." Mr. Burlingame, with the help of the advance agent for the picture, got the merchants of Dubuque to co-operate with the newspapers in putting over a two-page advertisement for "The Restless Sex." Every ad, signed with the merchant's name and slogan, told something about the picture or contained a cut of the leading players. Big, attractive advertising like this more than caught the public's eye, putting "The Restless Sex" over with a bang.

Posts Pictures of Stars to Aid Aspiring Contestants

Newspaper contests on star popularity have become so universal throughout the country that it's anybody's exploitation; but Eli M. Orowitz, exploitation representative for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has taken advantage of the situation to benefit a dozen or more theatres in the Philadelphia territory playing Paramount pictures. In view of the favor with which the newspaper innovation has been received by the public—which sends in from 60,000 to 100,000 votes daily,—the local theatres, under the exploitation man's supervision have advertised themselves accordingly.

These Paramount playing theatres have had handsome one sheet cards made on which the photographs of various Paramount stars are mounted.

Underneath is the caption:

WHY IN DOUBT OR HESITATION
As to the Identity of a Star
WHEN THEY'RE SEEN HERE.
It's PARAMOUNT You Guess 'Em
Right, IF YOU WANT TO WIN.

"You'd be surprised," one theatre manager writes, at the crowds that gather around these framed posters trying to identify stars who have appeared in the paper that day. Young boys and girls seem to predominate."

Walton's Exploitation of "Kismet"

Bellingham, Wash., is only a city of 25,000, but nevertheless it is distinctive for two things. It is the northwest "corner" city of the United States and it is the home of the American theatre and a live wire manager, F. B. Walton.

Recently Mr. Walton booked "Kismet" and then decided to sell the picture to ninety-nine and forty-four-hundredths of the population of Bellingham. An exploitation campaign followed that was worthy a city of the first class.

Not content with the heaviest advertising, he had done in many a day, Mr. Walton changed the entire front of his theatre, covering the walls to represent the heavy stone buildings of Bagdad, where the scenes of the picture are placed. This effect was continued in the lobby. Not only the walls but the ceiling was covered.

At the box office the patrons received their tickets from a young woman whose costume blazed Orientalism. Similarly costumed ushers led them to their seats and oriental hangings in the theatre kept up the illusion that the patrons were enjoying a night in Bagdad.

An elaborate prologue was then staged. Mr. Walton used eleven people on the stage. The basis of his stage setting was the diaphragm scene between Mr. Skinner and Rosemary Theby in the play. Three tiers of steps leading to the diaphragm were draped with oriental rugs and some rich looking cushions on which lay most of the girls. A dance by three of the girls was the piece de resistance.

The enterprise of Mr. Walton in staging such an elaborate prologue for a four-day engagement in a town of 25,000 caused much comment, but the business that the American did on the engagement is best proof of the fact that Mr. Walton is one of the wisest showmen in the northwest.

Stellings Originates Another Exploitation Novelty

Among the live wires who have a penchant for getting out inexpensive exploitation novelties is Ernest G. Stellings, manager of the Grand theatre of Wilminton, N. C.

One of Mr. Stellings' recent stunts was for "Blackmail." On dull black cover paper in the form a four-page folder, Mr. Stellings printed in colored ink the following on the first page:

"Watch Out, this is Blackmail."

On page two and three was some selling talk concerning the production and its forthcoming engagement at the Grand.

The folder got a lot of publicity for the Grand, especially since it was unusual in color with an unusual catch line on the first page.

Scales As Exploitation Medium at Elmira

Those who thought they were capable of impersonating Roscoe Arbuckle were given opportunity to "weigh" their arguments by Manager H. L. Walter, of the Amusu theatre, Elmira, N. Y. and John P. McConville exploitation representative for Paramount, when "The Life of the Party" was playing at the Amusu recently.

The fact that Roscoe weighs 300 pounds in the embryo stage was taken into consideration. Men entrants were given a 50-pound allowance and women 100 pounds. Needless to add, the additional allowance of clothing also was made.

The announcement of the contest read in part:

"Fatty is big hearted enough to allow you the additional handicap of keeping on clothes, while he weighed stripped. No, you can't see him. You'll have to take his word for it. No bricks or window weights in the pockets will be allowed. Get on the sales at the Amusu or at any Arbuckle weighing station this week."

Arbuckle scales were established throughout the city and the newspapers took up the publicity stunt for feature stories. Scores of stout people tried their feet on the scales. The exploitation idea attained greater popularity than anything ever attempted in Elmira and there was a rush to see who came closest to duplicating the physiognomy and avoirdupois of the well known star. It was a winner for the theatre for all Elmira talked of the contest and most of Elmira went to see the picture.

Milwaukee Theatre Gives "Jucklins" Fine Presentation

"The Jucklins" furnished an opportunity for a prologue that Manager Sanders, of the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, was quick to take advantage of. He had a painted stage scene arranged showing a southern plantation with the cotton fields in the foreground showing up with fluffy white tops against a setting of rolling hills and sky.

Ballyhoo for "The Kid" used by the Majestic theatre, La Crosse, Wis. Story appears on this page

The musical program was selected with an eye to the feature pictures. Instead of trying to foist high brow stuff on his patrons with such a program, Manager Sanders did the wise thing by substituting real sentiment and selecting the old songs that touch the heart strings.

The selections harmonized with the story of the rural plantation life shown in "The Jucklins." "Old Black Joe," "My Old Kentucky Home" and other songs furnished the basis of the musical program.

Friese's "The Kid" Exploitation

A very effective and inexpensive exploitation stunt was used for "The Kid" when it showed at the New Majestic theatre in La Crosse, Wisconsin.

William Friese, assistant manager of the La Crosse Theatres Company, was responsible for this idea.

Several days before the picture was scheduled to play, Mr. Friese had a man dressed as shown in the accompanying cut, but without the placard on his chest, walking the streets of La Crosse, and acting in a very peculiar manner. He would stop the people he met on the street with these words: "Have you seen the Kid?" If the one addressed said, "What Kid?" he would then reply, "Well, you didn't see him or you would remember him."

The first day that he was out he was arrested as he was believed to be partially demented. Mr. Koppelberger, general manager of the La Crosse Theatres Company, persuaded the police officials to release him, and also by explaining the idea of the thing managed to have the actual reason for his appearances suppressed. However, the newspapers gave a story about the poor demented man who was wandering the streets of La Crosse looking for his lost boy. This quest was continued for two or three days and then this individual again appeared with the placard on his chest reading, "I have been looking for the Kid for one year and one day." The following day the card read "one year and two days," etc.

Coupled with this walking interrogation point, an extensive advertising campaign was conducted in the papers, starting with a set of teaser ads and working up from that to large displays immediately ahead of the opening of the production. According to the reports received from Mr. Friese, the stunt created widespread attention and the result was capacity houses at every performance.

This form of exploitation is very effective and very inexpensive and can easily be used by any exhibitor booking the picture.

Johnston's "Tin Can Show"

Minneapolis Four Hundred Attend New Lyndale's Novelty Performance

THERE are several varieties of can being one in which the pink slip and canning parties among them and the boss play important parts and another, now quite extinct since the first of July, 1919, but G. Carroll Johnston, manager of the New Lyndale theatre, Minneapolis, gave another kind of can party recently that was a huge success.

As an exploitation stunt, Manager Johnston announced in Sunday's papers that on Tuesday night, between the hours of seven and eight o'clock, anyone presenting a clean tin can at his theatre would be admitted free. The New Lyndale is situated in an exclusive residence district and the doubting Thomases predicted failure from the start for the stunt.

But shortly after seven they began coming in droves.. Everyone took it as a big joke. Limousines would roll up filled with well dressed men and women, each one with a tin can secreted under their coat. Some would walk sheepishly up to the door to see if they were really accepting the cans, but becoming reassured would walk boldly in. Theatre parties were organized with the provision that each guest furnish his own can. One man with a large family and an inventive head presented what appeared to be one can. But on examination, it was found that to save trouble, he had taken the required number of cans in graduated sizes and telescoped them together.

The New Lyndale, which is a Finkelstein and Ruben house, seats 740 and according to Mr. Johnston, 1,500 persons appeared with the cans during the specified hour. Some of the persons tired of waiting to get in, went away to return after eight o'clock and cheerfully paid their admission in rather than go home without seeing the picture.

Mr. Johnston is very optimistic as to the benefits to be derived from his stunt. His boxoffice statement showed he did a normal night's business in addition to all the people admitted free.

Mr. Johnston stated that much curiosity was evidenced as to the reason for the stunt. Several men told him their wives had been pestering them for days as to what the management intended doing with the cans. To all inquiries Mr. Johnston gave a joking answer. That the New Lyndale's clientele would eat anything up on that order was clearly shown in the enthusiasm and pep shown by the crowds waiting with their tin cans.

Red Line Extra Gets Results Again

The red-typed newspaper "Extra" made another stage entrance when Arthur Vogel, Paramount exploiteer for the Seattle territory, staged an exploitation campaign in connection with the showing of "Idols of Clay" at the American theatre, Bellingham, Wash.

It was another example of how easily and inexpensively exploitation can be accomplished under trained hands. As the result of the co-operation Vogel obtained from the publishers of the Bellingham Herald several thousand copies of the issue of March 1 were distributed with the caption in big red type on the front page:

"EXTRA! EXTRA! GREAT EVENT. SEE PAGE TEN."

Page ten provided an event in itself for it marked one of the few full-page motion picture theatre advertisements ever run in Bellingham. It was an advertisements of "Idols of Clay."

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Keaton Ready to Start Second Series

Buster Keaton has begun plans for the production of his second series of two-reel comedies for release through Metro, following the completion of the eighth and final of the first group—"The Goat." These slapstick offerings are made by arrangement with Joseph M. Schenck.

Announcement of this came this week to the Metro home offices in New York from Lou Anger, manager of the Comique Film Co., sponsors of the Keaton comedies. It was made public at the same time that Virginia Fox, leading woman in the majority of the first eight comedies, has been engaged for the second series.

"The Goat" follows the first seven: "One Week," "Convict 13," "The Scarecrow," "Neighbors," "The Haunted House," "Hard Luck," and "The High Sign."

Pantheon in Search of Alaskan Scripts

George Dubois Proctor, who is in charge of the scenario department of Pantheon Pictures Corporation, announces that this company is in the market for five-reel dramas or comedy dramas and two-reel stories with their locale in Alaska or the far north.

The latter will be produced at the Port Henry, N. Y. studios, where Pantheon Pictures Corporation have lately organized a producing unit, as well as several of the longer features.

Another producing unit will shortly be established near New York City, and both this and the company at Port Henry, will be under the supervision of Charles Miller.

STATE RIGHTS exchanges throughout the country will be glad to learn that Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, has acquired the rights to the re-created Biograph production of "East Lynne," and will at once close territorial contracts on it.

This production of "East Lynne" is all-American, acted by Americans and directed by an American. Likewise it was filmed in America with modern costumes. It is a thrilling and deeply interesting filmization of the great stage play that has been a decided success for generations.

Directed by Travers Vale, this production of "East Lynne" includes among its cast Louise Vale, Alan Hale, Gretchen Hartman and Kate Bruce.

Apex Film to be Issued

Remington Paintings to Aid Exploitation of "Out of the Dust"

AFTER a delay following an early announcement, Apex Films, New York, is now ready for the market with their state right attraction "Out of the Dust." The picture itself had been complete for some time, but the Apex has refrained from showing it without its attendant exploitation features.

It has been known that this John P. McCarthy production is of early pioneer days, taking its inspiration from the famous paintings by Frederic Remington. Because of this association, the Apex Company made a deal with Collier's, the publishers, who have for years issued millions of Remington's pictures as premium subscription features, special portfolios, etc. It was the Apex idea to link these Remingtons with the production and the rights to these famous subjects were therefore secured. But difficulties appeared in unlooked-for places, mostly of a mechanical nature. The entire set of about thirty four-color subjects are almost priceless in the original metal, being the only set in existence and the making of electros for all of them became necessary. The printing, too, was a big undertaking, since only certain plants are qualified to turn out a creditable job on reproductions of paintings, with the necessity of special inks to get the true color values and other fine points of the printing art.

As the final result of surmounting all difficulties, Apex now has its own Remingtons ready for use of the state rights market thus giving "Out of the Dust" a feature for exploitation never before attempted, the rights to which alone represent an enormous sum. These Remingtons are printed on the finest kind of heavy coated paper, and are identical with the prints sold in art stores for from $1.50 to $2.50 each. They measure 16x24 inches each, and the advertising matter is so arranged as to be out of sight when the picture is framed.

Apex has made amazing use of the Remington plates. Their stationery itself is a revelation, being replete with four-color Remington miniatures, also available for the use of buyers. The most famous subject from the great artists' brush, "Caught in the Circle," makes the twenty-four sheet look like a genuine Remington painted on a fence, frame effect and all.

Reelcraft Plans Features

Preliminary Announcement of Enlargement Made by R. C. Cropper

THE Reelcraft Pictures Corporation is to enter the feature picture distribution field very shortly according to a statement issued by President R. C. Cropper.

"It is true that the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation is going to distribute feature pictures," says Cropper, "there have been so many rumors concerning the fact that I believe this preliminary verification is necessary. The matter has been definitely decided for many months, in fact, ever since the first day when Reelcraft consolidated many Short producing and Distributing Companies, we have planned for the time when features would be added to our program."

"Reelcraft has been very successful with the Short Subjects, and has no intentions of discontinuing the one and two reel releases, quite the contrary, we are preparing three complete additional units to supply us with Short Subjects."

"The matter of securing our features has been a matter of time, when the news first leaked out that we were going to distribute Features, we received pictures from all sources and all countries. I might add that we were offered every kind of picture that human mind could produce, and after looking at more than one hundred, we decided that the pictures to suit our needs would have to be produced especially for us."

"Two feature producing companies have been organized for the express purpose of supplying us features, more companies will be added later in the year, until we expect to have at least two features a month for distribution through our organization."

"Reelcraft has also spent considerable time in the upbuilding of the distributing organization, in several cities where we have formerly distributed through Independent Exchanges we have opened our own direct exchanges. In every other center where we have no exchange we will distribute on a mutual franchise plan through the best exchanges in these centers."

Sport Pictorial Booked in Boston Houses

Word has just reached the Arrow Film Corporation offices that the Lightning Photoplay service of New England has booked the latest sport pictorial "Leading Dog's Life" in all of Jake Lowry's theatres in Boston to play day and date. The Lowry theatres are "The Modern," "The Park" and "The Beacon."

Billy West Comedies 75 Percent Sold

Joan Film Sales Co., reports this week that seventy five percent of the territory has been sold on its series of Billy West Comedies. Missouri, Ohio, Minnesota and Canada are still opened and the last two are expected to be closed shortly. The West comedies were first released four months ago when the first two-reeler, "Sweethearts" was announced.

"The Price of Silence" in Loew Houses

The first big release of the Sunrise Pictures Corporation, "The Price of Silence," adapted from the famous novel, "At the Mercy of Tiberius," by Augusta J. Evans Wilson, and in which winsome Peggy Hyland in starred, will be shown at Loew theatres commencing March 21.

THE Lion Film Corporation of Dallas was granted a charter in the State of Texas at the capital, Austin, Texas, on March 10. The officers of said corporation are: L. C. Baxley, president; Harry T. Peebles, vice-president; S. T. Bryant, secretary and treasurer. The Lion Film Corporation is incorporated for $50,000,000 and has purchased the entire business and all stock of the L. C. Baxley Attractions, Inc., together with all productions controlled by that company together with their outstanding contracts.

Mr. Baxley and Mr. Peebles are both well known to to the trade in the Southwest, Mr. Baxley having been one of the pioneers in the state right business, one of the organizers of the Specialty Film Company and also sales manager of the Southern Enterprises.

R. E. Baxley has been appointed sales manager of the new concern. R. E. Tomlinson, formerly with Select, Pathe and Specialty exchanges of Dallas, has been appointed office manager.

Will Test Value of Stars

C. B. C. Believes Possibilities of Male Stars Are Overlooked

A "REVERSAL of English" is being tried by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation in that, with the producers tending more and more to feature pretty girls and women in their productions, and distribution concerns securing for release mostly "she" pictures, this company now has a man as the featured player of the series which it is producing and releasing, and of another series and an important six-reel feature which it is distributing to the State Right market. This is by way of an experiment that the officials of this company are trying to test the merits and box-office value of men stars versus women stars—and they are to counterbalance the male side of the scales with a French woman star—Zany Mieus, who appears in "The Nightingale of Paris," the first of a series of French pictures which C. B. C. is to release.

First of the three men stars under the C. B. C. banner is Sid Smith, featured in Hallroom Boys Comedies which are being produced on the Coast by Harry Cohn of the C. B. C. company. With the contracting with C. Edward Hatton for the making of twenty-six two-reel Western thrillers for release by C. B. C. this company adds the second featured man player to the series on its books. And, in "The Victim," Robert T. Haines is the featured player, and it is reported that this six-reel drama is meeting with great success throughout the country.

The testing by C. B. C. of the value of the man star versus the woman is in line with this concern's desire to give the public what it wants—after it has found out without any room for doubt just what the public does want. The test is to be made absolutely fairly, Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn declare, extensive advertising and exploitation being given to the men stars, and to Mlle Mieus, so that conditions may be even throughout.

They believe, however, that the man star has been more or less overlooked in favor of the woman—and that the day for the man star is at hand, if producers only have the foresight to see it.

According to Messrs. Brandt and Cohn, however, the theatre-going girl has become an increasingly important factor in the amusement world, and one which producers and exhibitors would do well to consider. With the terrific business conditions of the past year, men have less money than hitherto to spend for the amusements of their families and women friends. Add to this the fact that today there are a greater number of girls and women economically independent than ever before,—and the result is that film theatres are full of girls alone or in pairs, 'blowing themselves' to their own amusements.

"And," they declare, "just as a man gravitates toward the theatre showing the pretty girl, a girl tends toward seeing a man whose screen likeness has struck her fancy."

However, they are going to leave it to the public to decide whether they are right or wrong—and they will follow the dictates of the public decision when it is made.

Kipling Flays Censorship

Death of All Western Pictures Would Result Says Independent

RICHARD KIPLING, of the Kipling Enterprises, who is now in New York, is one of the Staunchest foes of censorship as it will be applied should individual censorship be applied in the various states. Mr. Kipling is offering on the independent market a series of thrilling Westerns, the third of which is "The Battlin' Kid."

"We producers of Westerns," said Mr. Kipling, "have the most to fear from the fanatics. How can we take the guns and the riding out of our Western productions? We do not uphold the villian in our productions. On the contrary it is always our object to see that he is brought to justice at the end of the picture, no matter who he may be. We do not glorify crime. The hero, representing right and justice, is ever triumphant.

"It seems to me as if the censor advocates are trying to take the kick out of everything in this country. If we take the riding, the shooting, and the rapid fire action out of our Westerns, we have a picture punchless and zestless. State censorship will mean the death of Westerns and Westerns are the most popular type of pictures.

The independent producer has more to fear than the star of national fame who offers his or her picture for the approval of the censors. A great star, with his or her name to carry the picture, has a far greater chance of receiving their imprimatur than the smaller fellow, who must necessarily produce with a lesser known cast.

"If censorship must come, let it be national censorship, and let a board of examiners act in each producing center. Let a scene be condemned before the set has been destroyed, rather than to wait until we have lost our money irrecoverable."

"Dollars and Destiny" Well Received

Joe Horwitz, of Joe Horwitz Productions, announces that he has already closed several territories on "Dollars and Destiny," the feature starring Paul Capallani, which he is distributing on the independent market. The picture has won the approval of every one who has seen it, it is stated.

Mr. Horwitz states that he will shortly announce a new picture which will be a surprise to the industry.

"Midchannel" in Brooklyn

Clara Kimball Young Draws Big Crowds in Residential Theatre

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG, the Equity Pictures star, duplicated the success she has attained in many other cities of the country last week in Brooklyn, N. Y., when "Midchannel," the Fourth Young production to be released by Equity, was shown at the Sunset theatre, a big first-run house of Bay Ridge.

According to Equity Manager, Gus Konigswald reports that during its four day run it broke every previous record. The Sunset has shown many big productions of the leading producers. "Midchannel," it is stated, surpassed the most optimistic expectations when the box office returns were counted.

The success of Clara Kimball Young in Brooklyn is conclusive, Equity states, as the circumstances attending the showing of 'Midchannel' were not very favorable. A period of four months had elapsed since the last Young picture was shown—'For the Soul of Rafael.' Many another star would have 'died' during the long interval, but 'Midchannel' drew even bigger business.

As a result of the Sunset run of 'Midchannel' during the week of March 5th, seven neighboring theatres have booked the picture, The prosperous account that 'Midchannel' gave of itself at the box-office is not only due to the fame of the star, says Equity, but to the calibre of the picture. That is why, in Konigswald's opinion, 'Midchannel' outdrew 'For the Soul of Rafael.

Chicago House Exploits "Lone Hand Wilson"

How Manager John Keane, of the Band Box theatre, Chicago, utilized a six-sheet special hand lettering inserted to dress the outside of his theatre during the successful run of Lester Cuneo's "Lone Hand Wilson," is shown in the accompanying cut.

Inside the lobby two giant cutouts of Cuneo were set up and paper furnished by the Capital Film Company on "Lone Hand Wilson" was utilized to cover the side walls. The result was very gratifying, according to Mr. Kane, who reports that the attractive lobby display backed up by word of mouth advertising on this excellent picture resulted in one of the best weeks ever experienced by his house.

LOUIS BAUM, sales manager of Joan and Equity Pictures, returned this week from a two months' trip throughout the country with six contracts on his companies' pictures which are reported in this issue. The sales were made within four weeks. During the first month of his trip Mr. Baum managed the personal appearance of Clara Kimball Young in Houston, Dallas and San Antonio, Tex., where she was accorded a wonderful reception.

Mr. Baum states that in the course of his trip he found the conditions in the independent field had greatly improved. He reports that the Southern and Middle West territories were doing exceptionally well and far from feeling any depression, were enjoying a more prosperous business than ever.

Sardino Becomes Head of Dooley Exchanges

Al Sardino, owner of the Hippodrome in Syracuse, is now general manager of the Dooley exchanges in Buffalo, Syracuse and Albany, having succeeded Thomas W. Dooley, who has disposed of all his interests in the company and opened his own exchange in Syracuse under the name of the Exhibitors' Film and Service Company. The new Dooley official has taken over the Ben Fitzer Productions, Inc., with offices in the Palace theatre building, Buffalo and in the future the releases handled by Ben Fitzer will be handled from the Dooley office.

John M. Sitterly will remain as manager of the Buffalo Dooley office under the new regime. It is rumored that other state right exchanges may soon be taken over by Mr. Sardino.

Musical Scores for Kinetos

Isaacson Selected to Handle Urban's Innovation

WHEN Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, Inc., decided to have musical presentations prepared for his Kineto Reviews, as was announced in these pages last week, he investigated all the men he deemed best fitted to do such work and finally decided on Charles D. Isaacson as the best equipped man of all.

Now that Mr. Isaacson has already begun the work, Mr. Urban finds the musical expert's enthusiasm quite matches his own.

The result, it is believed, will be undoubtedly very fine for the men and women whose business it is to present the motion picture to the public.

Never before have short motion picture subjects been accorded any particular musical attention. But lately their importance has been increasingly recognized and Mr. Urban, who publishes all his releases in lengths of one reel decided the time had come when their treatment ought to be on a par with that given to feature pictures in five and more reels.

"The short subject must tell its story quickly," said Mr. Isaacson, "It must create its atmosphere without delay and must lose no opportunity to adopt every conceivable aid to make the maximum effect possible. It has always surprised me that the makers of the short subjects, especially such as these extremely high quality Kineto Reviews, did not realize the importance of cueing them to music. The big features can more easily do without music than these compact shorter ones.

"I am mighty happy to have this opportunity to assist Mr. Urban, whose work I have long admired and for whom I have the greatest respect, looking upon him, as I do, as a real pioneer who has carried through his ideas.

"I have viewed the first thirteen Kineto Reviews to be scored, and I can tell you that I am very, very enthusiastic. I will have a regular artistic orgy in laying out 'The Holy City' and 'The Emerald Isle.' When it comes to 'Thrills' I expect I will have a better time over my division of the work than any subject as ever afforded me heretofore.

"How will I score the pictures? Well, I'll tell you. It will be my desire to catch the atmosphere. Where possible I want to make the theme as one unit, but where the picture calls for variety, I will suggest as many themes as are necessary. But I will do something that never has been done before. Instead of merely suggesting compositions arbitrarily without regard for size or availability of music, I will make three variations for big, medium and small orchestras and will in addition explain just what I am seeking to accomplish, so that if none of the suggested music is available, the musician will have no difficulty in substituting effectively, without detriment to the picture or the entertainment.

"In conclusion, I wish to emphasize that Mr. Urban has started a very fine movement; one that will aid the motion picture tremendously and also do a great deal to further the musical appreciation of the public."

Mr. Isaacson is well known for the sentiment he expresses in his conclusion. As editor of "Our Family Music" in the New York "Globe"; as creator of the "Globe" concerts he has won a world-wide reputation. As a writer, a musician and an editor he has earned a fine reputation. His influence in motion picture theatres has been very great on account of his work in making music an important part of theatre programs.

In associating himself with Mr. Urban to prepare the Kineto Reviews for musical presentations, he is widening his already very extensive activities.

More Product for Arrow Film

Shallenberger to Give Complete List of Pictures Soon

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has returned from a trip to Los Angeles, where he has been for the past few weeks. While on the coast, Dr. Shallenberger contracted for a number of productions and short reel subjects.

While Dr. Shallenberger will not give out a detailed statement at this time, he, however, states that he has contracted for twenty-six features. Most of these features are in series of four; that is, each series of four pictures will feature a prominent star.

The first feature of the twenty-six contracted for by Dr. Shallenberger is called "Headin' North" and features Pete Morrison. This feature is now in Arrow's office and the advertising matter pertaining to it is being prepared and an early release date has been set. Four big super specials are included in the twenty-six features. These will be announced later.

Two series of two-reel comedies have also been contracted for by Dr. Shallenberger. The first of these series is to be made with Harry Gribbon, Eddie Berry and Helen Darling as the stars, and there will be twelve of these two-reelers in this series. The second series will also consist of 12, and the stars have not been announced as yet.

A big northwestern serial of fifteen episodes with Ann Little in the leading role, has also been contracted for by Arrow. This serial is being made and directed by Ben Wilson, who also made "Thunderbolt Jack" with Jack Hoxie. The serial is made from a story which was especially written for Ann Little. Dr. Shallenberger states that this serial has been made in answer to the thousands of letters that have been received by Arrow as well as by Miss Little herself since her appearance in "Lightning Bryce," insisting that this star make another serial. Arrow will soon be ready to offer this serial to the independent market.

On his way to and from the coast, Dr. Shallenberger visited all of the independent state right offices. This included offices in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Denver, Minneapolis and Chicago, and he states that he found that all of the independent exchanges that were conducting a clean business and using clean salesmanship methods are in a highly flourishing condition. "In fact," states Dr. Shallenberger, "I was surprised to learn how successful many of these exchanges are. Wherever I found an exchange that was doing business on a businesslike basis and using clean methods and up-to-date salesmanship, I found a successful exchange and one that was making money. I found that exhibitors are becoming more and more partial to the independent exchanges and are patronizing them to a greater extent than formerly. In fact, where an independent exchange has a series of pictures of the same quality as a program house, it is given the preference in many cases, and so long as the independent exchange man will use careful judgment in the selection of his product he is sure of the continued support of the exhibitors.

"I found a few independent producers at work on the coast. In fact the only independent producers that are working are those that are working under contract where their product has already been sold, which means but one thing, and that is, that the producers that are making pictures must make them better, and to do this it costs money which necessarily means that the exchanges must be willing to pay a fair price for their pictures."

It is said at the offices of Arrow that a statement will soon be issued showing the list of productions that were contracted for by Dr. Shallenberger.

"The Price of Silence" in Fan Magazines

Herman Jans Leaves on Extended Trip

Herman F. Jans, President of Jans Pictures, Inc., and of Jans Film Service, Inc., left for an extended journey Saturday, March 12th—which will carry him to the principal film centers of the United States. Mrs. Jans and their daughter will accompany him, Mr. Jans intending to make the trip partly one of pleasure, as he states that this will be his first vacation of any length since he entered the motion picture industry fifteen years ago.

Mr. Jans' first stop will be Chicago and from that point he will touch Minneapolis, Seattle, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta, Baltimore, and Washington.

Before leaving Mr. Jans was entertained at a dinner party given by the employees of the two corporations at Churchill's, on Broadway.

Canadian Rocky Scenic Rich in Beauty

The current Ford Educational Library film, "Where the Columbia River Rises," which is being released through the Federated Film Exchanges of America, contains views of towering mountain peaks capped with everlasting snows, babbling brooks, dashing waterfalls, mighty canyons carved by mountain streams and winding trails along the precipitous mountain sides, make this a most beautiful film.

The picture follows the winding Columbia River from its source in the Canadian Rockies and through these mountains down to the valleys.

Gallagher Completes Two Reel Western

Under the direction of Charlie Roberts, finis was written this week on a new two-reel Western, starring Ray Gallagher and the film is now being prepared for release on the state rights market by the Independent Films Association of Chicago.

The story is titled, "Crooked Trails," and is the second in a series of 24 two-reelers a year to be produced by Arthur Gooden Productions at Independence City studios, Hollywood, Cal.

The first of the Gallagher series is now on the state rights market and is titled, "Go Get 'Em."

Next Kineto Release Is "The Holy City"

"The Holy City," one of the series of Kineto Reviews being handled by National Exchanges, Inc., in the United States, will be released the last week in March. Charles Urban has personally edited "The Holy City" and is said to have made of it not only a reel of remarkable beauty, but one of the most unique productions ever made.

All the scenes in "The Holy City" have been described with titles taken literally from the Bible.

Dominant Pictures Popular

Rapid Strides Made in Sale of U. S. Amusement Feature Series

JACQUES KOFFSTEIN, general manager of the Dominant Pictures Inc., states that the several exchanges have grasped the opportunity to secure the series of six special features produced by the U. S. Amusement Corp. Four of the pictures star Catherine Calvert, the other two stars Edith Hallor and Naomi Childers respectively.

The old titles of these features and their cast is as follows: "Behind the Mask," society melodrama by Charles T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky" and features Richard Tucker in addition to Catherine Calvert; "Think It Over," from the story by Herbert Blache, featuring Richard Tucker and Catherine Calvert; "The Peddler"—a screen version of the play which presents Joe Welch who created the stellar role in the original stage version for so many years, and also Catherine Calvert; "The House of Cards," the play by Alice Blache in which Frank Mills and Catherine Calvert are starred; "A Man and the Woman"—a photo drama based on the novel of Emile Zola's "Nantes"; "The Auction of Virtue"; a screen version of Joseph Poland's play featuring Naomi Childers and Leslie Austin.

The first of these to be issued will be "The House of Cards" which will be known in its newly edited and revised form as "Aching Hearts." Brand new lithographs consisting of one, three and six sheets have been prepared on each one of this series by the Ritchey Lithograph Co. In addition to this paper, each of these subjects will also have 11 x 14 photos, press sheets, slides and cuts.

Kremer Breaking Records

Bigger Business Than Ever Reported in Office of Independent

CALAMITY howlers who have been decrying the poor conditions in the motion picture industry would hardly find any support for their arguments in the Victor Kremer offices as during the past week this company has eclipsed, in the line of business, anything that it has done in its history.

The full office force is busy taking care of orders and answering telegrams that have been coming in asking territorial rights for the new Texas Guinan series of Western dramas and "The Handicap," Mr. Kremer's latest production to be released.

The Guinans have surpassed in demand from exhibitors any class of pictures that this company has to date put forth, states Kremer. That public appetite is whetted for Western stories is proven in this unusually large demand for the Guinans, which runs about five to one on all the others.

"I Am the Woman," the first Guinan pictures, will be shown this week at a private screening after which it will be shown publicly at one of the Broadway houses.

"The Handicap," which was recently shown at the Loew houses, seems to be in big demand in the Middle West particularly, although orders from all parts of the country are coming in daily, but in the section above referred to there have been several orders for return showings, an unusual happening for a picture of this nature.

"The great hit made by 'The Kid,' has had a tonic effect on the old Chaplin pictures such as 'By the Sea,' 'A Jitney Elopement,' 'Work' and the burlesque, 'Carmen,' states Mr. Kremer. Many houses that had already shown these pictures twice have sent in orders for a third repeat. These Chaplins are controlled and distributed by the Victor Kremer Company through the New York Independent Masterfilms Exchange.

Summarized the business of the Kremer concern since the first of the year by far surpasses that for the same period of 1920 and the outlook is that 1921 will prove the banner year of the company's existence, it is stated.

Manheimer Has Press Book

Useful and Elaborate Aid Ready for Feature "Every Man's Price"

E. S. MANHEIMER, who is handling the state rights distribution of Burton King's special production, "Every Man's Price," in which Grace Darling is the featured player, has had prepared one of the most unusual press books ever gotton out on a big picture.

Aside from the artistic manner in which the book has been treated, the advertising campaign, as contained within the covers, offers new angles for publicity and exploitation, the stories having been especially written along straight newspaper lines by newspapermen of the metropolitan press.

The advertising matter on "Every Man's Price" is said to be different from any prepared for either a state rights production or a nationally distributed picture, in that a wide variety of effective display ads have been prepared, it is said, by one of the largest advertising agencies in the country. These ads enable the exhibitors to get the fullest possible advertising value for a minimum cost.

The posters, by Ritchey, include one's, three's, six's and twenty-four's, are unusually attractive and designed especially to impel action at the box office.

Fait, of Howells Sales, to Leave on Trip

William Fait, Jr., directing the sales of the Howells Sales Co., Inc., which is distributing the fifteen episode serial "The Hope Diamond Mystery," featuring Grace Darmond on the states rights market, expects to leave in the near future on a trip covering the middle west and a part of the south.

His first stop will be Chicago where he will arrange for a special showing of the entire serial before the Chicago Censor Board, as it is the purpose of the Howells Sales Co. to have this picture passed by the various censor boards.

Plans are being made, it is announced, to have the main title—"The Hope Diamond Mystery" done in natural color photography. Arrangement are under way with the Colura Company to do this work. This is the same company that did in natural color the inserts in "Way Down East."

It is stated that numerous telegrams and letters of inquiry are coming into the office of the company as a result of the trade paper advertising on the serial.

Reel Set is Now Used as Real Set

William M. Riordan, of Anna Spencer, Inc., Gowns, happened to be a visitor at Universal studios while Mr. William Nigh was working in one of the sets prepared by Tilford Cinema studios.

This setting was an elaborate mannikin room of original design. Mr. Riordan was so impressed with the genuineness and originality of the setting that he promptly purchased it and its decorations. Immediately on conclusion of the scenes being enacted in the setting he had it transplanted in all detail to his establishment for permanent actual use.

Keen Interest Shown in "Annabel Lee"

The release of the five-reel feature, "Annabel Lee," by the Joan Film Sales Company to the independent market has aroused wide interest, announces that company. For the past three weeks, inquiries have been coming in through the mail and in person from state right buyers of all parts, asking to see the new feature. Up to a few days ago, no print was available to satisfy the curiosity of buyers, but now that the first print is off the developing racks, Joan has ordered twelve more sample prints to circulate among the various territories for inspection.

Howells Sales Co Has New Feature

The Howells Sales Company, Inc., has obtained control of the world's rights to a five reel feature picture entitled 'You Find It Everywhere" starring Catherine Calvert and Herbert Rawlinson, which it will distribute immediately on the states rights market.

The picture is adapted from a Saturday Evening Post story by Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson called the "The Gibson Upright."

A scene from "The Nightingale of Paris," the first of a series of four French pictures which C. B. C. Film Sales will distribute on the Independent market

"Things Men Do" Is Offered

Schlesinger to Distribute Feature on State Right Basis

MAYER B. SCHLESINGER, of New York, well known in the independent field, announces this week to the trade in general and to state right buyers in particular that he has acquired for world distribution, the rights to 'Things Men Do," which is heralded as a powerful screen adaptation of the well known novel, "Into the Light."

The picture was produced by Cyrus J. Williams who has been and is now making the series of two-reel Western subjects for release through the Pathe Exchange, Inc. "Things Men Do," first of the series of special productions which Mr. Williams contemplates making for independent distribution, is visual proof that he can make good feature productions as well as effective two-reel subjects.

The picture opens in a sleepy little village where a young girl, continually subject to humiliation and shame at the hand of her brutal step-father, is lashed unmercifully with a rawhide whip because of her failure to finish the chores about the house. This causes the divine spark of sympathy to gain momentum in the heart of her sweetheart who strikes her step-father with his fists.

The production deals graphically with the story of the three characters, and pictures vividly a romance the culmination of which comes only after many have suffered heartaches and tortured souls.

"Rarely, if ever, has a picture been made," says Mr. Schlesinger in a statement issued to the trade press "which is so human in the unfolding of its plot and so tender in its love scenes. It is the sort of a vehicle which forces a lump at the throat and a smile on one's cheeks at the same time. Your patrons will like it, you will like it, and only those folks who have a heart as hard as the proverbial granite will not be affected by its tenderness, its sincerity and its sympathy.

"The title, alluring and compelling, lends itself readily to exploitation. The story, one of human foibles and heartaches, inspires a great sympathy. The cast, embracing an ensemble of screen artists, including such well known stars as Patricia Palmer, Edward Hearn, Gertrude Claire and a host of others equally as popular, was selected because of the individual's adaptability to the roles in question. The direction, in the hands of Robert North Bradbury, is most unusual.

"I am happy to announce this production for independent distribution. I am certain that it will represent one of the big box office attractions of the year. In making this latter assertion, I am certain the exhibitor, public and press will bear me out in this regard."

Exceptional Cast Seen in "Mother Eternal"

Ivan Abramson, who has just finished directing "Mother Eternal," believes that never before in the thirty pictures which he has produced, has he managed to assemble a cast which worked so smoothly and whole-heartedly for the success of a picture, as in this production.

"I knew I had a story," said Mr. Abramson, "I always make sure of that before I begin casting, but like every other independent, I had to trust to luck for players and it seemed for a time that my labors would be ten-fold because of the exacting nature of the story with regard to characters."

Through Eugene Spits, president of the Estee studios, Mr. Abrahamson secured the services of Vivian Martin for the leading role. The other players are Thurston Hall, Earl Metcalfe, Jack Sherrill, Pearl Shepard, Vivienne Osborne, Cecil Kern, Ruth Sullivan, J. W. Johnston, Clyde Hunnwell.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Sales Drive Promises to Break Records

LATE reports from the Pathe headquarters in New York declare that the sales competition, which was inaugurated at the beginning of March under the title of "Brunet Optimism Month," promises to roll up a sales record surpassing any previously established by the Pathe organization. This is the announcement issued from the Pathe home-office as the half-way mark is reached.

New business has been remarkably stimulated by the contest, it is stated. This is partly due to the conditions of the competition, in which contracts, bearing either a play date or advance deposit, or both, received a seventy per cent credit, against thirty per cent for collections.

New Leading Women in Christie Comedies

Two new leading women were announced this week by the Christie Film Company. They will both make their first appearance in a picture which will have its first showing in June.

Viora Daniel, who appeared opposite Roscoe Arbuckle in "The Life of the Party" and who has just finished playing the feminine lead with Max Linder in "Full of Pep," is the first of these. Josephine Hill, the second, had the leading feminine part in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" and before this appeared in comedies and two reel westerns for Universal.

Earl Rodney will be the male featured player in their first picture, to be released in June.

Alice Joyce Production Well Under Way

Alice Joyce is well into her next Vitagraph production which is being made at the East Coast studio in Brooklyn under the direction of Edward Jose. It is being filmed under the tentative title of "The Desperate Heritage," and is adapted from the story of the same name by Harriet Gaylord. Mr. Jose, who has charge of the production, directed Miss Joyce in her most recent picture, "Her Lord and Master," which is now awaiting release.

Miss Joyce has an exceptionally strong supporting cast headed by Joe King, who plays opposite the star. Others in the cast include Fuller Mellish, Claude King, E. Phillips, Jack Hopkins, Armand Cortez, and Maude Malcolm.

Educational Heads on Tour

E. W. Hammons and Henry Ginsberg Will Visit Company's Exchanges

WITH the view of acquainting all of the branches with the results obtained since the opening of its exchange system, E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Films Corporation of America and its distributing subsidiary, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., and Henry Ginsberg, manager of domestic sales, will start this month on a series of trips which will take one or the other of them to every office in this country, with the exception of the Pacific Coast.

Since the establishment of the exchange system Mr. Hammons has followed the policy of keeping in close touch with the branches and advising them fully in advance of all his plans and often asking the counsel of the various local managers. The visit of the two officials is expected to put them in even closer touch with the various offices and to result in so intimate an understanding of every territory that even better results may be obtained in the future. These trips follow the receipt of full reports from each office and also compilation by the home office of the results achieved and the improvements desired.

Mr. Hammons will in the near future visit the Washington, Pittsburgh, Louisville, Cincinnati, Cleveland and Detroit offices, leaving New York March 28th.

In preliminary trips Mr. Ginsberg will go to Boston, New Haven, Buffalo, Albany, and Toronto, Canada, offices and then start from this city on April 4 for a "swing around the circle" visiting Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Chicago and Indianapolis.

Mr. Hammons only recently returned from Los Angeles where he conferred with all of the producing units making pictures for Educational and a number of others who are anxious for Educational to handle their product. Although it is intimated that many important matters developed as the result of that visit, Educational announces that there will be no general statement issued until the full details of its second year's product have been entirely completed.

"Queen of Sheba" Said to Be Spectacular

According to reports from the headquarters of the Fox Film Corporation, "The Queen of Sheba" is a picture which has called for some elaborate production effects. Among the scenes that stand out in the big picture are those that detail the trip of Sheba across the Arabian desert on her first visit to the great wise man of the East, King Solomon; the subsequent crossing by Sheba and her army going to the aid of Solomon, beseiged by Adonijah in the Tower of David; and the return of the Queen and her little son to her kingdom after the child's visit to Solomon.

The preparation for the making of these scenes was like the moving of a great caravan over the desert. The sand dunes on which they are filmed are at Oxnard, California, sixty-five miles from the William Fox West Coast Studios. To this point there had to be transported 600 persons, 300 horses, 14 camels, 31 chariots and some 150 tents—including Arabian tents, wardrobe and dressing room tents, and sleeping tents for about 300 persons.

New General Mgr. for Cosmopolitan Plant

COSMOPOLITAN PRODUCTIONS announces the appointment of George B. VanCleve as general manager. Mr. VanCleve comes to Cosmopolitan Productions extremely well equipped with ability and experience to supervise the activities at the International Film Studios, New York City. He has a wide circle of friends among prominent men and women, and a thorough grasp of the conditions prevailing in the motion picture industry.

The new general manager has a reputation for organization and efficiency and he plans to demonstrate at the International Studios that motion picture productions can be conducted with all the smoothness and precision of any other big business.

Select Virginia Faire for Kipling Cast

Pathe has announced the selection of Virginia Browne Faire for the heroine role of Ameera in Rudyard Kipling's "Without Benefit of Clergy." It is explained that fifteen capable young picture actresses upon invitation, submitted themselves at the Brunton Studios to a series of tests in competition for the Kipling feature engagement. Each of these in turn was costumed and made up for the dusky and pathetic figure of the little Hindu maiden and required to act several scenes of varying emotional intensity in sets ready for the actual "shooting" of the picture.

Beban Picture Is Well Received in Chicago

Robertson-Cole reports that the new Tivoli theatre, Chicago, very recently opened by Balaban and Katz, has been packed during the past week by audiences which flocked to see "One Man in a Million," the George Beban production, which is being distributed by Robertson-Cole, and in connection with which Mr. Beban is making personal appearances.

In Chicago as in the other cities where he has appeared, Mr. Beban has been welcomed by city officials, and has been invited to appear before political, civic and social betterment clubs, and to deliver the talks which he has been making as to present day phases of picture production. Robertson-Cole is very rapidly booking "One Man in a Million," the Beban picture, which is now being shown in first run theatres in all territories.

Metro Selects Vehicle for Bert Lytell

"A Trip to Paradise," from the international stage success, "Lillian," by the noted Hungarian playwright, Franz Molnar, has been acquired by Metro Pictures Corporation for Bert Lytell's next starring picture to follow the completion of "The Man Who," a Maxwell Karger production.

This famous play from the author of "The Devil" is being written for the screen by June Mathis, who adapted the Metro million-dollar production of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." Miss Mathis is using the English translation by Benjamin F. Glazer who has a number of stage offerings of his own to his credit.

Jeanie MacPherson en Route to Europe

Jeanie Macpherson, famous author and scenarist of Cecil B. De Mille's special productions for Paramount, arrived in New York this week en route to England and the Continent. Miss Macpherson, who is accompanied by her mother, calls the trip a vacation—her first in several years—but, according to her own statements, it would seem that she is planning to combine a little rest with a lot of solid work.

"Then I am going to fly. I have been flying here for the past two years, but there is a famous aviation school in England that leads the world.

DeMille's Accurate Production

Unusual Care for Detail in "Affairs of Anatol"

IN announcing the forthcoming release of "The Affairs of Anatol" Cecil B. De Mille's all-star production, Paramount gives what it claims to be a valid reason for the invariable satisfaction that is expressed by public and critics alike in the photoplays that are produced by Mr. De Mille.

This, Paramount says, is their unsurpassed accuracy in all details of the work and art employed in their making. The personality of the producer and director is bound to show through and there is possibly no one in the profession who gives greater care to the minor details as well as the major problems of a picture.

Cecil B. De Mille possesses, for one thing, a remarkable memory for names and faces, the Paramount statement says. It is not at all unusual to hear him call for someone while directing a big ensemble scene for one of his pictures, using his name when possibly he had met him but once and when in all probability, the person was merely an extra in an inconspicuous part.

Moreover, in every detail he exhibits a knowledge that is profound. He knows the camera thoroughly, understands the principles of lighting, composition and so on. His dramatic instinct is superb and in all matters of make-up, gesture and technique he is entirely at home. True, he does not make the mistake of trying to attend to the details himself, having a competent and efficient staff to take care of these, but he does know what has to be done and never fails to note an oversight or omission.

"The Affairs of Anatol," which was written by Jeanie Macpherson and suggested by the play by Arthur Schnitzler, was exceptionally complicated since it was divided into several episodes, each introducing certain important new characters. The scenes were varied in character and the utmost finesse was required to "get over" the action in a forceful and telling fashion. The beauty of the settings designed by the famous Paul Iribe, French artist and decorator, served as an admirable background for the incidents of the story, while a dozen well known people, most of them stars in their own right, played the principal roles. Minor parts were taken by competent players and it is declared that never in the history of the screen has a more brilliant undertaking been successfully accomplished. It took a general to handle this great task skilfully and Cecil B. De Mille has all the qualifications for a general.

His assistant directors in the picture were C. B. Tate, Ann Bauchens and W. H. Henry. Alvin Wyckoff and Karl Struss were the cameramen.

The principals in the picture were Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson, Elliott Dexter, Wanda Hawley, Monte Blue, Bebe Daniels, Theodore Roberts, Agnes Ayres, Theodore Kosloff, Polly Moran, Raymond Hatton and Julia Faye. In addition may be noted such sterling players as Charles Ogle, Winter Hall, Guy Oliver, Ruth Miller, Lucien Littlefield, Shannon Day, Zelma Maja, William Boyd, Maud Wayne, Fred Huntley and Alma Bennett.

Two striking figures appearing in one big scene were Elinor Glyn and Lady Parker, wife of Sir Gilbert Parker. Both the latter and Mme. Glyn are writing for Paramount Pictures.

The picture in the making attracted world-wide attention and now that it is to be released, an expectant audience awaits it in the four quarters of the globe. That it will mark a new epoch in picture production is the confident belief, and certainly it will be rich in entertainment and supply the last word in beauty of investiture and perfection of cast.

New Barker Production Soon

A scene from "Wet Gold," a J. E. Williamson production distributed by Goldwyn

GOLDWYN announces for early release the latest Reginald Barker Production, "Snowblind," the picturized version of Katherine Newlin Burt's new novel now running serially in a popular magazine. This is regarded as one of Goldwyn's most important spring releases. Of equal interest is the release of the new Will Rogers comedy, "An Unwilling Hero," adapted from an O. Henry story, and of the new J. E. Williamson production, "Wet Gold," made by the Submarine Film Corporation.

"Snowblind" is the second story by Mrs. Burt which Reginald Barker has picturized for Goldwyn, the first having been "The Branding Iron," one of the biggest of the box office attractions made by Goldwyn in its fourth year product. "Snowblind" is totally different in story from "The Branding Iron," its action taking place in Canada's great Northwest, but it possesses the same tense drama, true character drawing, fertility of invention and ability to tell a story in a series of pictures. The cast is headed by Russell Simpson with Cullen Landis, Pauline Starke and Mary Alden in the other important roles.

The new Will Rogers starring vehicle is said to give that popular star one of his best roles. It is another tramp impersonation, but totally different in character and in mood from his "Jubilo." The screen title of the forthcoming Rogers release is "An Unwilling Hero," and it was based upon a popular O. Henry short story, "Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking." Clarence Badger directed. Chief in Rogers' support are Mollie Malone, John Bowers, Darrel Foss, Nick Cogley and Ed Kimball "Wet Gold" is a Jules Verne type of sea picture, written by J. E. Williamson and superintended by him in every detail with the assistance of Ralph Ince as director and player of the principal role, and a noteworthy cast including Charles McNaughton, John Butler, Charles McGrane, Aleene Burr and others. Much of the action takes place below the surface in a submarine and on the floor of the ocean.

Wm. Fox Books R-C Release

Fox Houses to Show "Mistress of Shenstone"; Big Book-Store Tie-Up

ROBERTSON-COLE'S most recent Pauline Frederick release "The Mistress of Shenstone," is getting numerous engagements as exemplified in the booking of this production over the William Fox circuit which covers greater New York. The Ridgewood, Bedford, Halsey, Audubon, Star, Folly, Jamaica, Nemo, Japanese Gardens, Comedy, Standard, 103rd Street, Academy of Music and Crotona theatres all of the Fox chain are playing "The Mistress of Shenstone" within the next few days.

The picture is based on the novel of the same name by Florence Barclay, who calls it a companion story to "The Rosary." Many thousands of copies of the story have been sold. A big book-store tie-up has been made with the publishing firm of Grosset and Dunlap who are issuing a special motion picture edition of the widely read book. This edition contains a front cover jacket in four colors of Miss Frederick in one of the scenes of the play and also contains several illustrations made from "stills."

Miss Frederick is supported by a cast of ability headed by Roy Stewart, in the role of Jim Airth; Emmet King as Dr. Burton; Helen Wright as Mrs. O'Mara; and John Willink and Arthur Clayton in important character roles.

"Mystery Road" Is Finished

Production from Paramount London Studio Now in Cutting Room

WITH the completion of the studio scenes, following a lengthy location visit to Southern France, Paul Powell's production of "The Mystery Road" for Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., is ready for the cutting room. This is the picture which was adapted from a story by E. Phillips Oppenheim, the scenario being by Mary H. O'Connor, who was sent to England by Paramount a few months ago to write scenarios for the London producing organization.

Since returning from the Riveria the company has passed from one big studio set to another, representing interiors ranging from humble peasants' homes to the most elaborate villas and cafes in Nice and Paris. The final scenes were made in two sets which taxed the capacity of both the big studio floors, one representing the Royal suite in an exclusive and palatial hotel in the South of France and the other a large and resplendent Parisian cafe.

In the cafe set was filmed the biggest scene yet made at the London studio, the place being filled with cosmopolitan revellers and the center of the scene being occupied by an elaborate ballet. This ballet was led by Phyllis Bedells, the foremost dancer of the English stage, who was supported by the almost equally famous M. Edouard Espinosa and Jack Morrison and sixteen of John Tiller's celebrated "Palace Girls" from the Queens theatre, London.

The Tiller troupes have been famous in Europe for thirty years, and just now, in addition to the group which appeared in the picture, those known as "The Sunshine Girls" are the leading feature of the current revue at the Folies Bergeres in Paris, which has had the longest run of any revue in the history of the Parisian stage, while another group is the big feature of Fred Stone's "Tip Top" at the Globe theatre, New York.

Pioneer Requires Two-Reel Comic Series

With the acquisition of a series of two-reel comedies, which will be known as "Peeps into the Future," the Pioneer Film Corporation has added a new release to its list.

Notables at M. P. D. A. Ball

Reservations of Boxes Reported Heavy with Leading Screen Lights to Attend

THE MOTION PICTURE DIRECTORS' ASSOCIATION third annual ball, scheduled for April 2, old Room G, Hotel Astor, shows promise of being a lively affair. It is predicted that it will surprise in brilliancy and color anything of the kind ever known to New York or Los Angeles, where the largest social functions of the motion picture industry have been staged. The attendance will embrace, however, not only the most celebrated and exclusive talent of the motion picture field, but will also include many well known and popular stars of the legitimate stage, some of whom have also played in pictures as well.

Among noted screen personalities who have already reserved boxes, to date, are D. W. Griffith, Dorothy and Lillian Gish, Robert G. Vignola, Charles Giblyn, Tom Terriss, Pearl White, Sidney Olcott, J. Gordon Edwards, Owen Moore, Robert Ellis, William Farnum, George L. Sargent, Richard Stanton, George B. Seitz, William Fox, J. Searle Dawley, Charles Brabin, Pat Powers, Nicholas Power, John Zanft, Joseph W. Farnum, and orders for tickets have been coming in rapidly during the past week until the limit of 700 in attendance is within easy reach.

Associations formed for various reasons and under the auspices of many parent bodies, spring up over night, and heard of for a while, then suddenly pass into ancient history. Not so with the Motion Picture Directors' Association. It is composed of men who have accomplished great works of art, men who are among the greatest directors of the age, some of them producing for themselves. It stands for a fraternal brotherhood, that has held the association together and increased its membership until it has become an acknowledged factor in the industry, respected and standing for the best there is in motion picture direction. The New York lodge holds an annual ball, as does the coast organization. Each year the committees appointed endeavor to outdo those who had the honor in previous years. The 1921 ball shows strong evidence of winning laurels unprecedented.

"Let the Public Be Censor"

Declares Gilson Willets; "Code of Production" Sent Pathe Producers

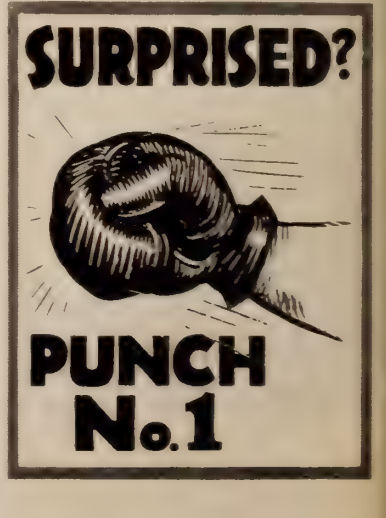
WHO is the only rightful censor of motion pictures? "The public," promptly responds Pathe, through Mr. Gilson Willets, production manager.

The question was asked in connection with "a code of production" that Pathe had lately sent out to all of the producers whose pictures it releases, Mr. Willets continued:

"Pathe has always held that view, and its pictures have always been clean because it was the evident public desire that they should be clean. Reminders to this effect have lately been sent to all producers of pictures made with a view to Pathe production. Producers, like others engaged in art creative enterprises, often are impatient about official interference on ethical grounds with their artistic endeavors. Pathe suggests that possible trouble and unnecessary expense be avoided by shutting it off at the source—the story and the working continuity. This has always been the attitude of Pathe. If any sort of regulations overstep consistent bounds, the public will be quick to feel the paralyzing effect upon its favorite form of entertainment and may be depended on to see that undesirable curbs on the producer and the writer are removed.

"The fundamentals concerned in the making of clean pictures are very plainly set forth by Pathe. Subject matter which should be entirely eliminated includes: White slave traffic, depiction of Chinese opium dens and drug addicts, and the enterprises of master criminals. Scenes showing prolonged physical struggles, strangling, and death scenes with gruesome agony details should not be pictured. Neither should scenes holding the police or other constituted authority up to ridicule, nor those ridiculing or libeling any race or sect.

"Criminal characters when they occupy the center of the stage and form the whole theme of a picture, especially when any new methods and ingenious devices are used in the commission of crime, are unquestionably objectionable and harmful as well as unnecessary. But when a bandit or a highwayman or a thug or other criminal is shown as a mere incident in a picture, and his introduction is necessary to account for the actions of principal characters, and to lead up to a dramatic climax, there seems no reason to believe that such a character should be considered objectionable."



Owen Moore at Studio after Long Illness

After a lengthy absence from the Selznick studio due to inflammatory rheumatism Owen Moore sprang a pleasant surprise upon the studio staff by paying them a visit this week preparatory to resuming work on the production of "A Divorce of Convenience," which was discontinued when Mr. Moore was taken suddenly ill.

Mr. Moore looked in good health and has almost fully recovered from his illness. He conferred with Myron Selznick and other members of the production staff and stated he would be ready to begin work on "A Divorce of Convenience" in a few days.

Exploitation Predominates in Press-Books

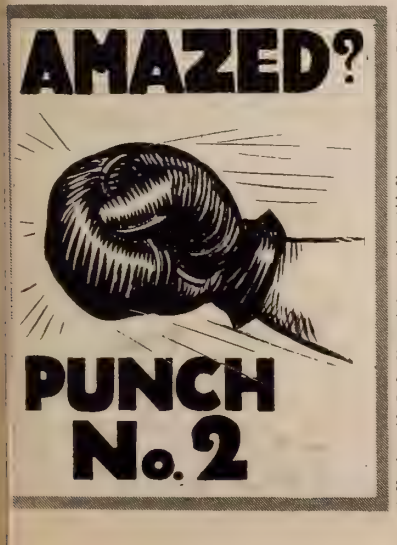
Beginning with "All Dolled Up," the Glady's Walton feature just released, Universal press sheets are to be devoted mainly to exploitation ideas and practical advertising suggestions, it is announced by Universal's exploitation department.

Universal now is extending its exploitation activities to include its five-reel feature pictures, made by stars such as Harry Carey, Edith Roberts, Frank Mayo, Gladys Walton, Carmel Myers, Eva Novak and others. The first move in this direction is a change in the form and substance of its press sheets.

Preparing for Douglas Fairbanks Picture

Word from the United States headquarters advises that preparations for Douglas Fairbank's new picture, "The Three Musketeers," are going forward rapidly. Production will begin as soon as Fairbanks returns from Mexico City where he and his wife, Mary Pickford, are at present enjoying a brief vacation. Edward Knoblock, who will direct, is at present engaged in extensive research work with Scenario Editor Lotta Woods and Kenneth Davenport, the latter of whom wrote "The Nut," assisting. Especial attention is being given to the matter of costumes to assure accuracy of detail.

The only member of the supporting cast thus far announced is George Siegmann, the character actor, who will play the role of "Porthos."



Cabanne Production Due Soon

Release of "What's A Wife Worth" Due Shortly

ROBERTSON-COLE has announced for early release the second William Christy Cabanne super-special production, "What's A Wife Worth?" which is acted by an all-star cast, and which was written and directed by Mr. Cabanne, whose first production, "The Stealers," has scored success throughout the country.

"What's A Wife Worth?" is described to be a dramatic discussion of this question, and sets before the spectator the analytical story of a man whose soul is torn between his lover for a small town girl, whom he marries and then deserts in the face of opposition on the part of his family and friends, and his duty toward a society girl with whom he is forced into a second unhappy marriage.

Mr. Cabanne in this picture has caused every movement of the players to be concentrated on the main theme of the picture, and the building up of a big dramatic situation which is brought to a telling and logical close, and during the course of which the emotions of man and wife, passing through the various phases of incompatibility, distrust, divorce, and final happiness, are probed to their depths.

"What's A Wife Worth?" is laid in the present, and the scene is a typical American city of the smaller size, where the cottages of the humble stand not far from the pretentious homes of the leading citizens, but where social lines are as distinct as they would be between Park Avenue and the East Side in New York City—giving the same opportunity for contrast and for struggle.

Ruth Rennick in "What's a Wife Worth?" a forthcoming Robertson-Cole special feature

This contrast has given Mr. Cabanne opportunity for the creation of some widely differing settings, showing the homes of the more lowly characters in "What's A Wife Worth?" as well as some of those who live according to the highest standards known in small places.

His story, beginning in the home of Rose Kendall, a girl of the people, takes its course through the aristocratic mansion of James Morrison, and finally back to the pretty little middle class cottage of James Morrison, Jr., where he finds lasting happiness with the girl who was once Rose Kendall.

The cast includes Ruth Renick, who plays the part of the girl considered by some as of an inferior social rank to the Morrison family; Casson Ferguson, who plays James Morrison, Jr., the young husband who is so sorely tried; Virginia Caldwell as a vain selfish girl, the daughter of society; Alex Francis as Morrison, Sr.; Cora Drew as Ruth's faithful old aunt, and Howard Gaye, Maxfield Standley, Lillian Langdon, and Charles Wingate in lesser roles.

The exploitation possibilities of "What's A Wife Worth?" are carefully realized in the press book on this picture which Robertson-Cole shortly will publish, and which will be the means of aiding every exhibitor who books the production to put it over with his audiences in the most effective manner possible.

Realart to Expand Coast Plant

To Increase Production Efficiency 100% is Claim

ANNOUNCEMENT of extensive construction work on Realart's Hollywood studios was recently made in Los Angeles by Morris Kohn, president of Realart, when he arrived there, on a tour of inspection.

"Business conditions in the amusement line were never better," declared Mr. Kohn. This optimistic statement he backed with the announcement that deals had been completed which will increase the production efficiency of the West Coast organization by 100 per cent and redound to the immediate benefit of Realart's Mary Miles Minter, Wanda Hawley and Bebe Daniels productions.

"We will start immediate construction of a third stage," said Mr. Kohn in announcing the expansion plans. "This stage will have an area of 7,000 square feet. We will also enclose with glass our present open stage of 10,000 square feet—more than doubling our facilities.

"Plans are under way to replace the temporary quarters of our scenario staff, general officers, art director, laboratory chiefs and production heads with a modern office building. This structure will be thoroughly up-to-date in every particular and make for the ultimate in efficiency.

"Two of the largest and most efficient portable power wagons in existence are approaching completion under the direction of Frank E. Garbuth, studio manager. These outfits, driven by three hundred horsepower marine motors, will give us two thousand amperes, sufficient to handle sixty single Klieg lamps. They will be the very last word in this sort of equipment.

"Our precision machine shop, established to make our Hollywood studios independent of eastern factories in case of breakdowns in camera equipment, I find to be functioning at top speed, giving us a fine mechanical service that places the Realart studio in a unique position. In such aids to our production department we now stand second to no one in the industry.

"We are proud of Realart's record," continued Mr. Kohn. "In a little over a year we have risen from one star, Mary Miles Minter, to six companies producing thirty-six features a year. And not only are we producing them—they are being favorably received by exhibitors everywhere, who are endorsing our policy of capable players in the best stories.

"The aim we are following is to produce clean entertainment for the whole family, and I am glad to note that the public is so heartily endorsing this, as it is evident they are, from our greatly increased business.

"The only drawback is that our rapid growth has made our initial producing quarters very small, but this will soon be overcome.

While in Los Angeles Mr. Kohn engaged in conferences with West Coast exchange and studio officials. Afternoons were given over to watching the work of the stars, Mary Miles Minter, Bebe Daniels and Wanda Hawley.

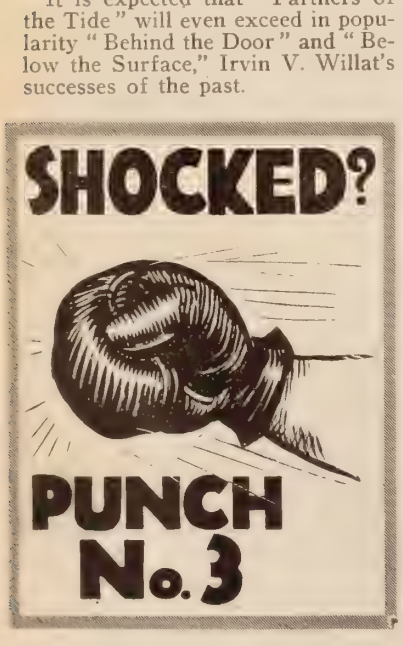
Three high class 24 sheets to be used in exploiting three Paramount productions

Hodkinson to Exploit Willat Production

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is completing arrangements now for a special exploitation and advertising campaign on Irvin V. Willat's Production "Partners of the Tide."

Officials of the company feel that in this picture they have a production which is deserving of the highest type of treatment as a result of which special exploitation representatives have been engaged to put the picture over in a big way.

It is expected that "Partners of the Tide" will even exceed in popularity "Behind the Door" and "Below the Surface," Irvin V. Willat's successes of the past.



Richard Bennett Signed by Jesse L. Lasky

FURTHER evidence of the determination of Jesse L. Lasky to enlist the foremost dramatic talent in the production of Paramount Pictures was given yesterday in the announcement that Richard Bennett, whose work in Brieux's "Damaged Goods," and Eugene O'Neill's "Beyond the Horizon" stamped him as one of America's foremost actors, had left the stage and signed a contract to study motion picture production with a view to becoming a director. Mr. Bennett has left for Hollywood, where he will go to work immediately in the Lasky studio.

Directors Chosen for Pickford Picture

Announcement was made early this week by Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists Corporation, that Mary Pickford's production of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" will be directed by Alfred E. Green and her brother Jack Pickford, who together directed "Through the Back Door," her latest picture. The preliminary work in connection with "Little Lord Fauntleroy" is progressing rapidly, according to word from the Pickford studio in Los Angeles.

Clara Beranger Story Proving Popular

One of the most important factors in the success being scored by Mae Murray in the Robert Z. Leonard production, "The Gilded Lily," and one which has been especially commended by all of the critics as well as the lay devotees of the screen, is the admirable story provided by Clara Beranger, states Paramount.

"The Gilded Lily," which was written especially for Miss Murray, is the first story furnished by Miss Beranger to Paramount under her present contract by the terms of which she is to deliver two original stories a year in addition to her scenario work.

Prepares Press Book for "See My Lawyer"

For the exploitation of "See My Lawyer," the Al Christie comedy production which is to be distributed by Robertson-Cole, and which will be released shortly, a very extensive exploitation program has been arranged. This is being embodied in the press book which Robertson-Cole is about to publish on this subject.

Moe Streimer Is Made Sales Manager

Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists announced this week the promotion of Moe Streimer to the position of sales manager of the United Artists New York Exchange, with which he has been identified for a long time.

William Hart to Enjoy a Long Vacation

THERE have been many conflicting rumors during the past year regarding what Bill Hart would do when he completed his contract with Paramount, which calls for nine special productions. It has long been rumored that the famous Western star intended to retire from the screen for good. For a champion to quit when still a champion is most unusual, and when interviewed Mr. Hart explained:

"I am going to enjoy a long vacation. For seven years I have worked every day making motion pictures. Now I want to play a while. The picture which I have just completed is my ninth and last for the present. I am now four pictures ahead of my Paramount schedule. I have no plans of any kind for the future.

"A few weeks ago I purchased a little ranch in the hills not far from Los Angeles, and I hope to enjoy many days in the outdoors with the Pinto pony and my other horses that will be pastured there. In fact, the reason I got the ranch was so that my pets would have a home.

Master Films on New Educational Contract

Having completed the first ten comedies contracted for by Educational Film Exchanges, Master Films, Inc., has started to work on the second series of twelve Torchy comedies featuring Johnny Hines, which will also be handled by Educational. According to the distributing organization, its various branches have reported an immense gain in the bookings of these two-reelers made from the stories by Sewell Ford and the prospects are that they will rank in the very forefront of fun films, from point of view of demand before the first year of distribution has been completed.

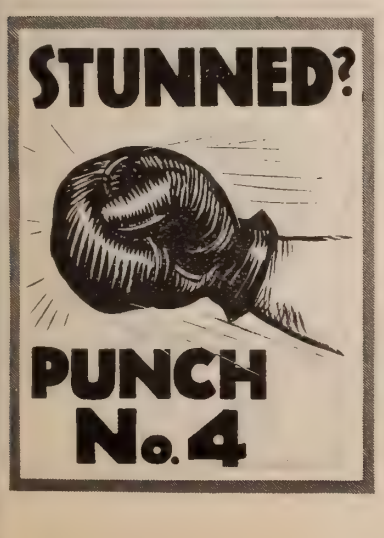
"Torchy's Big Lead," the March release, gives Torchy the opportunity, unwittingly, of foiling the plot to smuggle a quantity of aigrettes into New York. The April release has been titled "Crowning Torchy" and this affords a series of highly amusing events which follow the office boy taking gas in a dentist's chair.

The comedies which preceded these were: "Torchy Comes Through," "Torchy in High," "Torchy's Millions," "Torchy Turns Cupid," "Torchy's Double Triumph," "Torchy Mixes In" and "Torchy's Night Hood."

"Humoresque" To Be Produced on the Stage

New York newspapers of Thursday, March 10, carried the announcement that J. Hartley Manners, dramatist and theatrical producer, had purchased and would produce a play by Fannie Hurst founded upon her story, "Humoresque," which produced in picture form by Cosmopolitan and released by Paramount, has been and still is one of the biggest successes in the history of the screen. In the stage version Laurette Taylor (Mrs. Manners) will play the leading role, that of Mamma Kantor, enacted in the picture by Vera Gordon.

Following closely upon the production in Paris of a grand opera based upon Hector Turnbull's Paramount picture, "The Cheat," the announcement concerning "Humoresque" furnishes the second instance within a few weeks of the subject of a motion picture being chosen for subsequent stage presentation.



Artistic and Effective Posters for Paramount Releases

ARTISTIC 24 sheets are regarded as a powerful factor in helping the exhibitor who plays Paramount pictures to sell his bookings by poster advertising to his patrons, according to officials of Paramount Pictures, who point with pride to the posters on coming productions which have recently been prepared by the organization's poster department.

Especial emphasis is laid upon the advertising value of the 24 sheets, among the most effective of which is one for "Sentimental Tommy," which is reproduced herewith. This has received high praise because of its artistic design, harmonious blending of colors and quaint reproduction of the Scotch village, which was reconstructed in Long Island for the scenes of the picturization of Sir James Barrie's most famous novels.

Of a heavier type is the 24 sheet prepared for "O'Malley of the Mounted," William S. Hart's latest starring production. The background of western forests and the darker lines on this lithograph are more in keeping with the plot of most Hart pictures.

Quite by contrast is the 24 sheet on "The Traveling Salesman." This poster profits by the generous use of white space, the type being delicate and restricted. The only figure in this poster is the star, Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in the center of the sheet.

Unique in design is the big sheet on "King, Queen, Joker," Sydney Chaplin's first production for Paramount. Taking advantage of the title, this poster makes skilful use of the playing card design to bring out the effect.

Metro Week Proves Success

Exhibitors and Newspapers in All Sections Rendered Strong Support

WITH thousands of exhibitors showing only Metro pictures and newspapers from Coast to Coast giving pages of display advertising to the company's stars and their productions, Metro week, observed from February 28 to March 6, proved a demonstration of the national popularity of the big producing company's offerings, according to a statement just issued from the Metro headquarters.

More than seven thousand exhibitors presented to their millions of patrons, during Metro week, Nazimova productions and pictures in which were displayed such stars as Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, Alice Lake, May Allison, Buster Keaton and Jewel Carmen.

So great was the demand from exhibitors for the Metro offerings that special arrangements had to be made at the different branch exchanges to take care of the requests, declares the Metro statement. In many localities the showmen took advantage of the special Metro week to run several of the Metro pictures.

So widespread was the general satisfaction that numerous houses to meet the demand of their patrons have booked additional Metro offerings and are continuing their run of the big company's pictures, it is stated.

The hearty support given Metro Week by the newspapers is considered by Metro officials as a tribute to the efforts of the company to produce high-grade pictures for the screen.

Two views of "A Certain Rich Man," a Benj. B. Hampton production distributed by W. W. Hodkinson

Louise Lorraine Will Play in Westerns

Word comes from William Lord Wright, in charge of two-reel "westerns" at Universal City, Cal., that Louise Lorraine has been definitely signed up to support Jack Ferrin, leading man for one of Universal's "western" units.

Miss Lorraine has been seen in many Universal-Century comedies, and played leading woman for Elmo Lincoln in two Universal serials, "Elmo the Fearless" and "The Flaming Disk."

Tom Mix Finds "Hands Off" Fine Vehicle

Tom Mix is said to have an excellent vehicle in the latest picture produced for him by William Fox. This is a virile photoplay entitled "Hands Off," and it gives the dashing Mix an opportunity to mount his trusty horse Tony and ride through five reels of film narrative dedicated to speed and romance, declares William Fox. William McLeod Raine supplied the story and George E. Marshall directed. Frank Howard Clark did the scenario. Fauline Curley is the leading woman.

Torchy Comedies Not to Move to Florida

The publicity recently given to the completion of the Florida domicile of Sewall Ford, the author of the famous Torchy stories, is suggested by C. C. Burr, the producer of the Torchy Comedies, as the probable reason for the groundless rumors that he contemplates the removal of his producing activities to that State.

Torchy Comedies will continue to be produced in and about New York City, states Mr. Burr.

New Geo. Chester Story Not a Crook Story

"The Son of Wallingford" is not a crock story. George Randolph Chester, the author, who is now at the Vitagraph studios in Los Angeles, will direct the production personally. It is a story of family love and not a tale of crime and criminals. It has its moments of comedy and its spectacular and thrilling sequences, but through it all runs the vein of filial love and duty.

Three scenes which give some idea of the thrilling action in "Outside the Law," the Universal-Jewel feature, starring Priscilla Dean

Announce Priscilla Dean Film

Star Plays Dual Role in "Reputation"; a Big Cast Engaged

WORD has been received from Universal City to the effect, that Priscilla Dean's new Universal-Jewel picture is to be called "Reputation." It is from a story by Edwina Levin, and was originally called "False Colors," when published serially in Ainslee's Magazine.

It is the story of a young woman who deliberately usurps the place and steals the reputation of her mother, a great actress, while the older woman is suffering from drugs and dissipation. The mental and moral struggle which causes the daughter to relinquish her position and disappear at the height of her glory, makes one of the strongest climaxes ever filmed. In the end the daughter profits by her sacrifice.

Priscilla Dean plays both parts, the mother and the daughter. This feat is said to be one of the most difficult dual roles ever attempted on the screen. There is a difference of twenty years between the ages of the two characters, as well as the difference between a vigorous out-of-doors young woman and a woman nearing the end of a life filled with pleasure seeking, carousing and vice. Persons who watched the picture in production say that Miss Dean reached the heights of screen character portrayal in differentiating the two roles.

In the production of "Reputation," Stuart Paton, the director, inaugurated a novel method for handling his cast. The story is comprehensive in theme and divides itself naturally into several sequences. Paton selected his players by sequence, thus permitting slight alterations of the plot as the picture developed. During the production of many pictures it is found that actors suitable to certain roles in the early stages of the picture, are unsuited to the same character-roles later on.

Among the well-known screen players used by Paton in the early parts of the picture were Harry Van Meter as a theatrical "angel,"; Rex Roselli as a small town theatre manager; May Giraci, a talented child actress, as an important character in an orphan asylum, and Harry Carter.

In later sequences of the story, he used other characters, including such well known players as Niles Welsh, who is leading man for Miss Dean; William Welsh, Spottiswood Aitken, James McLaughlin, Al Garcia, Kathleen Myers, Joey McCreery, Alice H. Smith, Francois Dumas and Joe Ray.

The various characterizations called for by the dual role played by Miss Dean, include that of an unsophisticated young American girl, that of a dissipated woman, that of a European actress at the height of her success, and that of a chic Parisienne. Miss Dean is at her best as a Parisienne. Her earliest success was in such a role in "The Wildcat of Paris; a Universal-Jewel production of several seasons ago.

"Reputation" is said to include an elaborate variety of sets and gowns. One of the features of the picture is the premiere of a New York theatrical success. In the play, Miss Dean is called upon to wear gowns of the Louis XIV period of France. This sequence of scenes is said to give an unusual touch of color to the picture.

Lucien Hubbard, Universal City, put the new Dean picture in continuity form, assisted by Doris Schroeder. No release has been set as yet.

Two Paramounts March 13

Ford's London-Made Feature and "The Easy Road" to Be Released

PARAMOUNT'S schedule for March 13 is marked by the release of Hugh Ford's production, "The Call of Youth," the first of the productions of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., made at its London studio. On the 13th also is released "The Easy Road," with Thomas Meighan as its star.

"The Call of Youth" is an adaptation of "James the Fogy," a play written by the British dramatist, Henry Arthur Jones. The continuity was written by Eve Unsell, who had been sent to England by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to organize the scenario department at the British studio.

In the production of this picture it was possible to obtain scenery of the choicest character and variety in which England abounds. The cast, too, is all-British and presents names that are well known on the English stage and screen. The leading feminine role is played by Mary Glynne, who scored a triumph in England as Wendy in "Peter Pan," and other prominent players seen are Marjorie Hume. Malcolm Cherry, who appeared in the stage production of "Milestones" in this country; Ben Webster, Gertrude Sterroll, and Jack Hobbs. The photography is by Hal Young, one of the foremost American cinematographers.

"The Easy Road," in which Thomas Meighan is starred, is an adaptation by Beulah Marie Dix of Blair Hall's story, "Easy Street," which was published in Snappy Stories last August. Tom Forman directed. The story concerns a noveliest who marries a wealthy girl, moves into easy street and becomes a useless idler. His subsequent redemption, under most dramatic circumstances, forms the climax and his reunion with his first the happy denouement.

Gladys George, in the role of the young wife, plays opposite Mr. Meighan, while Lila Lee has a role of equal prominence. Grace Goodall, Arthur Carew, Lura Anson and Viora Daniel complete the cast.

Irvin Willat Screens Lincoln Novel

Irvin V. Willat, who will be remembered as the man who gave to the screen "Behind the Door" and "Below the Surface," has completed his second independent production for Hodkinson release. It is titled "Partners of the Tide" and was made from Joseph C. Lincoln's novel of the same name.

"The Other Woman" to Be Released Soon

On April 10th the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will release what has been called "the strangest story ever screened." This is J. L. Frothingham's production of "The Other Woman," Norah Davis' novel which was classed among the recent "best sellers."

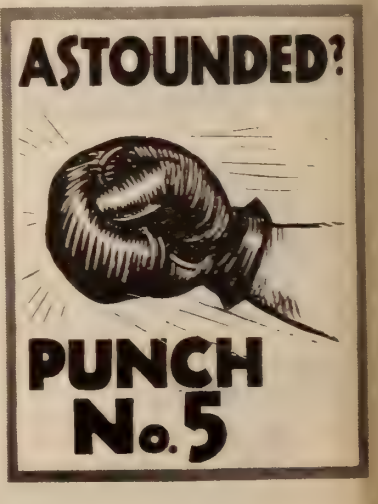
Under the direction of Edward Sloman, really remarkable results have been achieved and the picture represents a perfect example of screen entertainment of the very highest order.

The cast includes Jerome Patrick, Helen Jerome Eddy, Jane Novak, William Conklin, Kate Price, and Master Frankie Lee.

Pathe Sends Films to Coast in 18 Hours

A new record for transcontinental distribution of motion pictures, was established by the Pathe News, when its Inauguration Special was shown in all the leading theatres of the San Francisco territory, on Wednesday afternoon, March 9th, virtually five days to the minute after President Harding took his oath of office, and four days after the film left the Pathe laboratory in Jersey City.

This fast time was accomplished by the use of an aeroplane from Jersey City to Chicago, fast train from there to Wyoming, and thence by another aeroplane to Salt Lake City and San Francisco.



Views from three Pathe releases. On the left one of the thrills in "The Double Adventure" serial; in the center Ruth Roland in a scene from "The Avenging Arrow," and on the right some of the beauties in "Running Wild," a Rolin-Pathe comedy

Educational in New Contract

Signs Lloyd Hamilton and Jack White for Comedy Series

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Films Corporation of America and its distributing subsidiary, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces that he has signed a contract with Jack White and Lloyd Hamilton for the production of twelve two-reel Mermaid Comedies a year for a period of three years.

At the same time he announces a contract with Astra Film Corporation for eight two-reel comedies, featuring Jimmie Adams, which will be delivered in the next twelve months. These will also be released under the Mermaid brand name, which is owned by Educational, making a total of twenty of these comedies a year, an increase of eight over the past year.

Since the organization of Educational's exchange system Astra has been making the Mermaid Comedies for Educational, Lloyd Hamilton starring in half of them and Jimmie Adams in the other half. Jack White has supervised the production of all of them. These pictures are reported to have enjoyed the greatest popularity.

Under the new arrangement, Jimmie Adams will remain with Astra, but the contracts of Hamilton and White have expired and they decided to organize their own producing company to make pictures for Educational. Both of them are now in New York, and they will make at least one and probably other comedies in the East, starting work within a short time. According to their plans they expect to produce a higher grade of pictures than in the past because they will have greater facilities, and their long term distribution arrangement with Educational insures a permanency of booking that they have not enjoyed in the past.

Lloyd Hamilton will be the star in six of these comedies, and six others will be personally directed by Jack White with a new featured player whose name will be announced shortly. A number of players who have scored successes in the comedy field have also been placed under contract, declares Educational, and the entire roster of available material will be considered in selecting the full companies.

While he is one of the youngest of directors, Jack White has established an enviable position in his field where he is regarded as among the leaders in making the lighter productions. As a boy of fourteen he began work in 1912 as office boy at the Mack Sennett studios and gradually worked through all departments of the studio, including scenario writing and cutting until he became a director. He left there to become a director in Sunshine comedies where he originated the lion pictures, the first in which animals supplied a greater portion of the laughs. In 1919 he attracted still greater attention by his direction of "A Twilight Baby," which was released by First National.

It was in making this picture that he became closely identified with Hamilton, who was featured in it. Hamilton himself is easily one of the best known of all comedy actors. He began his career as an advance man with a circus and from that went into stock in California and later became leading man with James K. Hackett. He then had experience in vaudeville and burlesque and then became associated with the old Kalem company where he played in 134 single reel "Ham and Bud" comedies. He later joined the Sunshine Company and appeared in many of the biggest successes of this brand. When White decided to join the Astra forces Hamilton accompanied him. The Mermaid Comedies in which he has appeared are "Duck Inn," "Dynamite," "The Simp," "April Fool," "Moonshine" and "The Greenhorn." The last named completed his contract with Astra.

Other pictures which have featured Jimmie Adams and which were made under the direction of Jack White are: "A Fresh Start," "Nonsense," "High and Dry," "Holy Smoke" and "Bang." One other Jimmie Adams picture is still to be completed under the present contract with Astra.

Vignola Film Has Exhibitor Appeal

Robert G. Vignola's current special production made for Cosmopolitan and released through Paramount, "Straight Is the Way," is meeting with enthusiastic reception by exhibitors throughout the country, according to reports from the Paramount exchanges.

Released on March 6 for general distribution, "Straight Is the Way" has been "rushed" like wild-fire by exhibitors who endeavored to obtain early showings of this special because of its unusual exploitation possibilities and elements of popular appeal.

Rarely have exhibitors had the opportunity to play a production that contained so many phases of box office interest or that offered such limitless opportunities for presentation and exploitation as "Straight Is the Way." And it is because the far-seeing exhibitors have recognized the box office value of this Vignola production that a rush for bookings has been made on all the Paramount exchanges.

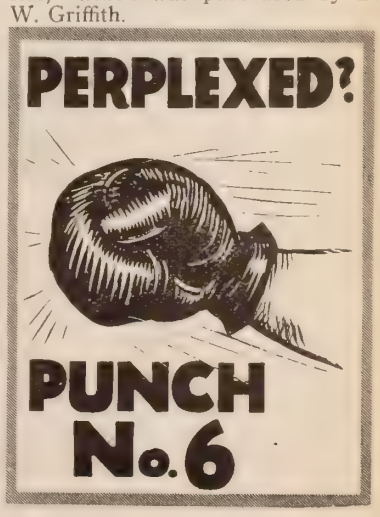
The principal elements of exploitation interest are Robert G. Vignola, who directed the picture, and who is widely known as one of the screen's most successful producers; Frances Marion, who made the scenario and who ranks second to none among screen writers, and Ethel Watts Mumford, noted novelist, wrote the story. Another point of general public interest is the cast, which includes such sterling and popular players as Matt Moore, whose performance in "The Passionate Pilgrim," another Vignola production, placed him in the forefront of screen luminaries; Galdys Leslie, George Parsons, Mabel Bert, Henry Sedley and Van Dyke Brooks.

Because of the nature of the story, which is a satirical comedy on crooks, ouija boards, and "the old homestead," there are opportunities galore for presentation spectacles, stunt exploitation and unusual advertising and publicity.

Metro Author Is Distinguished Editor

Howard E. Morton, author of "Coincidence," the new screen production shortly to be released by Metro, enjoys the distinction of being the first special newspaper correspondent to enter Mexico in 1913 and obtain an extensive interview with General Carranza, the late President of the Mexican Republic. This achievement resulted from Mr. Morton's many years' experience as a trained newspaper man, which included the city editorship of the Los Angeles Examiner.

Mr. Morton's first original writing for the screen was a scenario called "The Border Wireless," in which William S. Hart was starred. Many others followed, some of which are scheduled for imminent production, including "Hearts Desire," which was purchased by D. W. Griffith.



Unusual Airplane Views in International

Remarkable birds-eye views of the Yosemite Valley, one of America's show-places, are included in International News No. 19, just released through Universal exchanges. The pictures were made by an International News cameraman flying with Lieutenant Harold Coffee in a Walter T. Varney plane.

With no landing possible for more than a hundred miles in any direction, Lieutenant Coffee, piloted his plane into the gaping canyon and down to within 150 feet of the valley floor. The International News "shots" show this flight with startling realism, including the canyon walls towering 5,000 feet above on both sides.

Beautiful moving pictures were taken in flight of the shimmering Yosemite Falls, as the plane skimmed the canyon walls. The news reel subject also includes pictures taken while the aviator circled the celebrated Half Dome, a lofty eminence, 5,000 feet high.

Rothacker Lab. Gets Unique Film

When Stanley R. Graham, Chicago interior decorator, returned from a lengthy hunting trip in northern Mexico, he brought with him some film which created a sensation at the Rothacker Chicago laboratory, where it was developed.

According to an account from the Rothacker headquarters, one shot shows Mr. Graham climbing up a tree and lassoing a mountain lion on the topmost branches. After throwing the lasso about the lion's neck, the Chicago sportsman drops the other end of the rope to the ground and jumps from the tree. Then he deliberately pulls the lion down out of the tree. The moment the mountain lion or puma touches the ground, Mr. Graham's pack of bloodhounds pounce upon the beast and quickly kill it.

In the film the pack of dogs is shown picking up the trail of a lion. After this shot the camera was hurriedly packed on horseback and after a ride of twelve miles was set up again to film the mountain lion perched high in the tree and the dogs on guard on the ground.

Stage Favorites to Play in "Experience"

Lilyan Tashman, well known on Broadway for her characterization of Trixie in "The Gold Diggers," David Belasco's success of two years, has been selected to play the part of "Pleasure" in the George Fitzmaurice production of "Experience" for Paramount..

Robert Schable has been selected to play the part of "Conceit." The role of "Excitement," one of the most picturesque characters in the production, will be played by Sibyl Carmen, an ex-Midnight Frolic girl.

In at least one respect the picturization of "Experience" will be different from the stage version. "Prohibition," a character that does not appear in the original play, has been added to the picture. The part is the antithesis of "Intoxication" and is being played by Leslie King.

A view of "The Little Clown," a Realart picture in which Mary Miles Minter is starred

Realart Has Circus Film

New Avery Hopwood Comedy, Starring Mary Minter, Will Be Released

FEW people can withstand the call of a circus, with its clowns, bareback riders, acrobats, menagerie, sawdust ring and pink lemonade. It is something that attracts everybody, young and old. Nobody seems to tire of it—in fact the circus habit is as American as the baseball habit.

That this appeal is valuable in a picture is the belief of Realart—for it is the ever-popular circus that plays an important part in "The Little Clown," a Realart production adapted from a new Avery Hopwood comedy and announced for immediate release under the Star Franchise.

Mr. Hopwood has just achieved what is believed to be a record in having four plays, all successes, running on Broadway at the same time. It was at the height of his success, therefore, that he wrote "The Little Clown," which he personally supervised while it was being produced at Realart's Hollywood studios. The picture will be seen in advance of the stage play, the latter being scheduled for next season.

Mary Miles Minter is cast as the little clown, whose circus manners prove so upsetting to her fiance's parents. In this role she is called upon to display that combination of mischief, humor and heart appeal which her critics declare is responsible for her wide popularity.

The supporting cast includes Jack Mulhall, in the male lead; Neely Edwards, Helen Dunbar, Winter Hall, Cameron Coffey, Lucien Littlefield, Lura Anson, Wilton Taylor, Zelma Maja, and others.

The subtitles in the picture are taken from the play itself and contain the spontaneous and subtle humor for which all of Mr. Hopwood's plays are so well known.

Thomas Heffron directed the production while the camera work was done by Faxon Dean.

Carey to Star in Specials

Berman Goes to Coast to Confer With Star on New Arrangement

LATE spring probably will see Harry Carey, Universal's Western star, beginning his first big Universal-Jewel production, said Mr. Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal upon his departure for Los Angeles last week. The sales-manager went West to confer with Harry Carey concerning the star's new producing unit, and to aid in the determination of the kind of stories Carey is to produce.

Carey still has three more five-reel feature pictures to make under his former arrangement with Universal. When the last of those is completed, his name will be taken from Universal's weekly feature release program, and will appear thence-forth only super-productions. These will be classed as Harry Carey productions. Carey will have his own producing unit, it is explained, under an arrangement similar to that existing between Universal and Tod Browning and Erich von Stroheim. Kenneth McGaffey, formerly representative for Mary Pickford, will be production manager of the new unit.

Carey's most recent picture, "The Freeze Out," has just been received from the West Coast. Universal department heads who have seen it, unite in saying it is the best Carey picture since "Overland Red," and "Marked Men." It was directed by Jack Ford, who has returned to Universal City to handle the megaphone again for Carey.

Hal Roach Building New Stage at Culver City

THE activities of Hal Roach, which include the Harold Lloyd specials, are to be enlarged to include the production of serials in which Ruth Roland is starred by Pathe.

Announcement to this effect is made by Pathe, following advices from Mr. Roach that he had just completed the erection of a new stage at his Culver City plant, where Miss Roland's next serial will be made. Another addition to the studio includes a new double-deck dressing room building. The total cost of the construction work will be approximately $75,000. The next stage is 100 x 200 feet.

Ruth Roland is now in California, after more than a month spent in the East vacationing, and present plans call for her to resume work on April 15th. The next serial was written by Val Cleveland, who wrote "The Scoffers" for Allan Dwan. Most of the exteriors will be made in the Grand Canyon. W. S. Van Dyke will direct.

First Nat'l Week in Northwest Success

With one hundred and ninety theatres swelling the chorus, "First National Week," in commemoration of the first anniversary of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., went over with a bang in the Pacific Northwest.

The celebration was a complete success from every standpoint, it is stated. Four states were covered in the drive—Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. Washington led the procession with eighty theatres presenting First National attractions during the week. Oregon was a close second with seventy-six. Montana produced twenty-nine and Idaho, five.

For individual cities showing the greatest number of First National attractions, during the week, however, the palm was awarded to Oregon. The city of Portland enrolled twenty-six theatres under the banner. Seattle, Washington, was next with twenty-one. Tacoma, Washington, had ten theatres in line.

Mr. George Arliss

in "THE DEVIL"

From one exhibitor to another, from ocean to ocean, from the Northern boundary to the gulf, word has been passed of the success of "The Devil."

Here are a few of the reviews that forecasted that success:

"The big crowds at the Strand liked the picture very much. Acting of the star most favorably commented upon. . . Emphatic verdict of approval given by the public. Every performance drew an enormous and enthusiastic crowd. . . The advertising possibilities are extraordinary." —W. Stephen Bush in Billboard.

"Very artistic with Arliss superb in his screen debut. . . One of the finest portrayals ever seen. . . 'The Devil' should draw them in."—Laurence Reid in M. P. News.

"Puts Arliss' name on list of famous screen portrayals. . . Splendid direction. You can go the limit on your promises regarding the star's performance. Production generally good. Good detail, excellent photography, interiors excellent. . . . Splendidly handled."—Wid's.

"Arliss every whit as admirable in the picture as he was on the stage. . . A striking performance."—Alan Dale in N. Y. American.

"So striking and realistic that the spectator can scarcely refrain from a momentary shudder. . . Well worth seeing. It is breaking records at the Strand."—N. Y. Evening World.

"Mr. Arliss made an instantaneous hit on the screen."—N. Y. Evening Telegram.

"A notable offering. . . Mr. Arliss displays splendid skill."—N. Y. Journal.

"Will be exceedingly popular. Mr. Arliss displays amazing skill."—N. Y. Globe.

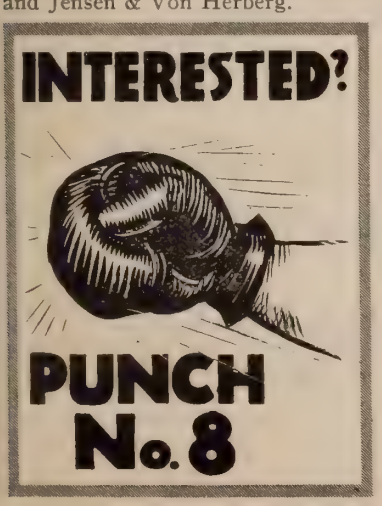
Unique Goldwyn Folio on "Earthbound"

With Basil King's story of life after death, "Earthbound," still going strong in all parts of the United States and England, Goldwyn Distributing Corp. has issued to exhibitors an unusually helpful folio under the title of "How I Made Big Money With Earthbound," and giving in detail the advertising and exploitation campaigns conducted by many of the foremost exhibitors in the country.

The folio is practical in that it presents successful "Earthbound" campaigns as they have been conducted for theatres of varying types, from the leading first run theatres, to the second run houses and chains of theatres, such as those controlled by Marcus Loew and Jensen & Von Herberg.



"Lying Lips" Breaking Records

Clever Exploitation Aids Associated Producers Film

HOW "Lying Lips," Thomas H. Ince's Associated Producers' production, is continuing its record-breaking rounds of the nation's theatres, is revealed in audits of testimonials, publicity campaigns and press reviews which are arriving daily at the "A. P." distributing headquarters in New York.

One of the latest record-establishing runs is credited to St. Louis, where "Lying Lips" played to the biggest business on record in its joint first-run presentation at the two leading Skouras theatres, the Grand Central and West End Lyric. Against an opposition playing and vigorously exploiting Chaplin's "The Kid," the new Ince special drew the major crowds during its week's triumphant run, the company reports.

Exploitation characteristic of the promotion placed behind "Lying Lips" by exhibitors everywhere accompanied the St. Louis first run engagement.

In Toledo, Ohio, "Lying Lips" was given a second successful week at H. C. Horater's big Pantheon theatre, where it was presented on a deluxe program including a prologue, mechanical effects to enhance the storm scenes, special music and other novelties staged under the personal direction of Horater.

In a wire to Thomas H. Ince at his studios in Culver City, California, "Doc" Horater praised the success of "Lying Lips" in laudatory terms—stating that the two-week run in Toledo had set a new record for box office attendance against strong competition.

In Atlanta, the engagement of "Lying Iips" at Willard Patterson's Criterion theatre was accompanied by a publicity campaign unequalled in the history of motion picture exhibition, according to a report made public by Anne Aiken, editor of the Atlanta Film Weekly.

The Patterson forces added further significance to the campaign by the use of window cards, the newspaper "extras" suggested in the press sheet on "Lying Lips," and many other practical stunts. In its deluxe presentation at the new Rivoli theatre in Baltimore, "Lying Lips" broke all previous attendance records. In Cincinnati, at McMahon and Jackson's Gifts theatre, the big spectacle is now in its fourth week, establishing picture history as the first production ever to run more than two weeks in Cincy.

In Kansas City, at Frank Newman's theatre, "Lying Lips" completed its first week with unprecedented box office results, according to information wired by Milton Feld, manager of the house.

The prologue, "Women of the Ages," written by Joseph Franklin Poland of the Ince studios scenario staff, was presented under the able direction of Milton Feld, who also arranged an elaborate program of music, effects and novelty presentations. The coming of "Lying Lips" was announced in full page advertisements in the Newman theatre program several weeks in advance. Tieups with the Kansas City newspapers, a public endorsement of the picture by a prominent women's organization, the attendance at a special showing of naval officers, and several striking feature press articles, augmented the splendid campaign inaugurated by Newman's.

In its New York premiere at the Capitol theatre, "Lying Lips" opened, on Sunday, March 6th, to one of the largest, most brilliant attendances in the history of Broadway's mammoth playhouse. Remarkable presentation created and staged under the personal direction of S. L. Rothapfel marked the New York premiere of "Lying Lips," which continued its overwhelming patronage throughout the Capitol run. The publicity department of the Capitol theatre, under the direction of Bessie Mack, gave "Lying Lips" one of the most complete exploitation campaigns of the year, placing art-studies of Florence Vidor in several rotogravure sections of New York newspapers, as well as an unusual amount of feature publicity, in advance and current with presentation. The appearance in New York of Florence Vidor, who came from the Coast to attend the premiere at the Capitol, resulted in many feature interviews in the press.

The Liberty Loan drive was vividly recalled in a spectacular "stunt" which caught the eager eye of Gothamites. A big truck on which was mounted a projection machine, five by seven screen, generator and all necessary equipment for the projection of film, was motored about the main thoroughfares of New York on three nights of the engagement. The trailer issued for "Lying Lips," said to be a most convincing selling inducement, was thrown on the screen attached to the truck, in full view of all pedestrians. The truck, with suitable cards and banners announcing the engagement at the Capitol, moved with traffic—by force of the law, rather than will, for traffic was blocked and all eyes were peeled on "Lying Lips" when the truck halted at Times Square and several burly cops shouted the order to "move on."

Ass'd Exhibs in Franchise Plan

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS, INC., announces that it has decided to inaugurate immediately the franchise plan adopted upon the reorganization of the company. The entire plan has been formulated upon the advice and experience of the scores of exhibitors who were consulted in its preparation, and many of the principal key centers have been, or will be in the next two or three weeks conditionally closed, states the announcement.

"The Associated launches its franchise plan with a substantial amount of product released and contracted for, with a thoroughly trained sales force, with complete contractual arrangements for physical distribution through Pathe, and with strong exhibitor representation and a powerful personnel in its officers and Boards and Committee," declares the statement from the Associated Exhibitors' headquarters. Exhibitor influence is assured with Samuel Harding, of Kansas City, as the president, and Paul Gusdanovic of Cleveland, as vice president—two men thoroughly understanding the exhibiting field—in important offices.

The initial release under the reorganization regime will be the Harold Lloyd Comedy "Now or Never," the first of the Associated series of Lloyd comedies, and this, with the early Associated releases and the product assured, has stimulated to an intense degree the demand for the immediate release of franchise contracts, it is declared.

Twenty to thirty big special productions of a standard in keeping with George Arliss in "The Devil" will be available, it is stated, for franchise holders in the first year. The four special productions featuring Mae Murray and directed by Robert Leonard already announced, are mentioned as an indication of the big things the concern will have.

Following the announced policy of Associated in favor of the independent producer and the independent exhibitor, the Harold Lloyd comedies and the feature product of the company will find its way to the open market. In the great volume of messages received at the home office of Associated in the last few days exhibitors have expressed appreciation of the independent support pledged by Associated, but they have emphasized the necessity of being protected through franchise on the Lloyd and other product and have urged immediate closing of contracts to that effect.

It is stated that the new Associated Exhibitor franchise arrangements are liberal ones. Every exhibitor has full voting power and in this manner participates in the selection of officers, the determination of policy and the selection of product, it is explained. The Advisory Committee is made up of eleven members, all to be exhibitors. The exhibitors have equal representation on the executive committee and on the board of directors, with the power of decision resting in the hands of Mr. Arthur S. Kane, who is chairman of both bodies.

The Associated Franchise is the result of exhibitor advice and suggestion gained in a year of investigation by Phil L. Ryan of Associated Exhibitors. Mr. Ryan has covered the United States in his conferences with leading theatre owners and the result of these discussions finds every favorable idea in the Associated Franchise.

British Isle's Rights on "The Kid" Sold

The rights for the United Kingdom on the six-reel Charles Chaplin special feature comedy, "The Kid," have been the object of spirited bidding ever since William Vogel Productions, Inc., announced its foreign marketing plans on this remarkable First National production. On March 8th, however, Hyman Winik, representing the Western Import Company concluded the deal with Mr. Vogel whereby he secured the exclusive exhibition rights for the British Isles. Early May will probably see the release of the feature in England.

Say "Avenging Arrow" Will Break Record

As the release date, March 13th, of Ruth Roland's new Pathe serial, "The Avenging Arrow," is reached all indications point to the fact that it will be a record breaker among serials, according to a statement from Pathe officials. To date, "Ruth of the Rockies," also starring Miss Roland, has outstripped all Pathe chapter plays, and "The Avenging Arrow" even before the release date, indicated it would surpass even "Ruth of the Rockies." "Daredevil Jack," starring Jack Dempsey, vied with "Ruth of the Rockies" for popularity, but Pathe's serial queen has proven to have no equal as a drawing card in the serial field.

Books All of Hodkinson Releases for 1921

A letter received by W. W. Hodkinson from Le Motto Smith, president and general manager of the Smith Amusement Company, which operates the Columbia theatre and Ideal theatre, in Alliance, Ohio, and the Strand theatre, in Sebring, Ohio, reads in part as follows:

"Have just bought from your Mr. Ochs, of the Cleveland office, all of your features for 1921 released under your 'New Year's Plan,' which looks to me to be one of the best bets of the season."

To Represent Universal in South America

MR. GEORGE E. KANN, export manager for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has just announced the engagement of Dan B. Lederman, well known film executive and for many years with Universal, for an important post in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Mr. Lederman, accompanied by his wife, sailed for the South American port last week.

Mr. Lederman's headquarters will be in Rio de Janeiro, although he will spend a considerable part of his time visiting the various Universal agencies throughout the Southern republic.

"Universal is sending Mr. Lederman to South America in line with its policy that American commercial interests should be represented in foreign field by high class business men," said Mr. Kann, discussing the new addition to Universal's South American force.

Fred Niblo to Direct "Three Musketeers"

Fred Niblo will direct Douglas Fairbanks in "The Three Musketeers." This information came in a telegram received by Hiram Abrams of the United Artists, this week, from the Fairbanks studio in Los Angeles.

Although it had been reported from various sources that Mr. Niblo was scheduled to direct this epic picture, no information was ever issued by either United Artists or Mr. Niblo.

New Rolin Comedy Set for March 27th

"Fellow Romans," the next Rolin Comedy which Pathe will release March 27th, is described as being a glorious burlesque and travesty on Shakespearian characters. "Snub" Pollard, as the property man, is the featured comedian, and Marie Mosquini is a member of the chorus who rises suddenly to stellar roles.

Arvid Gillstrom

ARVID GILLSTROM, among the better known motion picture directors, is one of the recent additions to the staff of Realart directors.

Gillstrom has started work at the Long Island studio on the next Constance Binney production, which is to be no less than a screen adaptation of Channing Pollock's well known stage success "Such a Little Queen."

Gillstrom, since his days with the Sennett organization, has held front rank among screen producers. He was later an important factor in the Fox producing organization, among other accomplishments being given much of the credit for the development of the "Lee Kids" as stellar attractions. Recently he has been active in independent production work.

Final Episode of Fox Serial Completed

Fox headquarters report that after several months of production activity on the filming of the twenty-episode serial, "Fantomas," based on the French detective stories by Marcel Allain and Pierre Souvestre, the serial has been completed.

Exhibitors, who contract for this serial, are offered plenty of exploitation aids through the medium of three press books, each of which contain material on different episodes of the big subject.

Cissy Fitzgerald Comedies in Demand

The Producers Security Corporation announce that there is a big demand for the Cissy Fitzgerald De Luxe series of two-reel comedies. The first comedy, entitled, "Cissy's Economy," was booked at the Capitol theatre in New York for the week of Sunday, March 13.

Mason Hopper Renews Goldwyn Contract

The directorial contract which E. Mason Hopper holds with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has been renewed for the period of one year.

Reconstructed Features Ready

Former Succcesses on Schedule of American Film Co.

ONE of the most serious factors in the high cost of pictures is the short life of the features which generally have been taken off the market after a few months' showing, and never heard of again. President Sam Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, believing that this waste could be eliminated in part to the advantage of both producer and exhibitor and with that end in view, is releasing a series of twelve reconstructed features, the reception of which by exchange men and exhibitors, proves that they are a welcome addition to the supply of features.

American is aiming to get away from the old objections to reissues, it is explained, by making practically new pictures out of a number of proved successes of the past few years. The pictures have been renamed, retitled throughout, cut and rearranged, so that they are 1921 pictures with the genuine atmosphere of today. Then new prints were run off so that the exhibitor showing these features gets what is really a brand new feature, declares Mr. Hutchinson.

American also is providing a new line of paper including posters, campaign books, etc., to go with the series of reconstructed features, which includes William Russell in "From The West," adapted from "The Torch Bearer"; Mary Miles Minter, in "The Virtuous Outcast," adapted from "Faith"; "The Man From Medicine Hat," directed by J. P. McGowan, famous for action pictures, adapted from "The Manager of the B. & A"; William Russell in "Quick Action," adapted from "In Bad"; which is showing in the Chicago loop this week to big crowds; "Sally Shows The Way," adapted from "Annie For Spite"; "The Moonshine Menace," adapted from "Judith of the Cumberlands," another McGowan thriller, and six others of equal merit.

Mr. Hutchinson states that the new advertising paper, etc., has been worded in such a way that neither the public or exhibitors could be misled as to the status of these pictures, and that the fact that they could be sold at a shade less than pictures made within the last few months, is an important thing for exhibitors to consider at the present time.

The first of the series now has been released and according to reports reaching the American Film Company's offices, exhibitors throughout the country are taking advantage of the opportunity to get high grade features at a reasonable cost, and that the pictures are pulling strong at box offices.

Pathe Drive Opens with Rush

Organization Roused to High Pitch Over March Campaign

A STATEMENT from Pathe's New York headquarters declares that the entire organization has been roused to a keen pitch over the prospects of breaking all records during "Brunet Month" which opened March 1st. The Pathe sales forces in each of the four competing divisions started on the opening day to make "Brunet Month" a fitting tribute to the Pathe president, who this month begins his fourth year at the head of the great distributing organization.

In his message to the thirty-two branches, relating the purposes of "Brunet Month," and of the prizes to be distributed, Director of Exchanges Elmer Pearson said:

"March marks the beginning of President Brunet's fourth year as governor of the destinies of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and the conclusion of three years of prosperity and business success, the like of which the industry provides no parallel. His fidelity to organization, his profit sharing commission and bonus plans, have prospered and developed the business ability of each and all of us to an unmeasurable extent.

"Despite chaotic financial and production conditions our fiscal year gave our producers really remarkable returns and gave us a fair profit and we thank you for the remarkable response you have given our every exhortation. Through President Brunet's constructive ability we start a new year with all chaos of cost and production wildness eliminated. Every item of our present output is at the crest of popularity.

"We have added new items that critics have resoundingly praised. January increased over December and February over January. What more propitious time could have been selected for every man and woman of our remarkable organization to throw themselves into a tremendous business drive for a Brunet Month that will put new temper into every part of our powerful machine? Start another year off with an inspiring impetus. Make of every branch under the improved possibilities a splendid profit and bonus unit. Pay a most deserved tribute to a chief who watches and takes pride in the development and success of every member of the organization in which he has such rightful proprietary love.

"March collection increases will be based upon the average of January and February. Contracts to count in the competition must carry play dates and advance payments and will be figured against a fixed quota absolutely fair to all. In determining winning branches seventy per cent consideration will be given to contracts and thirty per cent to collections. Men, you have never exerted yourself in a more laudable cause, either altruistically or selfishly, and while I know it is unnecessary to urge you further it pleases me to record myself as having every ounce of my own energy in this wonderful business revival and will expect nothing less from every co-worker. Let's go."

The response to this message is significant of what is to be expected at the termination of the month, declares the Pathe statement. In spite of the very flattering record made during the last week of February, the sales records mounted high during the first week in March, it is declared. This regardless of the fact that in previous contests, most of the branches did not begin to roll up their scores until the second week. A particularly gratifying situation from the viewpoint of the Pathe sales managers, is said to be the rush of business coming from quarters which were unsuccessful in their contention for awards during Pearson month last November.

Paul Brunet, president of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Public Is Interested in Directors

Doubt has sometimes been expressed as to the desirability of using in the presentation of pictures the names of the various people responsible for the production. It has been felt by some that the public is not interested and that credit might be given in some other way without utilizing the film for this purpose.

That the director's name is of interested is proven by the fact that Realart has received many inquiries on its latest Star Franchise picture, "The Outside Woman," featuring Wanda Hawley.

The questions concern the director, whose name has not been included in the title, although the scenarist, Douglas Bronston, and others received full credit for their work.

Chester Fire Will Not Delay Any Releases

There will not be the slightest delay in the release of either comedies or scenic pictures as the result of the recent fire in the Chester studios at Los Angeles, says an announcement from Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., which releases these pictures. Comedies for the next three months have been entirely completed and there are enough of the Chester-Outing scenics on hand to cover all bookings for many weeks to come, it is stated.

Edith Roberts Appears at Fashion Review

Edith Roberts, the Universal star, recently halted production on "The Opened Shutters," her latest picture, to appear in a fashion revue at one of the California seaside resorts.

Unbeknown to her director, William Worthington, she had promised the Venice Amusement Company to appear in person at their 1921 Fashion Revue. It is understood she had a young fortune in new furs scheduled for presentation to the public.

Nita Naldi Is Cast for "Experience" Role

Nita Naldi, who won fame with her Italian beauty in "The Passing Show of 1918" and the "Century Midnight Whirl" and as the Italian dancer in Paramount's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," has been chosen for the role of "Passion" in "experience." George V. Hobart's allegorical play which is now being picturized by Paramount.

A. J. Zellner Returns to Metro Coast Studios

Arthur J. Zellner, of Metro's New York scenario staff, has arrived in Hollywood to begin work on forthcoming productions to be made at the company's West Coast studios. Before leaving New York Mr. Zellner completed the script for Bert Lytell's latest picture, "The Man Who," from the Saturday Evening Post story of the same title, produced at Metro's New York studio.

Justine Johnstone, who stars in "The Plaything of Broadway," a Realart picture

"The Truant" Will Be Frank Mayo's Next

"The Truant," a strong screen story of the Kentucky mountains, has been started at Universal City as a starring vehicle for Frank Mayo. The popular star appears as a brilliant young physician whose mind had drifted across the borderland of amnesia as the result of his exhaustive research into a serum for the cure of blood poisoning. The story was originally written by Mann Page and Izola Forrester and was interpreted for the screen by Lucien Hubbard, scenario editor at Universal City.

Mayo is to be supported by Lillian Rich, Mary Philbin, Frank Hollard, Verne Winter, Bert Sprotte, Ray Ripley, Joe Winthrop and Helen Gilmore and others.

Rolin Plans Big Things for Boland Comedies

One-reel comedies featuring Eddie Boland, and produced by the Rolin Film Company, will replace the Vanity Fair Girl Comedies on the Pathe schedule. In making this announcement, Pathe states that Hal Roach, producer of the Rolin comedies, has made elaborate plans for making the Boland subjects the equal of those featuring "Snub" Pollard, with "Sunshine Sammy" and Marie Mosquini.

Hudson Bay Travel Reel on Strand Program

"Hides—And Go Seek," one of the series of four Hudson's Bay Travel Series, produced and released by Educational, occupies an important place on the program at the Strand theatre, New York, along with Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid." On account of the fact that the six reels of the feature are almost entirely comedy, no other fun film is used on the bill, the other pictures being confined to news events.

Elsie Ferguson to Star in "Footlights"

After an absence of a year and a half, Elsie Ferguson has returned to Paramount's Eastern studio to make her latest picture, "Footlights," a story of the stage by Rita Weiman. Miss Ferguson just recently completed the picturization of "Sacred and Profane Love" at the Lasky studio in California. It was in this play that she made her last stage appearance in New York in 1919 before going on a world tour. John S. Robertson will direct Miss Ferguson in this picture.

Rothacker Opens Office in Akron, Ohio

Another branch of the Rothacker Industrial Division has been established at Akron, Ohio. The Ohio branch is in charge of Edwin S. Babcox. Mr. Babcox is a publisher and advertising man of long experience, and will continue his connection with the India Rubber Review and also the Akron Advertising Agency.

Arbuckle Has Finished "Crazy to Marry"

Roscoe Arbuckle has completed "Crazy to Marry," the Paramount picture which was adapted by Walter Woods from Frank Condon's story, "Three Miles Out," and will rest a few days from his strenuous activities before starting on his next feature.

The picture is called "Hooters and Honkers" and comprises intimate glimpses of the home life of the American Sage Grouse and the Canada Wild Geese. Accompanying the Finley picture is a cartoon burlesque on a "movie" melodrama.

On and after April 1st, it is announced, Katherine Hilliker is to title the Goldwyn-Bray Pictographs and Jack Eaton, in charge of the promotion and sales of short subjects for Goldwyn, will edit them. Another noteworthy change is that the pictographs will be made up on only one subject instead of two or three briefs as in the past. They will continue in their present length.

Final "Velvet Fingers" Episode Due Soon

Suspense and fast action leads "Velvet Fingers," the Pathe serial starring George B. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot, to the closing chapter, "Out of the Web," which will be released by Pathe, March 13th. "Out of the Web" contains as many, if not more, thrilling moments as any of its predecessors and winds up the love story with a pretty finish.

THE LAST WORD!!

This is our final message in the campaign—our last words urging exhibitors to protect themselves in the matter of the public performance, for profit, of copyrighted musical compositions, the performing rights of which are controlled by this Society. Hereafter the law will be invoked to protect our rights. We want you to have every opportunity to inform yourselves; we do not ask you to pay the tax or become a licensee privileged to publicly perform everything in music. We do insist, however, that you do not play publicly, for profit, compositions which we control unless you do hold a license. Know your rights, as we know ours; protect yours, and respect ours.

THERE ARE SOME

of course, that only the expense and inconvenience of litigation, with a fine in a Federal Court, will convince. Those we are prepared to convince in that manner. We entered this campaign solely to clear ourselves of any possible accusation in the future that we had not given everyone concerned a full, fair and complete opportunity to inform himself.

FROM NOW ON

our agents will be in the field; they will secure evidence of violations of the law in this matter, and in each case we will bring an action in the Federal Courts. We shall regret the necessity of filing these actions, and the penalties that the law will impose upon the violators, and to avoid this, both for you and us, we ask you to stay

WITHIN THE LAW

If, in your opinion, your patrons do not want to hear the late music, the "hit" music, play the non-copyrights, the "tax free" music, and we will all stay good friends. And, if you want any information concerning licenses, or the law, ask our nearest office, your own lawyer, or our general office in New York City.

Rex Ingram Directed "Four Horsemen"

Rex Ingram, who jumps to immortal fame in directing so great a picture as "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"

RESPONSIBILITY for the herculean task of directing Metro's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," probably the most ambitious screen production ever attempted, rested upon the shoulders of Rex Ingram, most youthful of Metro's directorial staff, who was selected to translate the famous novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez into the language of the screen.

Rex Ingram is one of the youngest directors in the motion picture industry. He has just passed his twenty-seventh birthday. He was born in Dublin, Ireland. His father was a clergyman and also a lecturer in the Dublin University.

Mr. Ingram received his early education, and also attained considerable reputation as a rugby player at the St. Columba's and Trinity Colleges, Dublin. At the age of seventeen, he came to the United States and took up the study of art at the Art Students League in New York. He later studied modelling under the famous Lawrie. Numerous of his sketches were accepted by British and American publications. In 1911 he entered Yale University.

It was as an actor with the old Vitagraph and Edison companies that he entered pictures. Later, he became associated with J. Gordon Edwards of the Fox Company and prepared a number of scenarios and assisted Mr. Edwards in the direction of several successful productions.

The first picture Mr. Ingram directed was for Universal in the East. It was "Broken Fetters" and was the first Bluebird production released. Mr. Ingram then came out to the West Coast and directed Cleo Madison in "The Chalice of Sorrow," one of his original stories. Among others he directed are "Black Orchids," "The Reward of the Faithless," "The Pulse of Life," "The Day She Paid," and "Flower of Doom."

After leaving Universal, Mr. Ingram joined the Paralta Company and handled the megaphone for "His Robe of Honor." Immediately upon the completion of this picture, he joined the Royal Flying Corps, in which he holds a commission as Second Lieut. Upon his return he directed "Under Crimson Skies," a Jewel production.

Mr. Ingram joined the Metro directorial forces about a year ago to direct "Shore Acres," James A. Herne's famous old play. He did so well with this picture that he was selected to direct "Hearts Are Trumps," the third Drury Lane melodrama to be filmed by Metro. It was upon the completion of this picture that Mr. Ingram was assigned the task of directing "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," which is the highest compliment that could be paid to him by the Metro officials.

A human-interest story associated with the production of "The Four Horsemen" not only indicates the thoroughness with which Mr. Ingram conducted every detail of his big scenes but also demonstrates the care with which he selected his types even in the case of the "extras."

When Director Rex Ingram called the thousands of "extras" who had been given small parts in the battle scenes being filmed for Metro's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," he found among them a serious faced French girl who immediately attracted his attention. On inquiry, he learned that she was Louise Rippert, a recent arrival in Hollywood's picture colony.

"Just the type for one of the refugees before the advancing armies," said he.

So he led her out to the public square of the village constructed upon Metro's ranch-location in the Hollywood foothills and began to explain to her the requirements of the role he had selected for her.

A moment later, the girl's face paled and she turned her back upon the scene.

"I—I can't do it," she said. "I've been through exactly this thing before—in just this spot. I couldn't live through that again for worlds."

Later it was found that the girl had passed through almost identically the same scene when the Marne country was evacuated by the French civilians preliminary to the decisive battle of the war. The Rippert girl, with other members of her family, fled before the advancing Germans while her home village—an exact reproduction of which has been erected here for the purposes of the production—was under bombardment. When the siren screeched and heavy artillery lifted their terrifying voices with the reproduction of the battle, the girl not only found it impossible to work, but fled from the scene.

June Mathis Adapted "Four Horsemen"

JUNE MATHIS, who adapted "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" for the Metro all-star production, was one of the first women to enter the motion picture writing field and today is one of the best known scenarioists in the industry.

Miss. Mathis was born in Leadville, Colorado. At an early age she went on the stage and later was leading lady with Cohan and Harris Shubert's and Leiber's.

From the very start of motion pictures, Miss Mathis realized their possibilities. As a result, she never missed one of the early pictures. She not only watched them but studied them from every possible angle. While still playing on the stage, she wrote her first scenario. She took it to Metro, not any too confident, that it would be accepted. However, it was produced and Metro immediately engaged Miss Mathis as a member of its scenario department. Her first story was "The House of Tears." In a short time Miss Mathis was placed in charge of the Metro scenario department.

Among the well known screen productions for which Miss Mathis has written the script are, "Toys of Fate," "Eye for Eye," "Out of the Fog," and "The Red Lantern" all Madame Nazimova productions. She also did "Lombardi, Ltd." "The Right of Way," and "The Price of Redemption" three of Bert Lytell's greatest successes. "The Willow Tree," in which Viola Dana starred, and several other popular pictures also are credited to her facile pen.

Immediately upon the purchase of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" by Metro, Miss Mathis was assigned to the task of adapting the Vicente Blasco Ibanez novel by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation. Miss Mathis left Hollywood and went to New York to confer with the famous Spanish novelist and went over with him every detail of the story. Later, Mr. Ibanez came to the West Coast and again talked with Miss Mathis about the screen version of his book. Miss Mathis has been with Mr. Ingram constantly during the filming of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." At the studio she has always been on the "set."

Miss Mathis's association with the work of producing "The Four Horsemen" is described by herself in the following words:

"About a year ago when I started on my vacation, a copy of the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse was tucked away in my satchel. Mr. R. A. Rowland, the President of Metro Pictures Corporation, had just purchased the picture rights and assigned me to the scenario. I was ashamed at not having read the book but heavy duties as head of the Metro Scenario Department had prevented my reading anything but novels or stories deemed suitable for the screen and everyone seemed to consider the book a classic that was not likely to find its way to the celluloid. After reading it and laying out a rough synopsis of my plans of development, I had the pleasure of discussing it with Vicente Ibanez, who, to my surprise, possessed an amazing knowledge of the screen. He seemed to be greatly pleased with my ideas of transferring his thoughts to the screen and his last words to me were, 'Miss Mathis, I am not at all worried. I leave it entirely in your hands'—a gigantic task, which at times seemed to overwhelm me with the responsibility of his parting words.

"But my plans for the Four Horsemen remained in the chrysalis. Heavy departmental duties prevented my developing the scenario, before I was transferred to the New York Metro studio, to take up my duties with Maxwell Karger. I had no sooner arrived than to my surprise, Messrs. Lowe, Rowland and Karger decided that it was best to make the production in California and that I should remain with it throughout the production.

"As assistant to Mr. Karger, I had been actively connected with the film industry for several years, but to have only one production on my mind at a time and to remain with it from start to finish had never been my privilege.

"At the same time, Rex Ingram was assigned the directorship which pleased me greatly, as I had the highest regard for his artistry and ability, for we had worked together in the utmost harmony throughout two pictures at the Californian studio. That, in my opinion, is the only way to obtain results.

"The Metro have been most generous—sparing no expense to make the screen production of the "Four Horsemen" worthy of Ibanez and the greatest novel of the decade. It has been a tremendous undertaking—months of labor, but at the same time, has amply repaid us, for there is untold satisfaction in striving to make so stupendous a production. And so the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse has been filmed, with director and writer working side by side, shoulder to shoulder.

Tzigane Cynibalum Was Difficult to Find

An ocean-to-ocean search resulted in the finding of a tzigane cynibalum. This is the Persian name for a stringed instrument that recently has become popular in French tango places. One of them is used in Metro's forthcoming colossal production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

Jacques d'Auray, a French veteran of the world war, who served in an advisory capacity with Rex Ingram, director of the super production, was assigned to the task of finding not a copy, but a genuine tzigane what-you-call-it. Every musical shop in Los Angeles was visited and every big dealer in musical instruments in the country was requested by wire to find the much-needed producer of jazz melodies.

After all other avenues had been searched in vain, Mr. d'Auray discovered a clerk in a small Los Angeeles shop who recalled a customer who had sought the extra long strings required for the cynibalum. Following directions given by the clerk, the expert hunted up an old repair man who was reputed to make such strings to order. The repair man proved a real find—he furnished the name of a man living in San Pedro who owned the instrument. Two days later the latter person was found and, after long drawn out negotiations, he agreed to take his precious stringed instrument to the company's big studios in Hollywood and play it before the camera.

The cynibalum is played with sticks which, beaten upon the strings are said to produce just the swing necessary for the tango as it originally was danced. It is the only instrument known that does produced this rhythm.

Sculptor Praises Production

Edgar Walters Finds Great Artistry in "Four Horsemen"

EDGAR WALTERS, sculptor and traveler, was another artist who, having been permitted to see early showings of portions of Metro's gigantic production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," and he declared it to be one of the most remarkable pictures he ever has seen.

The famous sculptor and his bride visited Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood when production was under way and, as the guest of Director Rex Ingram, watched the filming of a portion of the allegorical episodes of the world famous novel, by Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

"It is the first time real South American gauchos, the plainsmen of the Argentine, ever have been seen on the screen and I am sure they will prove an interesting feature of the production," said Mr. Walters. "The Parisian scenes are the most convincing I ever have seen. It is almost unbelievable that they were reproduced right here in California.

"Not only is the action good and the construction of 'sets' remarkable, but the grouping of figures is more artistic than anything ever before put on the screen. I would have known that this picture was directed by a sculptor even if I never had met Mr. Ingram. It is remarkable to see the results that can be obtained by making use of the art training of a sculptor or painter in the production of pictures."

A view of one of the early sequences in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"

The gripping love theme that runs through every phase of the great Ibanez story was the subject of comment on the part of the sculptor, as has been the case whenever visitors at the studio were permitted to see the preliminary runs of the picture.

Unlike other so-called "big" productions, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" does not depend upon a few big scenes, in which many players have been used. In this picture, there are numerous scenes in which many hundreds—in some cases thousands—of players participate.

The cast of principals in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" numbers fifty, among the leading players being Alice Terry, Rudolph Valentine, Pomeroy Cannon, Stuart Holmes, John Sainpolis, Joseph Swickart, Mabel Van Buren, Bridgetta Clark and Harry S. Northrup. In all there are 12,500 persons in the ensemble. June Mathis wrote the scenario for the "million dollar production" and John Seitz, with fourteen assistant cameramen, photographed it.

Georgia Woodthorpe in Important Role

Georgia Woodthorpe, one of the many great actresses that California has produced, was selected for an important role in the closing episode of Metro's colossal picturization of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," from the world-famous novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez. Miss Woodthorpe enacts the role of the old lodgekeeper's wife.

While the name of Georgia Woodthorpe may not mean so much to the younger theatregoing public of today, members of the passing generation recall this actress with a warm feeling of affection. It was in San Francisco at the California theatre that she made her first stage appearance as a child. At this time John McCullough was her sponsor.

For seven years Miss Woodthorpe played with the California company and during that time supported Edwin Booth and numerous other famous stage stars. At the age of seventeen, Miss Woodthorpe played Ophelia in "Hamlet" with Booth.

Miss Woodthorpe went from San Francisco to New York with Nance O'Neill. However, she remained with this well known actress only a short time, as she was engaged for the part of Narjes in the first production of "Kismet" in which Otis Skinner starred. She originated this part and played it for three years. In the film production of "Kismet," the role of Narjes was omitted, but upon discovering that Miss Woodthorpe was in Hollywood, Otis Skinner sent for her and she played another important role in the cinema production.

It is only during the past year that Miss Woodthorpe has played in pictures.

Realistic Bombardment in Metro Special

Scores of giant guns, bomb throwers and other implements of destruction were wheeled into position in the footlights outside of Hollywood, Cal., for the most terrific military bombardment ever attempted except in actual warfare.

The French village, castle and farm houses that were built during months of preparation for use in Metro's colossal picturization of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, were leveled in the scenes showing the second Battle of the Marne.

One evidence of the care that has been taken to reproduce with photographic accuracy the scene of the second Battle of the Marne, was found in the rebuilding that was ordered after a careful inspection of the structures by Rex Ingram, who is directing the Metro superproduction. It was found that three of the buildings had not been made to conform to the requirements of the plans that had been drawn by military draughtsmen from photographs and line drawings of the French battlefield. They were immediately wrecked and other buildings erected in their place to show an exact reproduction of the French houses.

Cast Was Inspired by Story

"Four Horsemen" Players Eager to Aid in Production

THAT spirit of helpfulness which impresses the reader as one of the outstanding features of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," the internationally famous novel of Vicente Blasco Ibanez, which has been transferred to the screen by Metro Pictures Corporation, had the same pronounced effect upon the big cast which took part in staging this colossal production, according to Miss June Mathis, who adapted the story to the screen.

Immediately upon completion of the elaborate picturization, Miss Mathis with Rex Ingram, who directed it, brought the first print to New York for presentation to the Metro officials. Refusing to take a well earned vacation, the famous scenario writer resolutely turned her back upon the enticements of Broadway and went busily to work in her former offices in the company's studios in West Sixty-first street as head of Metro's eastern scenario department.

"In the many productions I have prepared for the screen," said Miss Mathis, "never in all my experiences have I seen such an influence exerted upon those taking part as in the wonderful story of 'The Four Horsemen.' During the months that big cast was together working upon the numerous scenes they developed a spirit of camaraderie and helpfulness that was simply marvelous. It really appeared to be almost a hypnotic influence for helpfulness that the atmosphere of the story created. Even when they were not working on a scene they would come around anxious to help in any way possible.

"When I came back to New York I had a number of letters from members of the cast asking if there was not something they could do and from some who are in town I received personal calls and phone messages, all with the same idea of helpfulness they exhibited during the trying months of making the wonderful picture.

"I felt just like those lovers of horses who haunt the paddock watching their horses all the time until they enter the race. That is the way that the entire company felt about their 'Four Horsemen'—the spirit of the story imbued all those who had a hand in translating it to the screen."

The Meaning of "Apocalypse"

Metro Explains Meaning of Biblical Word

WHAT is the significance of the word "Apocalypse?"

The question was propounded so often in connection with Metro's extra special De Luxe production of the world famous novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, that Webster was called upon to answer it.

Webster's definition of the word is "a revelation; a disclosure." In the early Greek version of the Bible, the last book of the New Testament was called "The Apocalypse of St. John." In the later versions of the Bible, the book became the "Revelations," familiar to all present-day students of the book.

Pronunciation of the word, which also is shown by numerous correspondents of Metro's as an all but unsurmountable stumbling block, has been solved by Webster by placing the emphasis on the second syllable.

Visualizing the symbolic figures of "The Four Horsemen" which has baffled some of the world's greatest painters, finally has been accomplished for the colossal Metro production in a manner that ought to prove satisfactory to the most exacting. Probably the most interesting visualization of the "Horsemen" was found in Albrecht Durer's original set of wood etchings, done in the year 1511. The drawings, pictured during the age of religious zealots, were borrowed from their present owner who insisted that he personally act as their custodian during the weeks that they were used at Metro's West Coast studios as reference works.

The original wood cuts, upon which art connoisseurs have refused to set a price, form but a small feature of a collection of art treasures that are seen in the production. The total value set by insurance appraisers upon the tapestries, paintings and other borrowed art works was $450,000. It was generally agreed, however, that they could not be purchased at this, or any other price.

In its original book form "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" has passed its 165th edition, having been read in every quarter of the civilized world. In its translation by Metro to the screen the epochal story was visualized by a cast of 12,500 persons, of whom there are two dozen principals. These included Alice Terry, Rudolph Valentino, Pomeroy Cannon, Edward Connelly, Mabel Van Buren and John Sainpolis.

Director Faced Stern Task

When it comes to economy of sleep Thomas Edison has nothing on Rex Ingram.

During the filming of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," which extended over a period of more than six months, Mr. Ingram spent more time at the studio than at home. On many occasions he worked for eighteen and twenty hours without a halt. During the filming of the war episodes there were many times he worked at the studio all night.

It was only on rare occasions that the director got away from the studio before eight o'clock in the morning.

Ingram and Mathis as "Extras" in Scenes

Carefully tucked away in one of the least important scenes of Metro's colossal production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," motion-picture fans can find the two persons who are chiefly responsible for the artistic translation to the screen of the sensational novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

For Miss June Mathis, well known to picture patrons as one of the foremost writers of the screen, spent five minutes acting before the camera, and Rex Ingram, who is directing the production, took an even less prominent role in the same scene.

While one of the minor scenes was being filmed on the grounds of Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Director Ingram attempted to show a girl who was appearing as an "extra" just how the swagger of a French demoiselle should be done. Noting his difficulty, Miss Mathis offered to show just how it should be accomplished in order to get the desired effect.

"Here, Miss Mathis," suddenly interrupted Mr. Ingram, "you do that so well, why not take the part yourself and appear in the scene with the camera grinding?'

After many protestations on her part, the famous scenario writer finally consented and donned the required make-up.

Mr. Ingram then attempted to show an "extra" man the proper way to appear as a typical French street lounger.

Miss Mathis, seeing Mr. Ingram busily engaged in rehearsing the man, was quick to seize the opportunity to "get even."

"Mr. Ingram," she called to him, "since you do that particular thing so well, why don't you take the part and act it in the picture?"

So it was that both the director and author of the scenario did their "bit" as "extras."

Cast Has Men Who Saw Combat Service

Mobilization of the biggest army ever organized for motion picture purposes was rushed in Hollywood, Calif., for the Metro's colossal production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez. This army differed from others that have been used in mimic battles for the screen in that officers and privates enlisted in it saw service abroad.

"We will be enabled to put on a more authentic reproduction of the second Battle of the Marne than ever before has been attempted in battle pictures," said Rex Ingram, when directing the gigantic filmization of the Ibanez novel. "The reason is that we will use service men exclusively—and some of these will be men who actually participated in the battle that proved the turning point of the war."

Splendid Cast in Picture

Some of Screen's Best Known Artists in "The Four Horsemen"

PROBABLY the strongest and most distinguished cast ever assembled for any picture in the history of the screen is seen in Metro's extra special de luxe production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," from the world-famous novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

While every player of the twenty-five principal roles was selected because of his or her special ability to enact the part, there is scarcely a name in the list that is not prominently known to motion-picture followers.

Rudolph Valentino has the role of Julio, the romantic South American hero of the story. Mr. Valentino has been in pictures for several years, having played in "The Big Little Princess" and "The Delicious Little Devil" with Mae Murray, "Eyes of Youth" with Clara Kimball Young, and "Man, Woman and Marriage" with Dorothy Phillips. Previous to going into pictures, Mr. Valentino was a professional dancer.

Alice Terry enacts the leading feminine role, that of Marguerite, the little French girl. Miss Terry has come into prominence during the past year. She played in the Metro production of "Shore Acres," featuring Alice Lake, and later had the leading role in "Hearts Are Trumps," the spectacular melodrama by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton. Previous to this, Miss Terry played a number of smaller parts with the various producing companies.

Joseph Swickard, a veteran of twenty-five years on the American speaking stage and ten years in motion pictures, is seen in the part of Marcelo Desnoyers.

Edward Connelly, best known of veteran Metro character actors, has the difficult role of the old lodge-keeper. Mabel Van Buren was selected for the part of Elena, a German character role in which she does praiseworthy work. Nigel de Bruiler takes one of the most difficult character parts in the production. It is the role of Tchernoff, the old Russian, who relates the legend of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

Virginia Warwick, a former Mack Sennett bathing beauty, has the role of Chichi, the sister of Julio. Stuart Holmes and Wallace Beery, known to all film fans as the most convincing of screen villains, have the roles as bad men in this production. Jean Hersholt also has an important character role as Professor Von Hartrott.

Brodwitch Turner, better known as "Smoke," plays the part of Argensola, the companion of Julio in this picture. Bridgetta Clark is seen in the role of Dona Luisa, the mother of Julio. Alan Hale is another prominent actor who appears in this production. Mr. Hale has the part of Karl von Hartrott, a very radical German characterization.

Pomeroy Cannon, as Madariaga, "The Centaur," the father of Julio and the owner of the South American plantations, plays an important role in the early part of the story. John Sainpolis also has an important role in the production, as have Harry S. Northrop, Derrick Ghent, Henry Klas, Jacques d'Auray, Curt Rehfeld, Mdlle. Dolorez, Isabel Keith, Jacques Lanoe, Mark Fenton and Minnehaha.

"Fool-Proof" Battle Scene

Metro Reproduces Marne Battle Realistically But With Safety

NO general ever worked out his strategy for a decisive battle with greater care than that bestowed upon the plans for the motion picture reproduction of the second Battle of the Marne, which was filmed as a feature of Metro's colossal production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

Although many thousands of men take part in an engagement that, to all appearances, is as deadly as the one that proved the turning point of the world war, the present arrangements were such as to make serious accident almost impossible.

For many weeks Walter Grams, chief at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Cal., and a large force of assistants worked on this system and it was pronounced fool proof.

Above all other things, Rex Ingram, who directed the production, and June Mathis, who adapted it for the screen, were anxious to make the battle realistic. With this system, the mechanical perfection of the battle scenes was assured.

The setting for the battle consisted of a complete French village, a castle four stories high with its many turrets and towers, and a background of wooded hills. All the buildings were destroyed by mines and shell fire, just as was the case in the original battle in France.

The castle and all the buildings of the village were built so as to "breakaway" properly at the desired time. There were more than 200 "breakaways" and more than 1500 separate explosions planned to occur in the village alone. These "breakaways" were necessary to insure the falling of the buildings at the proper moment. More than 50,000 feet of copper cable were laid and sixty-two storage batteries installed about the location.

Ingram Film Inspires Sculpture Teacher

Inspired by the work of Rex Ingram, director of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," who once was his pupil in sculpture, Lee Lawrie, one of the most prominent of American sculptors, recently designed a group statue in bronze of the famous rider of the Apocalypse, as a result of his witnessing a preview of the Metro picturization of Ibanez's internationally famous novel.

Both director and sculptor have been friends for many years, their acquaintance dating from the time when Mr. Ingram was a pupil of Mr. Lawrie's in Yale University, where the latter was a teacher of sculpture.

It has been part of Mr. Ingram's method, however, in transferring the Ibanez novel to the screen, to apply much of what he learned of the art of the sculpture from Lee Lawrie to his work as motion picture director, and much of the notable excellence of the Metro production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is directly traceable to Director Ingram's study of sculpture.

Portable Power Plant for Night Scenes

The most remote desert or mountain wilds soon were made accessible for night photography as the simplest interior setting constructed on an enclosed stage, through use of a portable electric plant now under construction at Metro's West Coast studios that is said to be unique.

The completed lighting plant, mounted on a specially built motor truck and furnished with power by a 400 horse power Liberty motor, was used by the company in the taking of night scenes that once were possible only when reproduced on enclosed stages. Under this plan, however, all the realism for which art directors have striven were made possible without the construction of the makeshifts that were once believed to be essential. This portable power plant was used for the filming of the night scenes of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

Built French Village for Great Barrage

The towers of a quaint French castle reared their pinnacles over the tree tops of a great ranch near Los Angeles, while a group of little structures about its base took on the outward semblance of a village in France.

A miniature army of carpenters worked in double shifts for weeks to prepare castle and village for an equally industrious body of men that destroyed the result of their efforts. For the castle and village faced a terrible fire from the biggest guns of the wrecked military machine when the first Battle of the Marne was re-enacted for the camera.

The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse

Ibanez Pleased with Picture

Author Finds Metro's "Four Horsemen" True to Book

NOVELISTS and playwrights from time to time have been notoriously dissatisfied with the motion picture versions of their works. The old complaint has been frequently voiced: "I don't recognize my stuff at all when it gets into pictures; I can't even understand why they buy my stories if they are going to mangle them past recognition."

It is this attitude that producers—and especially their directors—have been anxious to combat. Ammunition for such combat has recently been supplied to Metro Pictures Corporation by four writers—Vicente Blasco Ibanez, Sir Gilbert Parker and Frederic and Fanny Hatton, whose most notable efforts Metro has translated or is translating to the silver sheet.

When the opening scenes in the screen version of Ibanez's novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," were screened at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Cal., the first scene stills and some sample film were immediately shipped to him in Spain for his approval or veto.

The scenes represent an Argentine port, a port that shows the pestilence of disease and vice such as W. H. Hudson painted in "Far Away and Long Ago." These scenes, rich in color and animation, were only suggested in "The Four Horsemen," but were developed by the scenarioist, Miss June Mathis, to show the beginning of Julie Desnoyers as a dancer in a rough cabaret, learning the tango and maxixe with which she was later to astonish Paris. On seeing the photographs of these scenes Ibanez wrote to Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, saying:

"I was astonished at the vivid picturing of these scenes. I indorse them without qualification. The acting, the backgrounds, the ensemble—all were superb.

"I had a suggestion of what these scenes might be in my conversations with Miss Mathis when she outlined her ideas for the picture while I was in the United States of America. And it is to Miss Mathis that the credit for them is due. It is her imagination that has created this atmosphere. It is her keen intelligence that she has seen fit to put upon the screen scenes at which I scarcely hinted. She shows herself to be a great artist. Indeed, your American women give me more cause to marvel as I consider them in retrospect in their many manifestations. And Miss Mathis seems to me to be thoroughly representative of them. I look forward to seeing the rest of her adaptation of my novel. I feel that it is with her in the best of all possible hands.

"The clearness of the photography and the excellent direction show a great advance in the art of the cinema. My hat is off to America as the leading country in the world in the newest of arts. I trust that the high artistic standard that has been set in the early scenes of 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' will be maintained throughout the picture."

The director of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" who thus drew a congratulatory bonus from the great Spanish novelist was Rex Ingram, who won his spurs with Metro by his direction of "Shore Acres," from the drama by James Herne, featuring Alice Lake. The man responsible for "the clearness of the photography" is John Seitz, and Amos Myers, technical and art director, is the man who designed "the backgrounds."

In the Argentine port scene, five hundred derelicts gathered from Pacific ports are shown. Most of them insist they have "no history," which led Miss Mathis to dub the Hollywood studios, for the present, "The Port of Missing Men." In the cabaret scenes, Rudolph Valentino, who plays Julio, does a sensational dance, winding up with a tropical kiss that endures for seventy-five feet of film.

Author Views Print Abroad

Print of "Four Horsemen" is Sent Abroad to Signor Vicente Ibanez

METRO dispatched by special messenger on the first available Atlantic liner a print of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" to the author of this internationally famous novel, by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, who was sojourning at Nice, in Southern France.

Harry Bedker, of Metro's New York exchange, took personal charge of the print, traveling by way of London, where he met Harry J. Cohen, foreign manager for Metro. The print was held in the British capital long enough for exhibition before Sir William Jury, managing director of Jury Imperial Pictures, Ltd., exclusive distributors throughout Great Britain of Metro productions.

Following the brief halt in London for the special showing Mr. Cohen and Mr. Bedker proceeded immediately to the Continent for delivery of the print of "The Four Horsemen" to Senor Ibanez.

This great Spanish writer, after his conference with June Mathis, adapter of "The Four Horsemen" and with Rex Ingram, director of the picture, at the mammoth Metro studios in Hollywood, had expressed an unusual impatience to see his master work on the screen; and out of this desire of the author, who did not expect to return to the United States before the fall, to view the completed photoplay, Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, decided to send a print directly to him at the earliest possible moment.

Art Works Employed

A collection of rare old prints, such as rivals that of any museum in the world in intrinsic worth, were made by Rex Ingram, the director, as an aid in costuming Metro's colossal picturization of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalpse," the world-famous novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

Paramount Starts New Production Abroad

Hardly had the last set of Paul Powell's "The Mystery Road" been struck at the Islington studio of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., ten days ago when the carpenters were busying themselves building those for Donald Crisp's new production of Cosmo Hamilton's "The Princess of New York."

The screen version of this novel has just been completed by Margaret Turnbull, while the locations, except those in England, were recently picked out by Mr. Crisp in Spain and Southern France.

The cast has not yet been completed, although it is announced that the title role will be played by Mary Glynne, the English actress who played the lead in both of Hugh Ford's London productions, while the leading male role will be in the hands of David Powell, who just stepped out of the corresponding part in "The Mystery Road" and who had the lead in the previous Crisp production, "Appearances."

Nazimova's Special Has Effective Scenes

NAZIMOVA'S special production of "Camille" for Metro, will be characterized by remarkable photographic work in hitherto unexplored fields, states that company.

One of the most perplexing problems solved by R. J. Bergquist, in charge of the camera work for the picture, had to do with a glass-enclosed dining room which overlooks the streets of a busy portion of Paris. The semi-circular background consists of eighteen glass panels, running from floor to ceiling, with no frames between the separate pieces of glass.

The complete set, as designed by Miss Natacha Rambova, presented a fascinating view, but offered untold difficulties to the cameraman. Each crystal shot shafts of light cameraward—a menace to satisfactory picture making, as any camera man knows.

But by the use of especially constructed devices, Bergquist found it possible to absorb the reflected light and transfer the scene to the film without a flaw. The result is a picture that will delight the eye of the seeker after beauty as well as the theatregoer who first requires the dramatic.

Although most of the settings for "Camille" are the artistic interiors required in the telling of the Dumas story, there are numerous big exterior scenes that have required carefully selected bodies of extras. Hundreds of maids and matrons of Los Angeles society circles were given an opportunity to make a single picture appearance with the filming of the famous opera scenes in which Camille meets Armand for the first time.

"Camille" is under the personal direction of Ray Smallwood, who also directed Nazimova's last four productions. The screen version of the novel is the work of June Mathis, who is best known through her work on the filmed story of Ibanez's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," which had its New York premiere Sunday at the Lyric theatre.

Story and Cast of "Four Horsemen" : ; :

MADARIAGA, the Centaur, is an enormously rich old cattle herder of Argentine. Fossessing a complex personality, which shows itself in lustful desire, fiery talk with his equals and subordinates, jealousy, hatred, sympathy and love, he is the respected and feared of the entire countryside. His great ambition is to be as rich as Croesus—to be able to look upon all sides and say to himself or to those who are willing to listen, "I am lord of all here as far as the eye can reach." Madariaga lives in quarters not in keeping with his vast wealth. He is content to be the ranchman, preferring to live out in the open, with the green beneath and the blue above.

While he has a couple of daughters, his wish has always been for a son or a grandson who might inherit his immense estates. So he gives vent to his anger when he realizes that his wealth may not pass on to a male offspring. A day comes when a young Frenchman finds employment as overseer—a man who is gifted in the knowledge of finance. Under his supervision the ranch prospers beyond the greatest expectations. He is so successful that the old Centaur takes him into the house as a member of the family. There it is that the propinquity of love asserts itself. Thrown Into constant association with Dona Luisa, Marcelo Desnoyers, for such is the Frenchman's name, is attracted to the point where he proposes marriage and is accepted.

One day Madariaga goes to Buenos Aires to indulge his profligate nature, and due to certain circumstances he is compelled to accept a German emigrant, Karl von Hartrott, as an employee. Now Karl is as disagreeable to the Centaur as Marcelo is acceptable. He hates him with a venom beyond expression. But as long as he minds his business and keeps away from close proximity to the Spaniards he is welcome. Karl von Hartrott is of the German Fatherland. His ambition is to make enough money to take up his residence there. And he takes particular delight in painting the advantages of possessing German blood or what the Fatherland stands for. Desnoyers tolerates him with kindly forbearance, even going out of his way to paint him in attractive colors to the old Spaniard.

A time comes when Karl marries the other daughter, Elena. Madariaga had never lost any love for this daughter. And when she marries the thrifty German his hatred becomes overwhelming. Towards the other daughter he harbors an entirely different feeling. Eventually, the German is the father of three sturdy sons, while the Frenchman's wife has only presented him with a daughter. The old Centaur, realizing that his days are numbered, does not take kindly to the idea that his vast property will be left to Hartrott's offspring. But it is a moment of great rejoicing when a son is born to the Desnoyers. He requests that the child be called Julio. The lad grows up to be the apple of the old man's eye. Wherever one is, the other may be found, whether it is riding over the plains or resting at the Hacienda. He even takes the boy to Buenos Aires, where the latter develops a frivolous nature. This pleases his grandfather mightily. Until the hour of the Spaniard's death, he lavishes his entire affection upon the boy and takes him on various wild debauches when he is old enough to accompany him.

When Madariaga dies, the estate is divided, and the two families go abroad to live, the von Hartrotts to Berlin, and later, the Desnoyers to Paris. It is in the French capital that Julio's father establishes himself in an expensive home, his vast wealth being expended upon collecting curios. He buys a castle on the Marne which he fits up with his collected antiques. The youth, however, has been trained in the evil ways of his grandfather. In fact he has inherited a majority of the old man's wild characteristics. Naturally it is second nature for him to cultivate a gay life. He opens a studio where he paints pictures and lavishes affection on pretty members of the opposite sex.

After engaging in this aimless Bohemian existence—a life which displeased his father greatly—he has a love affair with Marguerite Laurier, the youthful wife of the elderly Monsieur Laurier. The young woman reciprocates this affection, which eventually leads to her being sent from her home by her husband. The young lovers are to all appearances drifting aimlessly when the war breaks out. Laurier being a patriotic Frenchman enlists immediately. Julio, who considers himself a South American, elects to remain in civil life, attending to his amours and his painting. Marguerite, however, becomes a nurse, and the mere sight of her in the uniform does not excite him to enlist. Not until he sees her attending her own husband who has been stricken blind does he gain an awakening of duty.

Marguerite gains a new insight into the meaning of social and moral responsibility while nursing her helpless husband and determines to remain with him forever. So Julio enlists and is sent to the front. Meanwhile the elder Desnoyers has gone to protect his castle on the Marne in person at the very time when the Germans are invading Belgium. His castle falls under the bombardment and the German horde swoops down and captures it. Desnoyers is the victim of the enemy's wrath and hatred. His castle is turned into the headquarters of the officer in command, his brother-in-law, von Hartrott, being a member of the lieutenant-colonel's staff; also two of von Hartrott's sons. He is forced to witness their diabolical scheme of destruction. They ruin his wine cellars; they imprison his servants and make a regular debauch of the place. Desnoyers is even imprisoned in his own cellar when word comes that the French army is counter-attacking. This information puts a stop to the invading forces who gather up their arms and spoils and retreat.

He returns to Paris a broken man—broken physically and mentally—but he has consolation in the fact that his son has expiated his own earlier desertion of France in 1870 by enlisting under the tri-color.

Julio and his eldest cousin meet at night in a narrow trench between the lines. Both have been sent upon dangerous missions. They recognize one another but war puts a stop to friendly intercourse between enemies. Both fire at close range and fall dead, side by side. Marguerite is stricken with sorrow to learn of Julio's death. It is later that the parents of Julio meet a stranger in a huge graveyard who leads them to the boy's grave. "You knew him?" they ask. "I knew them all," replies the stranger, pointing to row on row of crosses. Julio's sister, ChiChi, looks forward to happiness in a future from which a great shadow has been lifted through the sacrifice of her brother and his comrades.

Marne Battle Scene Filmed

Scenes of Great Battle Are Staged in the San Bernardino Mountains

TOWERS, turrets and tons of solid masonry went down in awesome havoc with the filming of the final Marne battle scenes for Metro's colossal picturization of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, in the picturesque foothills of the San Bernardino Mountains of southern California.

The bombardment that resulted in razing a great stone castle and several adjoining structures came as a spectacular conclusion to a series of similar scenes that have drawn thousands of visitors to the Metro location for several weeks. The bombardment of the castle, with its ensuing wreck, was in exact reproduction of the final outburst from artillery that concluded the second Battle of the Marne.

A precedent was established in film making when, after the last mine had been exploded, sending masses of earth and debris into the air, it was found that not a single casualty had occurred among the two great armies of players during the picturing of the entire production. That it was possible to reproduce what doubtless was the greatest military engagement in the history of the world without injury to any of the participants is due to the mechanical appliances used by the director, Rex Ingram—some of which were invented for use in "The Four Horsemen" only.

A telephone system involving the use of twenty operators, telegraph communications and a siren whose metallic voice could be lifted above the roar of battle at any moment, were used for the giving of all orders. Because of their use, not a single mine was exploded prematurely—a species of accident that in the past has often been the cause of wholesale injuries among film players appearing in such productions.

Fifteen directors worked as aids to Director Ingram in staging the reproduction of the Battle of the Marne. Because of the magnitude of the task, Mr. Ingram sought not assistant directors, but experienced men who had served as directing heads of great productions. Each of the men attached to his staff was chosen because of his unquestioned ability to lead.

Sunlight Arc Important Development, Says Ingram

"THE most important development in moving picture lighting equipment during the past year is the Sunlight Arc," says Rex Ingram, who directed Metro's "The Four Horsemen." During the latter production a spell of black, cloudy weather broke during an interior sequence and the Sunlight Arc took the place of the soft afternoon sunlight, saving me a delay of two weeks.

"I also used these lights with excellent results in 'Shore Acres' and in 'Hearts Are Trumps,'" says the noted director.

Preferred Dancing to Life of a Farmer

When Rudolph Valentino decided to try professional dancing as a means of earning a temporary livelihood, one perfectly good agricultural student, with ambitions to own a ranch and home somewhere in the Middle West, passed out of existence.

For the would-be farmer today is playing the leading male role in Metro's colossal all-star production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," and hasn't the slightest intention of giving up the glories of the screen for the obscurity of the farm.

Paris Dance-Hall Set Used

"Four Horsemen" Has a Faithful Reproduction of Pleasure Palace

ONE of the famous Parisian dance palaces of pre-war days—and which since has become the target for reformers' crusades—was reconstructed on the grounds of Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Cal., as a setting for one scene of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," the colossal picturization of the world-famous novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

The dance floor, table space and restaurant arrangements were made in exactly the same proportions as the copied resort, which means that the most pretentious set of the kind ever constructed for picture purposes was erected for the Ibanez story.

The scene shows vividly the mad dance craze which struck Paris immediately before the European cataclysm. Every detail has been faithfully carried out according to plans of Jacques d'Auray, who is handling the French technicalities of the production.

Rudolph Valentino, enacting the leading male role in the picture, was called upon, as the famous tango leader, to execute some of the dances for which he gained an international reputation. Alice Terry, as Marguerite, the heroine of the story, received careful instruction from Mr. Valentino in the intricacies of the tango and other Brazilian dances which are seen in this phase of the extra special production de luxe.

A real Tzigane orchestra furnishes the proper tempo for the difficult dances, as the rhythm is much more essential for the proper execution of the steps than for the more modern dances. A genuine cymbalum was procured by Mr. d'Auray and this instrument, together with the other stringed melody producers furnishes the gypsy-lore music for the dancers.

Rex Ingram, who directed the production, had great difficulty in assembling the crowd for the palace, as the chief requirement was that they be adept at dancing the tango and maxixe.

It was a case of "many were called, but few chosen," as the tango had its day some years ago, and seemed to be a lost art. Finally, Mr. Ingram succeeded in assembling the desired number, and after several days of rehearsals under the tutelage of the best dancing instructors obtainable in Los Angeles, the lost art of dancing the tango was revived and as a result the dance scene as shown on the screen is correct in every detail.

Tango Dance Feature of "Four Horsemen"

Finding fifty couples who can do the tango dance and who possess also a working knowledge of French proved more difficult than Rex Ingram, who directed Metro's colossal picturization of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," anticipated. A few years ago the tango dance was the craze of Europe and America, but Mr. Ingram was compelled to call about three hundred persons before he could get a hundred that could perform the steps of this sinuous dance.

The French tango resort in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is one of the features of the production. A typical palace was constructed on one of the big enclosed stages at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, and a real French orchestra was engaged. One of the features of the tango dancing scenes is the exhibition dance by Rudolph Valentino and Alice Terry.

Edward Connelly Seen in "Four Horsemen"

Edward Connelly, known throughout the country for his convincing portrayal of famous characters of dramatic fiction, is seen in the Metro production of the "Four Horsemen." Veteran of a thousand dramas, Mr. Connelly is as well known on the speaking stage as to the followers of the screen.

Book Is Sensation of Publishing World : :

ONCE in a blue moon there reaches the American stage a play that makes history. It will crowd the houses on Broadway for a record-breaking period; it will be discussed and criticised in the most aristocratic drawing rooms and in the humble homes of the city; it will be the subject of magazine articles and newspaper lengthy stories in the newspaper; it will be a success in every city and every town. Instead of dying and going the ways of others plays, it displays a vitality and a longevity that astound not only the public, but the profession as well.

If this happens once in a blue moon in the theatrical, it is only once in a green or a purple moon that a true sensation reaches the book world. To be a true record-breaker a book must appeal to others besides the ordinary reading public. Popular authors write in the popular vein, their books are purchased and listed as among "the best sellers." The man who reads fifteen or twenty novels a year will read the average popular book, and thus its sales record reaches high figures, and it is classified as "an outstanding success." But a novel which is to sell as "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" has sold, must be read not only by the usual novel devotee—it must find its way to the man or the woman who finds the time or the inclination for only one or at most two novels a year.

That Ibanez's novel is the most sensational success in a decade is beyond dispute. More than 170 editions printed! Approximately three million copies sold! Translations in every leading language on the globe effected! Unheralded and unsung, "The Four Horsemen" reached America, found a publisher and then proceeded to sweep the country in a manner which astounded even the most astute critics—men who know the appetite of the American book-buying public, and who are able in most cases to foretell with great exactitude the height of popularity a novel will reach.

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," a translation from the Spanish of Vicente Blasco Ibanez, published by E. P. Dutton and Co., reached the bookstores in July, 1918. The market was being glutted with war stories. The publishers themselves expected no astounding achievements from it. It modestly took its place to await the judgment of the American public. By that judgment it must stand or fall. In September of the same year the verdict was given, and its success was assured. In a manner practically unprecedented in the publishing business it swept the country with a force that has not even yet abated. Statistics published in The Bookman, a magazine which lists regularly reports from different cities throughout the country showing the best selling novels proved that its popularity was contagious. New York adopted it and Boston followed suit. It spread from one city to another and from one state to its neighbor. Today, according to reports from E. P. Dutton and Company, the publishers, it is still one of the most consistent sellers. Orders continue to come in for it.

"The Four Horsemen" "caught on" in September, 1918, and it has not let go yet.

Like other industries, the publishing business has its traditions, gathered and proven throughout the industry's existence. One of these was that the American public was not overfond of translations. The novel by the American author, who told a story of America in an American way had ever been more popular than the story written by a foreigner, who looked at life in a different manner. His conception of characters; his more detailed construction of plot, were elements which did not appeal as English-written novels appealed. The mere labeling of a book as "a translation" had been classed as a liability, and in translating from the Spanish it was considered that the readability of the book was greatly decreased. Yet "The Four Horsemen" was written by a Spaniard in Spanish. Ibanez was a stranger to America. He knew not the kind of novels which sold quickest and most consistently in this country. Yet his book has proved the sensation of the publishing world.

Besides breaking traditions by proving that a translation could rise to great heights of popularity, "The Four Horsemen" proved that a lengthy novel, if its contents are worthy, will be read. Publishers, trained to gauge the public's likes and dislikes, knew that the day of the bulky volume had passed with the age of Thackery and Dickens. There is something foreboding in the mere sight of such a number of pages crowded in between two covers of a book. But here again "The Four Horsemen" broke traditions.

How the book was received by the leading literary critics of the country shows that it has a real permanent value rather than simply a catchy plot to satiate the public's appetite for frothy mental food. The New York Times speaks of Ibanez as "one of the greatest, if indeed he be not the greatest, of living novelists." The Chicago Tribune states that "it has a form as definite as that of a well-built symphony, and it deals as artistically with as many fundamentals of human experience."

The New York Tribune proved itself a prophet. It said: "Predictions are rash, we know. But we are rash enough to venture this, that the protrayal at once of the spirit and grim substance of war, the blood, the fire, the agony, the thousand times worse than death, our time will see no more convincing work of genius than this."

The book section of the New York Sun on September 1, 1918, published a full-page review of the novel under the heading, "A Spanish Epic of the Marne." It calls the book "a work of genius from the hands of the greatest of the Iberian novelists."

The San Francisco Chronicle on September 29, 1918, published a review of the book which was a sign of its steadily growing popularity. "Vicente Blasco Ibanez," the Chronicle states, "the most brilliant of contemporary Spanish novelists, should come by leaps and bounds into American popularity with 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse,' so admirably translated by Charlotte Brewster Jormay."

In January, 1919, Town and Country, a high-class magazine with an elite clientele, stated that "So far the novel of the war seems to be Vicente Blasco Ibanez's 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse,' now in its forty-odd-thousandth printing, from the press of E. P. Dutton and Company. . . . And so, through all four years, the American reading public has been waiting for a big scale book of the war to appear; not that they did it consciously, of course, but they were in the mood to respond when such a book did come on the market. The steady success of 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' proves it. It was by an unknown author; 'a foreigner' . . . It did not play up any type with which we are familiar either the 'two-fisted' American fighting man or the upper class Englishman."

The Portland (Me.) Express-Advertiser believes that Ibanez's characterizations are of the highest order. "More than a novel," it states, "is Vicente Blasco Ibanez's 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.' . . . The story is a strong portrayal of the struggle between the old pleasure-loving order belonging to times of peace and the new conscience developed by the common danger. . . . There are indeed scores of character studies in this masterpiece of Ibanez, which sweeps to a climax of dramatic power."

Ibanez is not a one-novel author. His original works number at present twenty-two — sixteen novels, three volumes of short stories, and three books of travel. His most popular novels are "The Cabin," "Reeds and Mud," "Blood and Sand," "The Saloon," "The Shadow of the Cathedral" and "Mare Nostrum." The Spanish author, now a world figure in contemporary letters, was born January, 1867, in Valencia, of Aragonese parents. He received a good education and graduated in law from the local university. His early history is interesting. He showed radical tendencies at an early age and was exiled twice and imprisoned three times by the government. In 1894 he turned definitely to literature as his chief interest. He had entered journalism before, and founded a republican newspaper, call El Pueblo (The People) and he had published a library of many translations, but heretofore they had only been sidelings. Ibanez is still writing and a new novel, to be called "The Enemies of Women," is forthcoming.

Special Musical Score for Metro Special

Probably the most ambitious musical score ever prepared for a photoplay has been written for Metro's gigantic production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

Louis Gottschalk, world famous composer, who has made a special study of the use of music in connection with screen productions, has written a complete score for the picture under the terms of a contract made with Metro.

Instead of making use of bits of popular selections, as frequently is done in the preparation of scores for films, Mr. Gottschalk will furnish original compositions to accompany the action of the picture from the first scene to the final camera shot. As a preliminary to this undertaking he not only has had frequent conferences with June Mathis, who prepared the screen version of the celebrated Ibanez novel, and Rex Ingram, who is directing it, but has watched the photographing of many of the big scenes both at Metro's Hollywood studios and on "locations" in the foothills of the San Bernardinos.

Presentation at the Lyric Theatre, New York

THE presentation which is being given "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" at the Lyric theatre, New York where the picture began an indefinite engagement on March 6th and where it is expected it will remain for at least twenty weeks at prices $3.00 top, is a most important portion of the entertainment provided.

War and death are the keynotes of the presentation which has been staged under the direction of Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres, who spent three weeks in planning the number and in personally directing rehearsals that the dramatic tempo might be flawless.

The introduction to the picture is simple, almost austere. It begins with the specially selected orchestra's rendition of "Patrie" by Bizet. The orchestra is under the direction of Edward Falk.

Following the overture, a foreword written by Dr. Frank Crane and spoken by Henry Herbert is read. The figure of the reader appears in a shaft of light behind a thin drapery stretched across the stage. Attired in the biblical robes of one of the Apostles, Mr. Herbert is disclosed made up as the Apostle John, with long gray beard and care-worn, serious demeanor. In solemn tones reading slowly with particular attention to articulation and dramatic expression he gives Dr. Crane's foreword as follows:

"I speak as the Prophet John.

"Two thousand years ago there was revealed unto me a vision of things to be.

"Then I saw the beastliness, the greed and the madness of men drive them to destruction.

"I saw the hell of war.

"It came in my day.

"And every generation since that time War has cursed the earth anew.

"Even in these latter days the horror has again broken forth.

"And a prophet of the twentieth century has told the story which will presently be pictured before you, the story of the Four terrible Horsemen.

"The first is Conquest, and he rideth upon a white horse, going forth conquering and to conquer.

"The second is named War, and he rideth upon a horse that is red, and he causeth men to kill, and to call it glory.

"The third is Famine, and he rideth upon a horse that is black, for he bringeth agony until little children.

"And the fourth is called Death, who rideth a pale horse, and power is given unto him over the multitude.

"So is the sword of God's judgment unsheathed upon the fierce and beastly ambitions of men.

"On a fair corner of this earth, God smiles, and all is Peace."

The opening titles of the picture are thrown on the screen at the close of the reading after the stage and Mr. Herbert's figure have been faded out to the first strains of the remarkable musical score which Mr. Riesenfeld has written and compiled from his library of unusual size, maintained for the purpose of furnishing musical numbers he is musical as well as managing director for the three theatres of which he is director.

Projection of the picture is unbroken until the end of the prewar episode covering some six reels of film and carrying the story through the scenes of South American incidents and into France with "Julio Desnoyers" and his cousins grown to manhood. During this episode the music has been light with many catchy Spanish dance airs intermingled.

At the end of the pre-war portion of the picture, which naturally divides the production into two parts, and into a few feet of a subtitle announcing that France has declared war on Germany, the projection is stopped and the lights in the auditorium are turned on for some five minutes of intermission.

Before the picture is again thrown on the screen a second presentation number is given. The spirit of the play is taken up by a solitary figure representing the Spirit of War and portraying death in a novel and effective manner.

With the house lights down, the orchestra drummer strikes into the familiar snare roll used in bygone days during burial services for soldiers. Gradually the orchestra drum is muffled until the taps are but fainly heard, when Joseph Ross playing the role mentioned above and stationed offstage takes up the roll and gradually increases the volume of the beat until it is full toned. Then keeping time to the measured stroke, that of the funeral march, the figure walks across the stage in view of the audience.

Mr. Ross is attired in a gray shroud-like cloak and wears a specially designed mask originated by W. T. Benda, the face of which imitates the dry skull of a man.

On the drummer's exit, the drum beats are gradually reduced in volume with the orchestra musician taking up the roll at first heard faintly and gradually increasing until the offstage instrument is stilled.

At the offstage roll, the projection of the picture is again begun on the two Nicholas Powers projectors with no stop until the end of the picture.

The second part of the picture begins with the titles announcing the war episode with scenes showing the preparations for the conflict in France flashing on the screen almost immediately after the title is off.

Soon after the second part of the picture is begun and following the action of the scenes presented, the orchestra plays the "Marseillaise." Then as a sequence is screened showing the anthem being sung in a Paris cafe with the soloist draped in the French colors, the human voice becomes the accompanist in the presentation of the picture when Mlle. Erza sings the famous French national hymn, the effect being as if the screen figure was rendering the selection.

Near the close of the picture a mixed chorus sings "Hosannah" offstage during scenes that show the allegorical "four horsemen" riding back into their den.

Since the opening of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" at the Lyric theatre, New York, the picture has gone in at the new Mission theatre, Los Angeles, for another indefinite run at prices similar to those at which it is being shown in New York. Other big city theatres will soon be playing the picture with prices and presentation along the same lines as the New York and Los Angeles engagements.

The New York and Los Angeles engagements have been begun under very auspicious circumstances. Advance sale of seats has reached unexpected proportions and there is every indication that record breaking runs will be set.

Definite announcement of when the production is to be released by Metro will be made later.

Notables Attend "Four Horsemen" Opening

WITH the exception of the opening of the opera season, the theatrical premiere of Metro's picture production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" proved Sunday evening, March 6, at the Lyric theatre, to be the most auspicious social event of the year, besides evoking such a demonstration of unqualified approbation as never before greeted a screen presentation.

The audience, made up of personages prominent in the social, financial, literary, theatrical and motion picture circles of New York, in fact of the country, gave ample corroboration, by their unrestrained enthusiasm at the power of this great story by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, to Metro's own belief that it is by far the motion picture's most signal triumph.

No little credit is due Mr. Hugo Riesenfeld, director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres, for his skilful and artistic arrangement of the presentation. From the mo-

Mr. J. Justice Harmer, Prest.,
Sun Light Arc Corp.,

New York City. March 8, 1921.

My dear Mr. Harmer:-

The most important development in moving picture studio lighting equipment during the past year is the Sunlight Arc.

This powerful portable light has proven invaluable to me in the production of "SHORE ACRES" "HEARTS ARE TRUMPS," and "THE FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE."

During the latter production, a spell of black cloudy weather broke during an exterior sequence and the Sunlight Arc took the place of the soft afternoon sunlight with which I started the sequence, saving me a delay of two weeks. Furthermore, it was impossible to tell on the screen, which was actual sunlight and which was arc light.

I also used these lights with excellent results in the sea storm in "SHORE ACRES" and in the snow storm in "HEARTS ARE TRUMPS."

Rex Ingram

Production a Distinctive Achievement : :

IN transferring the story of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" from the pages of the novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez to the motion picture screen, Metro Pictures Corporation undertook an artistic task of which the magnitude was apparent even before the opening scene was "shot."

The setting up of new records for motion picture producers of the future to equal or surpass has come about because of the very bigness of the story of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." Its characters work out their destinies on two hemispheres. From the Argentine, with its far-flung ranges to the capitals of Europe, Senor Ibanez carries the readers of his master work with breathless interest, whilst he unfolds an overwhelming human drama against the background of a world in arms.

South America, England, France, Belgium, Germany—these lands and multitudes of their people needed to be depicted before the camera for the colossal Metro production.

Even the unprecedented expense in production costs has been dwarfed to insignificance by the physical magnitude of the undertaking that made the screen version of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" possible. Statistics compiled at the Metro studios indicate that the production, judged by all the known standards of picture-making, has proved the most gigantic photo spectacle in the history of the silent drama.

The following production facts impart some idea of the immensity of the picture:

More building materials are declared by Metro to have been used in the making of the picture than were required to erect the Woolworth building, 125,000 tons of steel, concrete and lumber were used. The settings for "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalpse," among them an entire French village, which were constructed far more substantially than most backgrounds for camera work only, involved the use of much more than 125,000 tons of solid masonry, steel, lumber, furniture and shrubbery, it is stated.

A village capable of housing 6,000 persons was erected in the foothills of the San Bernardino mountains in Southern California, and destroyed for the purposes of the production. Since the destruction was by artillery, it was necessary to construct every building completely rather than as building fronts only, as is done with most picture sets.

A total of 12,500 men and women, or the adult population of a city of 60,000, participated in the filming of the picture, either before the camera or as workers on the big sets.

A costume factory was erected on the Hollywood studio grounds for the "dressing" of the picture. An armory and two machine shops were incidentals of the other building operations that were completed before the first scene of the picture was photographed.

According to the estimate submitted by Metro, more than 450,000 feet of raw film was exposed, developed and printed for the production. Out of this great footage less than ten thousand feet have actually reached the screen in the finished picture, now showing at the Lyric Theatre in New York City.

A location scene snapped during the filming of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." Director Ingram is shown on the platform directing the action

The task of editing this mass of material, of eliminating the duplicates and all but the perfect reproductions of the scenes enacted before the camera, probably consumed weeks. The mere running of 450,000 feet of film through one camera, at the rate of sixty feet to the minute, would consume sixteen days of eight working hours each.

Photographic novelties in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" are the result of the work of John F. Seitz, chief cameraman in the making of this super production.

Cameraman Seitz has been closely associated with Director Rex Ingram in practically all of the feature productions Ingram has directed. Being a close student of cinema photography has made it possible for Seitz to introduce a number of innovations in previous productions, but the crowning success of his career of a number of years is said to be the forthcoming Metro production.

Lighting effects of a new character have been added to many of the scenes and departures have been made in back lighting effects that will set a new standard for cinema photography.

The two-director experiment has been eclipsed in wholesale fashion in the forthcoming production of Metro's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." For fifteen directors worked as aids to Director Rex Ingram in staging the reproduction of the Battle of the Marne in which two great armies of players participated.

Because of the magnitude of the task before him, Mr. Ingram sought, not assistant directors, but experienced men who had served as directing heads of great productions. Each of the men attached to his staff was chosen because of his unquestioned ability to lead.

For several weeks previous to the starting of the battle scenes, Mr. Ingram and his assistants went over the plans and not a detail was overlooked. It is probable that the most efficient body of men ever organized for picture purposes resulted from these early conferences.

All the assistants were dressed in French uniforms, making it possible to mix with the army without appearing conspicuous in the picture. Some of them were mounted on horses and each man has a specific thing to do. Before the start of each scene they were called together and given instructions as to their particular duties. On the first day of the battle scenes not a single re-take was necessary.

Colonel Starret Ford, who served in France with the American army, and Walter Mayo, were Mr. Ingram's chief assistants. Fourteen motion picture cameras and three "still" cameras were used to record these scenes. The big battery of cameras was placed in every available nook and corner of the French village and castle which make up the setting for the picture.

All the action for the scenes was started by the blowing of a giant siren which can be heard for several miles. This was operated by a switch which the chief electrician for this production carried with him everywhere he went. The action could be stopped at any moment by the same signal.

Because of the magnitude of the task, it was necessary to revise the ordinary order of procedure and change the methods usually acceptable in the photographing of big scenes for the camera. Several patents have been issued by the United States patent office covering the new mechanical devices for the first time in the making of pictures.

A complete telephone system, involving the use of a corps of electricians, operators and a small fortune in cable and other materials, was erected on the mountain ranch where the big exterior scenes for the picture were filmed.

The collection of the art treasures that are seen in the picture involved, not only the expenditure of large sums of money, declares Metro, but a canvass of the art world for tapestries, painting, curios and musical instruments such as are described by Ibanez as used in the South American phases of the story. The art treasures, however, were loaned by their owners, it is stated, many of whom would not consider the putting of a price upon them. The insurance on the tapestries and paintings used in the picture alone amounted to $375,000, it is declared.

Equipment of the actor-soldiers who participated in Metro's elaborate production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" required the erection of a complete uniform factory and an armory of respectable proportions on the company's Hollywood studio grounds.

Some hint of the magnitude of the task may be gained from the fact that several hundred tailors and seamstresses spent weeks preparing the uniforms used in the battle scenes for the production. Scores of mechanics spent an equal time repairing and remodelling the big guns, mortars, mine throwers and rifles that were used for the battle.

Nearly ten thousand soldiers were uniformed and armed for the reproduction of the Battle of the Marne. As many of the soldiers appeared in different capacities in the numerous scenes, it was necessary to provide an even greater number of uniforms. For the preparation of this tremendous array of costumes—probably the largest number ever used in a picture production—an entire block of the studio grounds was given over to the use of the wardrobe officials, under whose supervision the manufacture of the uniforms was carried on.

The field armament that was used in the tremendous bombardment that will prove one of the startling features of the production included big guns of almost every type used in the world war. Two giant Austrian guns of the "skoda" type attracted particular attention of the military men who viewed the reproduction of the big battle. Mine throwers, machine guns and mechanism for the throwing of gas clouds also played prominent parts in the film battle.

"I have paid particular attention to the costuming of this and various other big productions," said Miss Mathis. "But I know of no other picture that has required anything like the attention that this one has in the clothing of its participants. This fact is still more impressive when one considers that the big battle scenes, stupendous though they are, really are but incidental to the telling of the story that Ibanez has given to the world."

It is probable that the largest number of players ever used in any film production — any amusement enterprise, for that matter — has taken part in the filming of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." But it is not on that fact that Director Ingram is basing his belief in the picture. Unusual scenic effects, use of settings of rare natural beauty, the organization of the strongest all-star cast ever used in a single production, and above all, the power of the Ibanez story, are expected to achieve triumphs for this picture as have never before been experienced in the industry.

Attention of Mr. W. C. Hubbard

Gentlemen:

Now that the many details connected with the premier of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" have been finished and the film is well on its way to an extended run in New York, I wish to express to you my appreciation of the most excellent photographic results made possible by the use of Cooper Hewitts.

We obtain effects not possible with "hard light" such as cove lighting and illuminating the interior of dense woodlands.

We depend upon Cooper Hewitts for all our close-ups.

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is hailed by critics as a master picture. Cooper Hewitts aided materially in securing this result, as they have in successfully lighting such pictures as "The Right of Way", "Lombardit Ltd", "Price of Redemption" etc.

With best wishes, I am,

Very truly yours,

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION.

Who Is Who in "Four Horsemen" Cast

ROBABLY the strongest all-star cast ever assembled for any picture in the history of the screen, will be seen in Metro's special production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

While every player of any of the twenty-five principal roles was selected because of his or her special ability to enact the part, there is scarcely a name in the list that is not well known to picture fans.

Rodolph Valentino

When Director Rex Ingram and Metro officials inquired among themselves for someone to play the leading role, that of Julio Desnoyers in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," everyone of them said Rodolph Valentino is the chap, and almost simultaneously with the purchase of the screen rights for the story Valentino was engaged.

Valentino has the appearance of a young South American gentleman; he knows the way of Paris; prior to his screen work he was a professional dancer, and to ninety-nine people out of every hundred who see the film, it is predicted, he will fulfill their expectations in the impersonation of the wild and youthful Julio.

Mr. Valentino is a native of Italy, born at Toranto, where he attended the public schools and later he graduated with a degree from the Royal Military College of Agriculture at Genoa.

Mr. Valentino has been identified with the film industry for the past four years, and in a number of exceptional subjects he has played leading or important roles. He will be remembered in the Mae Murray picture titled "The Big Little Princess" and "The Delicious Little Devil."

He supported Clara Kimball Young in "Ideas of Youth" and Dorothy Phillips in "Once to Every Woman."

The training received in college was very beneficial to him in playing the role of Julio for he was required in numerous riding scenes and later appeared as a member of the French army at the front.

The work he did on the vaudeville stage as a professional dancer made him the ideal youth to storm the gay cafes and tea-rooms in Paris with the "Tango."

Alice Terry

The leading feminine role—that of Marguerite, the French girl in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is taken by a comparative newcomer to the screen, Alice Terry. Miss Terry has been playing before the camera hardly more than a year, but by her talent and ability displayed has been awarded some exceptionally good parts.

She appeared in Metro's production, "Shore Acres," and following this took a leading role in "Hearts are Trumps"—Metro's all star Drury Lane melodrama.

Appearing in the French episode of "The Four Horsemen" she is first the personification of the Parisian butterfly type, and later enacts the role of nurse of the wounded soldiers.

The picturesque hero of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," Rudolph Valentino

Josef Swickard

The characterization of the important role of Marcello Desnoyers, father of Julio in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" was entrusted to Josef Swickard, whose career for the stage and screen began some twenty years ago, and who has played important roles of all characters in almost every kind of a production.

Mr. Swickard was selected for this characterization, which requires his presence in scenes throughout the entire production, because of his masterful work in such well known screen plays as "Trick of Fate," "The Last of His People," "Moon Madness," "Blind Youth," "Trumpet Island," "Sowing the Wind," and as the role of Dr. Manette in "The Tale of Two Cities."

Those who have been privileged to see "rushs" and editing runs of "The Four Horsemen" agree his work as Marcello Desnoyers will undoubtedly prove the crowning effort of his screen work.

It is said at the studio that Swickard lived the part for more than three months, that he worked in scenes for this production, and he attributes his success to the concentration of all his wakeful hours upon the part.

"Acting in comedy is the surest method of attaining the ability of true characterization," according to Swickard. "Comedy work rounds out the course of training that every actor should undergo, shows him a new side to the profession of acting and enables him to better understand the serious moments he may later enact."

For eighteen years Swickard was actively engaged as an eccentric juvenile in vaudeville on the stages of America, South America and Europe, and during this time he played almost every type of comedy characterization. He attributes to this experience and the several years he spent at the Mack Sennett Studio, where he played character parts in comedy, to his ability today to play the higher type of character parts.

Comedy work, Swickard contends, places one in a position to better play character roles, for comedy work to be successful must be portrayed in a serious vein.

One of the first parts taken by Josef Swickard, after he left comedy was that of Dr. Manette in "The Tale of Two Cities," and since that time he has been pigeonholed as an eccentric comedian, and his services have been sought by producers of drama.

Nigel de Brulier

The role of Tchernoff, the old Russian who reveals the legend of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalyse" is taken in the film by Nigel de Brulier, a well-known player of the screen, whose name adds considerable to the all star cast for this super-production.

Because of the exceptional characterization by this actor the role has been considerably built up so as to give de Brulier more scenes in the film than appear in the original story by Ibanez.

This excellent actor has played many characterizations since he entered the land of filmdom. He will be remembered as "Kasan" in "The Virgin of Stamboul," played the part of the Socialist in "The Dwelling Place of Light," had an important part in "The Mother of His Children," and will be seen as Martenez in "Cold Steel."

Virginia Warwick

Playing the role of Chichi is the first dramatic work of Virginia Warwick, a former Mack Sennett bathing beauty.

In taking this part in which she enacts the role of a sister of Julio, Miss Warwick is said to have exhibited genuine dramatic ability. This is the ingenue role of the feature, and Miss Warwick is said to have put into the part in the early scenes balanced proportions of beauty and girlish coquetry. She is then seen as the young wife whose husband goes to the front and later she is the kind, sympathetic nurse-wife when her young husband returned a maimed and disfigured youth.

Miss Warwick joined the Mack Sennett comedy forces about fifteen months ago as a member of the bathing beauty brigade. Later, she left Sennett and went with Fox, where she played in the Sunshine Comedies.

Rex Ingram, who is directing "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and June Mathis, who adapted the famous story, found considerable difficulty in casting the role of Chichi. They cross-examined a number of possibilities, but none proved capable of handling the role.

One evening Mr. Ingram attended a motion picture theater in Hollywood and happened to see Miss Warwick in the comedy. He decided right there that she was exactly the girl for the part of Chichi. The following morning he sent one of his assistants over to the comedy studio with a description of Miss Warwick. However, this man failed to locate her, so Mr. Ingram himself went over and upon finding her immediately engaged her for the role in "The Four Horsemen."

Miss Warwick's work has been

Alice Terry who has the leading feminine role in Metro's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" highly praised by both Mr. Ingram and Miss Mathis, and she has fulfilled all expectations for the part of Chichi. Not only does she photograph well, but has proved a capable little actress and a most conscientious worker.

St. Louis is Miss Warwick's birthplace. and she is not backward in telling that she was born in 1903. She received her early schooling in this city, and later attended school in Los Angeles and also studied classic dancing. Miss Warwick has appeared at numerous entertainments in a dancing act. She is also an expert swimmer and this gained for her the first engagement with Mack Sennett. She won several cups in aquatic contests while in school.

Derek Ghent

Derek Ghent, the promising young actor playing the part of Rene Lacour in Ibanez' "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" now being produced by Rex Ingram at the Metro Studios, had his first taste of motion picture acting when on a lark while attending college at Rome he played with the famous Torino company.

After the old custom in Europe he began the study of law, but many other interests interfered with its serious pursuit.

Mr. Ghent is a sportsman in the best sense of the word. He is an expert rider, an experienced hunter, a yachtsman, an enthusiastic mountain climber and "skieur." He is also a finished swordsman, a scholar of the famous Italian fencing master, Geracci.

On a recent trip around the world Mr. Ghent hunted big game in the upper Congo, in Africa, and from the Chaco to the Amazonas, in South America, while his historical interests led him through the old Inca places in Peru and Bolivia.

The meeting of the lovers in Metro's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"

Mrr. Ghent spent three months as guest on an old estancia in the Argentine Pampa, and some of the beautiful and interesting Gaucho and Indian things part of a very valuable collection which was presented to him, and which he used during his stay in the Argentine are most effectively used in the Argentine period of the "Four Horsemen" production.

In northern Brazil Mr. Ghent contracted a severe case of malaria, which put a temporary end to his roaming.

Mr. Ghent has done the best mountains in the Swiss Alps, and in the Dolomites in Tyrol. He was snowed in for three days at the Aconcagua, in the Andes, and climbed the ill-omened Fingers of God at the Bay of Rio de Janeiro.

Aside from such strenuous pursuits Mr. Ghent is an accomplished musician, playing the different instruments of the out of the way places he visited as well as the stringed instruments of civilization.

He is also a finished dancer, was known for his dancing in the pleasure centers of Europe, and prides himself on a prize won at Mar del Plata, the famous seaside resort of Argentine, the country of best dancing.

One's first impression of Mr. Ghent is that of a slight, handsome youth of charming personality and one does not suspect the hardness and endurance of the well trained body of a man who is essentially of the great outdoors.

On the other hand his astonishing knowledge of literature and art of all times and his keen judgment contrast agreeably with his simple and modest bearing.

Mr. Ghent dislikes being called a foreigner. "Say, if you will, that I was born in another country, but not that I am a foreigner, because I like America immensely and would like to acquire all the best things American."

Arriving in California some few months ago his attention was again called to the screen and from the pleasant Italian memories sprung the serious intention to return to acting in earnest.

As an exponent of European culture Mr. Ghent's views of motion pictures are interesting.

He says, "I believe that pictures can be made without mobs with two, three people as Strindberg does in his incomparable plays, as Griffith did in "Broken Blossoms," and I should like before too very long to make several pictures regardless of whether they pay or not to prepare people for something different, something better. Eventually it would pay of course.

Mr. Ghent at present is preparing a series of ancient Egyptian legends for the screen.

His first American engagement was with Enid Bennett, as the prince in "I Wonder If," a Thomas H. Ince production soon to be released. Immediately following this engagement he was cast for the part of Rene Lacour, in "The Four Horsemen."

His splendid interpretation of the young Frenchman who is forced for a time to serve his country behind the lines, thus acquiring the undeserved title of "sugar soldier," how he attains his desire to face the "Boche," proves his manhood, and at last although crippled and disfigured, bravely faces life anew with his beloved Chichi, thus triumphing over the ravishing and devastation of the "Four Horsemen," proves Mr. Ghent to be an actor of extraordinary ability and finesse.

Bridgetta Clark

Bridgetta Clark, who will be seen in the important role of Donna Louisa, in the Metro all-star production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," is making her initial bow to the motion picture public in this elaborate production.

As the mother of Julio, the hero of the Vicente Blasco Ibanez widely read novel, Miss Clark has a distinct characterization which promises to firmly establish her in the hearts of all who witness the picture, and from present indications every one will see "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" for it is the most talked of film play of the year.

Miss Clark has been prominently associated in professional circles for a number of years. She is a talented Russian ballet dancer, and studied under some of the world's best known instructors. She appeared in her own dancing act in the East for a number of years.

She originally laid out an operatic career for herself, but after studying for several years and attaining great success and prospects for a brilliant career, her voice gave out and she was compelled to give it up.

Upon recovering from this setback, Miss Clark went on the stage and after several minor engagements, was signed as a member of the Bush Temple stock company in Chicago, where she played important parts.

Miss Clark has been a resident of Southern California for only a short time. Her opportunity to play the part of Dona Louise in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" came quite by accident. She was at dinner one evening, when a friend introduced her to June Mathis, who adapted the novel for the screen production. Miss Mathis, upon learning that Miss Clark had a desire to go into pictures, asked her to come to the studio the following day. Miss Clark did so, and Rex Ingram, who is directing the production, and Miss Mathis immediately selected her for the role of Dona Louisa.

Jean Hersholt

In "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" the role of Prof. Julius Von Hartrott is played by Jean Hersholt, who was selected by Director Rex Ingram from a long list of names of possibles for this part.

Perhaps his greatest characterization of a heavy role is that of the Servant in "The Servant in the House." Following this he served as director in the making of two films, "The Deceiver" and "The Golden Trail," in which he also played the heavy part.

Following this work he appeared in the B. B. Hampton production, "The U. P. Trail," "Merely Mary Ann" for Fox, and "The Red Lane."

Hersholt is a very capable actor, and although a young man has had a very wide experience on the screen stage, as well as numerous engagements on the speaking stage.

He excels in heavy parts, but his work in character roles has won for him great praise.

Josef Swickard playing the role of "Marcello Desnoyers" in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"

Brodwitch Turner

Few people know him by this name, for to almost everyone he is known as "Smoke" Turner.

In "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" he will be seen in the part of Argensola, the artist companion of Julio during the Paris episodes.

Turner was an actor on the speaking stage until Essanay induced him to enter films some four years ago. With this firm he played a number of important roles and doubled in a number of films for Henry Walthall.

Mr. Turner came to the Coast for a Fox engagement and after playing in several pictures for Universal he was engaged by Metro for this big production.

UNIVERSAL

Universal has twenty-one directors now working on productions.

William Worthington has been placed in charge of the direction of "Renunciation," from Peter Kyne's story. Grace Darmond is in the featured role.

"The Evil Half" an Alaskan wilderness story, featuring Eva Novak, has been completed by Norman Dwan.

Director Jack Ford, Harry Carey and company are leaving for Truckee for scenes for "Christmas Eve at Filot Butte."

Fred Granville will direct Frank Mayo in "Three in a Thousand," by Ben Ames Williams.

"My Lady of the Island," a South Sea story, will be Edith Roberts next subject.

Rollin Sturgeon is motoring throught California to find a suitable Ozark mountain village for the exteriors in "Human Hearts."

J. P. McGowan is making the final episode of "The Seal of Satan."

Short Westerns in production are Hoot Gibson in "Hearts of Gold," with William Craft directing, and Jack Perrin in "Double Crossed," with Edward Laemmle directing.

William Feldew, cameraman for Tod Browning, is back from the Middle West with atmospheric scenes taken there for "Fanny Herself."

A scene from "Society Secrets," Eva Novak's next starring vehicle for Universal release

REALART

Harry Meyers has been engaged as leading man for the next Bebe Daniels production now being written by Elmer Harris.

T. Roy Barnes will play opposite Wanda Hawley in Royal Brown's story, "It Can be Done."

Monte Blue will play opposite Mary Miles Minter in "Moonlight and Honeysuckle," the Ruth Chatterton stage success.

Harry O'Higgens, the author of "The Dummy," "The Argyle Case" and "The Hiring Line," has been engaged by Realart to write for the screen.

LASKY

Jean Havez has been signed to write Roscoe Arbuckle adaptations.

Arbuckle is returning from New York on March 21 to begin work on "Gasoline Gus."

Wallace Reid is at Vancouver, B. C., for the opening of the new Capitol theatre. His reception is said to have rivalled that given the Prince of Wales. Upon his return he will start work on "Tall Timbers."

The title of "Watch My Smoke" has been changed by Frank Woods to "Watch My Speed." Wallace Reid is the star.

Jeanie McPherson is on the way to Europe.

George Melford has completed "The Money Master" and is beginning "The Great Impersonation."

Peter B. Kyne, who, with Albert Shelby Levino, is rewriting the "Cappy Ricks" stories for the screen, gave an anti-censorship address to club women on Saturday at the Civic Auditorium in San Francisco as representative of the Screen Writers' Guild.

HODKINSON

The Rockett Film Company has completed production work on "Keeping Up with Lizzie." This picture is based on Irving Bacheller's novel and was directed by Lloyd Ingraham. This is the second of a series of seven destined for release by Hodkinson. Enid Bennett is the featured player. Other players in the cast are Otis Harlan, Edward Hern, Leo White, Harry Todd, Landers Stevens, Lila Leslie and Victory Bateman.

METRO

Bayard Veiller is directing the making of "The Woman Next Door." The cast selected to support May Allison includes Albert Roscoe, Frank Elliott, Irene Hunt, Baby Stanley Goethals, Dana Todd and William Taylor. Arthur J. Zellner, the scenario writer, arrived here from the New York offices of Metro.

Frank Elliott, Metro featured actor and Western representative of the Sunlight Arc is on his way to New York on a business trip.

VITAGRAPH

John M. Quinn, general manager, left for New York after a week at the studio.

A big dam is being built across the bay at Balboa for "The Son of Wallingford," now being produced by George Randolph Chester.

Earl William, Director Smith and his troupe are spending the week in the mountains obtaining exteriors for "The Secret of the Silver Car."

Larry Semon's next comedy will be titled "The Bakery."

Joe Ryan is now making the last episode for "The Purple Riders."

GOLDWYN

Mason Hopper is making the final scenes for "Look Before You Leap," from Thompson Buchanan's play, "The Bridal Path," at Santa Barbara.

The Will Rogers' subject now being directed by Clarence Badger has been definitely titled "Doubling for Romeo." It was written by Elmer Rice and mentions film stars and jollies prominent players.

"The Alibi," by Charles Kenyon, renamed "The Invisible Power," has been completed by Frank Lloyd, who for the past week has been trying to find suitable players for Rita Weiman's play, "The Grim Comedian."

Reginald Barker is making the railroad scenes for "The Old Nest," by Gouverneur Morris.

Tom Moore arrives from Honolulu on March 24 to begin working on "Beating the Game," by Charles Kenyon. Mr. Schirtzinger will direct.

CHRISTIE

Christie is making a series of two-reelers for Educational, each with an all star cast. The first has Viola Daniel, Josephine Hill, William Sloan and Earl Rodney.

Two companies are working on the Vanity Comedies directed by Scott Sidney and William Beaudine.

ABOUT PLAYERS

WYNDHAM STANDING, who needs no further introduction than his name, the actor who has always earned his reputation as among the best screen talent, has been vacationing abroad, but has returned to New York. It is safe to wager that he will not remain long out of harness, especially when it is pointed out that Wyndham Standing is the man who surpassed his acknowledged and heralded ability in T. Hayes Hunter's masterpiece for Goldwyn's "Earthbound."

Maurine Powers, the sixteen-year-old child actress, who played the part of the little blind girl in "Democracy," is now a full-fledged star in her own right. She has just finished "Why Girls Leave Home," an old title on a brand new story written especially for her by William Nigh, who also directed the picture. The picture will be released some time in April or early May.

The cast for "The Sign on the Door," selected to support the star, Norma Talmadge, is certainly a recommendation for the finished production. Lew Cody, as Frank Deveraux! What artist in the industry could assume the role as is anticipated by Cody fans? For it is to be remembered that "Frank" was a good-bad man, and, despite all his villainous misdemeanors, was the victim of a superfluous amount of good looks and animate charm. Charles Richman as Lafe Regan, and the following well known players promises a screen play de luxe: Helen Weir as Helen Regan, Paul MacAllister as the District Attorney and Robert Agnew as Alan Churchill. The continuity and adaptation for "The Sign on the Door," Channing Pollock's popular play, in which Marjorie Rambeau was seen on Broadway last year, have been written by Mary Murillo.

A new twist to film play presentation is demonstrated in "Oliver Twist, Jr.," which William Fox is using to introduce Harold Goodwin as a star. It's the Dickens story all right, but laid as well as made in America.

Just why Harold Foshay was cast for a "heavy" in two pictures would appear as an enigma to those familiar with his actual personality, were it not that the same must admit that in order to receive acknowledgment as an actor of ability, a man must entirely conceal his real nature. In the instance of Mr. Foshay it might be well to point out that he never has been a convict, despite the ease with which he falls into the part played in his latest picture opposite Muriel Ostriche. Neither is he keen on "society," but in the picture in which he is now working he assumes all the earmarks of the society man, and dashes about in dapper apparel with the same ease employed when he wore the stripes of No. 777. His forthcoming work, within a few weeks, will cast him as a hero—"Handsome Harold," which ought to be an easy role for him to assume.

Herbert Brenon, directing Norma Talmadge, and who made her two latest successes, "The Passion Flower," and "The Sign on the Door"

Bobby Agnew seems to have become a fixture at the Talmadge studio, having appeared with Norma Talmadge in "The Passion Flower," retained for "The Sign on the Door," and now engaged to play the leading juvenile in Miss Talmadge's forthcoming starring vehicle, "That Wonderful Thing." Three pictures with one star, when there is a heavy market of capable young actors, speaks well for Bobby Agnew's knowledge of screen artistry.

The title of Tom Mix's newest picture for Fox is "Hands Off." No, it is not written about censorship!

When Leatrice Joy was fully arrayed for the wedding ceremonial in "A Tale of Two Worlds," the Gouverneur Morris story of China and Chinatown, she observed the old adage about what brides should wear very thoroughly in at least two respects. It was not merely "Something old" and "something borrowed," but everything old and everything borrowed—and nothing new.

This was through no fault of either Miss Joy or the Goldwyn costume department. San Francisco's Chinatown was thoroughly searched, but in the whole quarter only one strictly old-time Oriental bridal costume was to be found—and that neither new nor for sale. But the owner was willing to lend it, and rather than wear a hastily contrived imitation, Miss Joy decided to accept the offer and clothe herself wholly in old and borrowed garments.

The dress is an elaborate affair, heavy (too heavy, you would say if you had to wear it), with embroidery, and edged from neck to skirt hem with tiny gold bells. Are Chinese brides, Miss Joy wants to know, always supposed to provide their own wedding bells?

Judging from the reception the trade is giving the Fox special production "Blind Wives" there are at least a lot of exhibitors extant who don't want to be suspected of being blind—or even short-sighted .

"The Lotus Eaters," in which Anna Q. Nilsson is playing opposite John Barrymore under the direction of Marshall Neilan, certainly suggests tropical foliage—that is why this triumvirate and the rest of the company have left for Florida, by rail to Palm Beach and Miami—and then a cruise along the coast on a private yacht, to film the Southern exteriors of this story which marks the return of Barrymore to the screen.

The selection of Anna Q. Nilsson for the female lead in this important production is a striking tribute to her popularity and ability, since the personelle of this organization is composed of the leaders in every line. Miss Nilsson's most recent characterizations were in Jose's "What Women Will Do," distributed by Associated Exhibitors and Sawyer—Lubin's "Without Limit," released by Metro.

William Farnum, one of the busiest stars of the Fox forces, has adopted two small babies. Kittens that he found asleep in his coat in his dressing room at the New York studio.

Shirley Mason's next starring vehicle under the Fox banner will be an illuminating story known as "The Lamplighter."

Allen Holubar and his wife, Dorothy Phillips, who is the star in the big spectacular production, "Man, Woman, Marriage," which her husband recently completed for First National, are now in New York arranging for its Broadway premiere. The picture is the strongest argument for the triumph of the fair sex and their ideals ever presented on the screen and portrays the kaleidescopic conflict between the sexes since the dawn of time.

A. J. Paul, the prominent Ohio exhibitor who has just completed his newest house, the Royal theatre, in Galeon, has just written to Percy Marmont for a photograph to be permanently displayed in the lobby. "I have played all the Vitagraph product," writes Mr. Paul, "and have always admired your work. I want to congratulate you and to wish you success in the future. I have personally autographed portraits of the other Vitagraph stars but I want one from you to be on permanent display in the lobby of my new theatre."

The inclusion of Percy Marmont among the Vitagraph stars is rather previous—and incidentally Marmont has also worked for Famous Players and a few independent producers—but, coming from such a prominent exhibitor, it may be an interesting prophecy.

Marmont recently completed the filming of "What's Your Reputation Worth," Corinne Griffith's latest Vitagraph picture, in which he played the leading male role.

Los Angeles no longer will have a corner on the laugh market. The Fox production of Mark Twain's "Connecticut Yankee" has come to Broadway.

Rockcliffe Fellowes, the popular leading man, who has been called the "Caveman Cavalier" of the screen, is seen at his best in the recent Paramount Picture "The Price of Possession" with Ethel Clayton. Fellowes confines his "cave-man" possibilities strictly to the studio, however, his hobbies, when not before the camera, being, principally, his favorite jet black saddle horse, Satan, and the raising of rare orchids, in which art he is by way of being a specialist.

Anetha Getwell, the prize beauty, who was picked by D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Howard Chandler Christy and other experts, as the loveliest of more than fifty thousand of America's prettiest girls, in a contest held by some of the leading motion picture magazines last year will make her stellar debut with Pantheon Pictures Corporation. Miss Getwell's first picture with this company will be produced at Port Henry, N. Y.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

James Young was leaving New York for Los Angeles on, probably the most important undertaking of his active and successful career. He was the choice of Paul Brunet and Robert Brunton to direct the first production of a Rudyard Kipling story from a continuity personally prepared by the celebrated English novelist.

"Rudyard Kipling's first original writing for the picture screen," he said, "is at once a surprise and a delight. It is an entirely practicable and complete continuity — which means that he has shirked none of the screen author's responsibilities. Moreover, as the script bears evidence, its distinguished author is equal to the author's privilege of originality in method — which is rather remarkable considering that this represents Mr. Kipling's first effort at composing direct for picture production. To produce from the Kipling script of 'Without Benefit to Clergy' will be a pleasure and an inspiration."

Mr. Young's artistic career prior to his entrance into motion picture direction should give Kipling confidence that his work will enjoy the best possible interpretation.

The rise of the motion picture screen as a literary and art medium found Mr. Young in his true element as a director. It was he who made the round dozen of wonderfully popular John Bunny comedies. He also directed the first five comedies in which Sidney Drew was starred. The five-reel feature, "My Official Wife," in which Clara Kimball Young secured the widest attention and favor. This was followed shortly by "Hearts in Exile," "Over Night" and "Little Miss Brown." He also made the vehicles which lifted Mae Murray and Blanche Sweet into the front rank of picture leading women, besides directing "Oliver Twist," with Marie Doro and Hobart Bosworth.

From all of which it will be apparent that Rudyard Kipling will have a first director not lacking in practical experience of his art.

"The Mountain Woman," the second feature for William Fox, directed by Charles Giblyn, starring Pearl White, is said to have won a reputation of being a fine piece of film merchandise. Recently the star, who also appeared in "The Tiger's Cub" and "The Thief," under Mr. Giblyn's direction, attended the American Professional Skating Championship at Lake Placid, and took a whirl at showing the natives a little fancy skating on her own account.

George Fitzmaurice has engaged Robert Schable for his special production, "Experience," for an important role. Mr. Schable, who is favorably identified as a leading screen artist, will soon be in the George D. Baker production, "Without Limit," which makes its premier at the Capitol theatre, March 20.

William D. Taylor is now in the "capitalist class." He is producing "Wealth." And he has chosen for his cast a wealth of talent, including the star, Ethel Clayton, and Herbert Rawlinson. "Wealth" is the screen version of Cosmo Hamilton's story, originally entitled, "The Almighty Dollar."

Lillian and George Randolph Chester have gone to the Pacific Coast, where they are to produce "The Son of Wallingford," the latest of the celebrated Chester stories for the screen. Although the Chesters have collaborated in preparing many original stories and continuities for motion pictures and are thoroughly versed in the technicalities of the silent art, this is the first picture in which they have assumed full directorial charge. "The Son of Wallingford," which is now running serially in Collier's Weekly, is the 105th Wallingford story of the George Randolph Chester series and the author states that it will positively be the last.

Tom Terriss, who recently joined the International forces, and who will direct Lionel Barrymore in "Boomerang Bill," promises the kind of production he believes can be turned out with a cast in keeping with the star assigned him. Knowing Mr. Terriss' previous endeavors, it would not be at all surprising if the picture were among the 1921 ultra models.

John S. Robertson, directing "Footlights," with Elsie Ferguson, has engaged Marc McDermont for a prominent role in this picture. It is interesting to note that McDermont played in one of Mr. Robertson's first pictures when he was directing for Vitagraph, years ago. Now, after a lapse of time, he is back again in the Robertson fold, under the direction of the man who just completed the John S. Robertson production of Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy."

N. Brewster Morse, the eighteen-year-old author of "His Brother's Keeper," "The Crimson Cross" and other screen productions, who is said to be the youngest successful photoplaywright, is to enter the directorial end of motion pictures. He is now finishing the script of an original story entitled "Domestic Relations," which he has written for a new company and which he will direct.

Ouida Bergere, shortly to begin work on her first Ouida Bergere production and now adapting "Peter Ibbetson" as George Fitzmaurice's next special production, has written a story which will be Mae Murray's and Robert Leonard's first vehicle under their arrangement to produce pictures for Associated Exhibitors. Miss Bergere's original story for Mae Murray is entitled "Peacock Alley." She will also adapt it for the screen.

People are a puzzle. Just now the New York stage is a veritable riot of sumptuousness and splendor in the multitudinous host of glittering attractions it presents. Yet the Fox film, "Over the Hill," directed by Harry Millarde, with its homely humor, its buckwheat cakes and its little old mother, is still packing them in at the Broadhurst theatre.

Frank C. Badgley, the promising young actor, whose latest pictures are with Dorothy Gish in "The Ghost in the Garret" and with Marguerite Clark in "Scrambled Wives," is going to forsake the screen for the directing end of motion pictures. He has accepted a position with the Canadian government to handle a producing unit, which will make a number of films of dramatic as well as semi-educational character. Badgley, who won the British Military Cross and a captaincy for gallantry during the World War, received his directorial schooling at the D. W. Griffith studios before becoming an actor.

Rollin S. Stugeon Defines "Waste Basket Sense"

TWO bitter enemies, as the result of a challenge, sat down, side by side, tossed money into the ocean, dollar for dollar—until each was ruined.

For many years this money tossing scene has been repeated—not by foes, but instead, the participants are Friend Manufacturer and Friend Director, supposedly working hand-in-hand.

For despite all strivings of the motion picture business to attain some reasonable system of economy in production, it remains, a strange fact, that the greatest fault in picture creation—from an economical standpoint, is one that is tolerated year in and year out.

I refer to the vast amount of work done during production which is thrown away bodily when the picture is cut. This fault I would call lack of "waste basket sense."

Year in and year out pictures are made. A fractional part only of the material photographed ever reaches the screen. For example, five-reel subjects. These actually are about 4,500 feet in length and include about 800 feet of sub-title, thus leaving a requirement of 3,700 net feet of actual scenes.

To obtain this used portion of 3,700 feet, even under managements which have relatively achieved efficiency, there will be from 16,000 to 60,000 feet of film photographed. Deducting the footage necessary for re-takes, one discovers the astonishing fact that, of the remainder, from 8,000 to 16,000 feet of the work actually photographed must go into discard.

This waste in the picture shop is, first of all, due to manuscripts which, on their face, are too lengthy. The average short-subject runs from 225 to 350 scenes in the manuscript. To be sure the number of scenes is not an exact criterion as to final length, however, even the shorter manuscripts are, in most cases, decidedly over length.

In case of more elaborate pictures, in which there is not strict limitation as to length, waste on the face of the manuscript is not such a tangible thing.

But, even in these cases, we can assume ten reels to be the absolute limit.

Some producers with a high degree of imagination, see unending possibilities in their material, and "shoot" without regard to any definite probability of the newly conjured material being retained.

There is no disparagement to be put upon the imagination or ambition involved in productions of this character, but certainly there is a lack of waste basket sense.

With the maximum limit of the production fixed at ten reels, there can be no reason in the world for shooting from 100,000 to 200,000 feet of negative to make one such subject.

The waste in "shooting" match of vastness amounts to millions and millions annually. A certain editorial acuteness on the part of the director, while producing, could save thousands of dollars, even on the short picture. This requires a degree of skill which can come only from a considerable natural ability, or thorough experience.

It is true that pictures will always have to be produced with a liberal amount of material above that which will be utilized. But there is a difference between liberality and tossing money into the ocean.

The capital of nations has been poured into the picture business and, with this stupendous capitalization armies of aids have been employed—for what?

To create the successful picture.

And yet, with as high as 95 per cent. of the product going into the waste basket; with length spinning itself into endless miles of film which never will be used, we frequently see "economy" introduced in the form of obstruction to quality.

Without quality no effort demanding the artistic can hope to succeed. All the quantity in the world cannot make up for lack in quality.

And yet how often do we see Friend Length the favored son, while Brother Quality slinks away—an outcast.

And Daddy Expense stands for this condition.

One of the principal reasons for this condition is that, in the rapid development of pictures, the demand for directors has not allowed time for all-round apprenticeship—especially in the story-construction and editorial processes — which training is necessary to sound judgment in the elimination of material—before or during production.

The principal reason, however, is that the evolution of the business has been so fast that even the best artists engaged in the work have scarcely adjusted themselves to working within the limitations of picture craft.

The creator of motion pictures must regard himself as artistic, not when his imagination runs riot, or when he "plays it safe" by shooting everything his fancy conjures, but when he keeps the limitations of his medium well in mind, and selects from his material that which he can reasonably hope to mold to those limitations.

Then will he become the possessor of waste basket sense.

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

NEW ENGLAND

Charles Tucker, formerly manager of the Broadway theatre at Springfield, Mass., has been engaged by Clements & Wilson, owners of the Palace theatre at Bristol, Conn., to manage that playhouse. He succeeds Louis Saperstein, who has become manager of the Princess theatre in that city. Mr. Tucker has already assumed his new duties.

Former Mayor Samuel Campner, of New Haven, Conn., associated with Morris Pouzzner in conducting motion picture houses in various parts of Connecticut, has been selected as one of three committee members to direct the missionary and Americanization campaign of B'nai B'rith in that State. Closer cooperation of city Jewry with those in the rural sections is to be a paramount aim. It is understood that motion pictures will play an important role in the drive.

The Princess theatre on Riverside avenue at Bristol, Conn., was this week sold by George F. Lewis to Frank and Anthony Wisniewski, both of that city, who plan to continue it as a family motion picture house. Louis Saperstein, who has been manager of the Palace theatre in that city, has accepted the managership of the Princess. Local Manager Everson of the Princess, who has been in charge of the house for several weeks, expects to enter the motion picture field at Holyoke, Mass.

NORTHERN NEW YORK

Olive Thomas features seem to be meeting with unusual popularity in Buffalo just at present. During the past week productions, featuring the little actress who recently met an untimely death in Paris, have been shown in Shea's Hippodrome, the Strand, the Victoria, the Elmwood and the Regent. Capacity business was recorded on each presentation.

Since Henry Ford began his attack on the movies and the alleged "sex stuff" therein, Morris Slotkin, general manager of the Olympic Amusement company has disposed of his "Henry Built" coupe and has purchased an Oakland sedan. Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood theatre, is not so prejudiced, however, for he has purchased the flivver from Mr. Slotkin and each night places it right in front of the fashionable West side picture theatre.

Elmer C. Winegar is a lucky manager. He has a friend in the neighborhood who can manage a theatre. So the Central Park theatre chief is taking a night off now and then to enjoy life as it is lived outside the theatre. The friend is Art Young who during the day is office manager of Nu-Art Pictures. It was rumored in Buffalo last week that the Premier theatre, also managed by Mr. Winegar had been sold.

Chester Fennyvessy of the Rialto theatre, Rochester, put on a revue with six girls in the cast during the week of March 14 in connection with the showing of Neal Hart in "Sky Fire." It is said the stunt went over big.

Murray Hawkins and Mell R. Edwards have resigned at the First National office. Mr. Hawkins is going to Chicago and Mr. Edwards will probably join another exchange in Buffalo. Eddie Hayes held a conference with Buffalo exhibitors on rentals for Chaplin in "The Kid," last week and also journeyed to New York on the same subject. The Fisher in Seneca Falls and the Andrews in Salamanca have signed up for the F. N. franchise. H. L. Levvy, formerly with Goldwyn in Boston, has been engaged as a salesman by Mr. Hayes.

Harry L. Kappen, former manager of the Buffalo First National office, has been appointed eastern division manager for Associated Exhibitors and is now in Buffalo conferring with W. A. V. Mack, local Pathe manager. He will remain in Buffalo several weeks.

H. M. Messiter of the Paramount sales staff has been transferred to Indianapolis and Nathan Dobson, formerly a salesman at the Buffalo Paramount office, has resigned from the Select staff in Pittsburg to return to his old job in Buffalo. H. G. Ballance, general sales manager; M. A. Shauer, head of the accessory department and Harry Buxbaum, district manager, all from the home office in New York visited Manager Allan S. Moritz last week.

Homer Howard has resigned as a salesman at the Universal office. M. A. Chase, branch manager, Buffalo, is this week touring the towns on the main line.

"Hub" Taylor has been engaged as a salesman at the Gardiner office. He is covering the Buffalo territory. "Hub" was formerly in the theatre supply business in Buffalo.

Henry W. Kahn, manager of the Buffalo Metro office, has arrived in Plymouth, England, according to post cards received in Buffalo this week. He's probably enjoying the old home brew in Germany by this time.

The board of directors of the Buffalo Federation of Churches has endorsed efforts at Albany to introduce state censorship of moving pictures. It's coming from all sides.

Irving M. Salyerds of Rochester was in Buffalo last week jazzing up local exhibitors and exchange men to put everything aside and get in Rochester for the big state convention in April. A special car will carry the Buffalo delegates to Rochester. There will be 40 booths at the Hotel Seneca, all of which have been sold. A mammoth ball will be held in the city armory April 7. All tickets have also been sold for the "food fight." It looks like a big time will be had by all.

George Williams, formerly connected with Dooley and former manager of the Family theatre in Albion, has been appointed manager of the Star theatre in Tonawanda. George Buss is now going to enjoy himself.

Nickum's new Gem theatre opened in Olean, N. Y., Tuesday, March 8, with "Forbidden Fruit."

The Strand theatre in Binghamton has installed a mammoth stage setting, one of the largest in the state.

"Hub" Taylor, known to every exhibitor north of Westchester county, has disposed of his entire interest in the Buffalo Theatre Supply company, Franklin street, Buffalo and is about to reenter the business as a film salesman. The Rialto Theatre Supply company of Indianapolis has taken over the business and will continue it at the same address.

It is rumored that the Premier theatre, which has been showing the same pictures as the Central Park, will soon present programs of its own. The two houses are in the Central Park section of north Buffalo and are under the management of Elmer C. Winegar. Mr. Winegar was making the rounds of the exchanges last week arranging his bookings to conform with the new policy at the Premier.

William Gehring, who has been at the Albany Fox office, has succeeded Harry Myers as assistant manager of the Buffalo exchange of the same company. Mr. Myers recently left Buffalo to assume the management of the Albany branch. R. W. White, manager of the contract department of the home office, visited Manager E. T. Gomersall last week.

The Buffalo Realart office has now reached a total of 175 franchises and Harry E. Lotz and his wrecking crew of seven men are still going strong.

Harry E. Thompson, supervisor of the Buffalo and Albany Hodkinson offices, was in Buffalo the week of March 8, going over office affairs with Marion Gueth, who has been in charge of the exchange, since the resignation of Stanley Hand.

Fred G. Sliter, district manager, and Howard Brink, Buffalo manager for Robertson-Cole, are touring territory and according to Ray Powers, who is in charge of the Buffalo exchange during the absence of his chief, business is coming in in trainloads. C. B. Allen, of the Allen theatre, Solvay, N. Y., and G. C. Sarvis of the Library theatre, Warren, Pa., were visitors at the Robertson-Cole office last week.

CLEVELAND

"Women Men Love," starring William Desmond and Martha Mansfield, made by the Bradley Feature Photoplay Company and being released on a state rights basis, has been sold to Warner Brothers for New York state; to the Rialto Film Company of Philadelphia for Eastern Pennsylvania; to L. Coen of Minneapolis for Minnesota; to Bexley Attractions Company of Dallas, Texas, for Texas and Oklahoma, and to the Van Doll Amusement Company of Chicago, for northern Illinois.

Sydney Rosenthal has just been appointed general manager of the Bradley Feature Photoplay Company, 3001 Euclid avenue, Cleveland. Rosenthal has been acting as financial representative for the organization which has just completed its second big feature special.

Frank Marshall, district manager for Special Pictures Corporation in the territory which includes Cleveland, is on his way to Los Angeles to assume his new duties as manager of distribution for the Independent Producing Corporation. H. J. Roberts, former general manager for Special Pictures Corporation, and L. W. Thompson, former president of Special Pictures Corporation, are at the head of the new Independent Producing Corporation. Mr. Marshall says that the new company will make both short reel and feature attractions.

Maurice Lebensberger, manager of the Standard Film Service, Cleveland, was in Cincinnati this week, on active duty in behalf of the new censor bill which, if passed, will put the movies out of business in Ohio.

Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service, and one of the directors of the Federated Film Exchanges, Inc., answered "Present" at the recent meeting of the organization at San Francisco. Charnas is expected back in Cleveland early next week.

Phil DeAngelus, D. W. Griffith's well known publicity hound, personally put over the billing of "Way Down East" in Cleveland. Now Cleveland and vicinity looks like a neck-and-neck race between Fletcher's Castoria and the big screen attraction.

"Way Down East" opened an extended engagement at the Opera House, Cleveland, last week at $2.50 top price. The big Opera House lobby couldn't take care of the crowds trying to buy admissions. The line extended all along the street on Euclid avenue more than two stores east of the theatre entrance.

Mrs. Cecile Weisenberger, for several years manager of the Liberty theatre, Geneva, Ohio, has resigned to become manager of her own home, following her marriage recently. She is succeeded by R. J. Lynch. Mr. Lynch will follow Mrs. Weisenberger's successful policy of intimate exploitation.

"Madonnas and Men," released locally through the Masterpiece Film Attractions, will have its premier showing in Ohio at Loew's Valentine theatre, Toledo, the week of February 20.

George P. Jacobs, general manager of Masterpiece Film Attractions, is in New York, with an open mind and an open pocketbook, looking for good state rights pictures.

Phil Selznick Productions has purchased "Up in Mary's Attic" for release in Ohio. William Shapiro had previously purchased the picture for local distribution, but turned it over to Selznick last week.

Mr. M. B. Greenwald has resigned as manager of the Fox exchange in Cleveland, and will soon be active in another branch of the motion picture industry. Until a new local manager is appointed, Assistant Sales Manager Dembrow is in charge of the office.

C. D. Hill, manager of the local Associated Producers office, has arranged for a special showing of the "Last of the Mohicans" to a group of 104 school teachers in East St. Louis with a view of eradicating their opposition to certain elements which have aroused the sponsoring of censorship. D. Walter Potts, president of the East St. Louis board of education, and a strong advocate of censorship, said that he would discontinue his efforts in that direction, should a St. Louis exchange man prove to his satisfaction that certain gruesome elements in a number of recent releases were absolutely necessary to the welfare of the production. Hill is championing the cause and thus pioneering the way.

William A. Shalit's new United Artist office on film row is the center of many daily visits by out-of-town and local exhibitors. The office which was only recently opened is reporting good business.

KANSAS CITY

"The Inside of the Cup," the Cosmopolitan-Paramount production, was pronounced a "perfect film" by a delegation of Kansas City ministers and women representatives of civic organizations who were given a special showing of the picture at the Kansa City Film Exchange building. The film was shown in the interest of the better movie censorship campaign which is being conducted in that city.

"Every scene points to true ideals of Christianity," the head of one of the leading civic bodies said. "I do not consider it in any way derogatory to the clergy."

"Considering the subjects we preachers have to talk on," a pastor of a large church, who viewed the film, said; "we should make thorough investigations before condemning motion picture theatres in general. The theatres have an equal right to condemn the church when there is just reason."

The premier box office honors for any picture that has been displayed here in the last five years, has just been won by "The Kid." During the opening week, 42,000 persons paid admission to witness Charlie Chaplin in his latest role. Fully one-third of that number, left standing on the walk in front of the theatre and unable to gain admittance, departed in despair, hoping to have more success the second week. While the attendance the second week was slightly under that of the first week, the box office receipts warranted a run of a third week, and there is every possibility that the exhibitor, who operates three theatres here, will give the picture a trial in each of his houses before it leaves town.

"The Gilded Lily," "The Furnace," "The Passionate Pilgrim," "The Faith Healer' and "Treasure Island," are among the latest productions that have been booked for the near future by exhibitors here.

FLORIDA

The "stunt" pictures that were produced by C. D. Cooley, the manager of the three largest Tampa, Fla., motion picture theatres, were shown at the Strand recently.

Thrills? They were there in droves; in fact it was nothing but thrills, with wing walking, loops, dives, plane changing and parachute drops.

The pictures were made by Mr. Sawyer of the Juanita Films Studio, and he deserves credit for the good work.

Tampa has an epidemic of Illustrated Lectures. Seems as though every church has one. With Palm Beach suits and straw hats in season down here, everybody likes to hike for Florida, and of course if they can swing a lecture, why it pays for the eats; so we have 'em in droves every winter.

SAN DEIGO

Dodge & Hayward, lessees of the Isis theatre, have announced that they will convert that house, long used for road shows, into a motion picture theatre, opening early in March with "The Passion." This is to be followed by the new Chaplin feature, "The Kid." The Isis will have a symphony orchestra of twenty pieces, and special musical and other entertaining features will be added to the program ocasionally.

John Costello, lately associated with D. W. Griffith in the filming of "Way Down East," and also assisting in the direction of "Love of Men," "Home Ties," "The Prevaricators," and other pictures, has come to this city to make his home and will be associated with Robert Warwick in conducting classes in photoplay writing and scenario building.

William Matthews, formerly with Miller's theatre in Los Angeles, has become associated with the Bush theatres as house manager of the Superba, succeeding A. E. Chabot, who has gone into another line of business here.

Local No. 247, Motion Picture Operators, won a handsome cup in the entry list of decorated cars which participated in a big parade here on Washington's birthday.

John G. Wray, director at the Thomas Ince studios in Los Anegles, brought his cameraman, Henry Sharpe, here recently to take motion pictures of the Virginia Brissac company, which is completing three years in stock at the Strand theatre. The film is to be shown in connection with "Business Before Pleasure," the Potash and Perlmutter comedy to be presented at the Strand. Miss Brissac is the wife of Mr. Wray.

OGDEN, UTAH

As a result of the action taken by theatre managers of Ogden, Utah, in calling attention of a local club to acts of vandalism committed in theatres and public buildings, Mayor Frank Francis issued a proclamation setting aside one week for the purpose of taking the question of bettering conditions to school children as well as the older persons. The results have been good but they must be better and the mayor will set aside another week in the near future to further this work.

According to theatre managers it was stated that many acts of petty thievery were committed here as in most cities of the country. The acts consisted of prying numbers off the backs of seats, taking tapestries, cutting pictures from frames, carrying of metal equipment from lavatories and taking pictures from frames in lobbies and at the entrances.

The method of securing effective results in the campaign against vandalism has been through publicity and addresses in churches and schools.

S. B. Steck, manager of the Cozy, Lyceum and Rex theatres of Ogden, has returned from two weeks' vacation in Los Angeles and environs. While in Santa Monica he was the guest of August Fyhn, formerly manager of the Utah theatre in this city and now manager of a theatre in Santa Monica, one in Sawtelle and three houses in the suburbs of Los Angeles. Steck said his former competitor was doing well in the field. Several days was spent in visiting various studios around Los Angeles. Steck returned to Ogden by the way of San Francisco, where he inspected a number of motion picture houses.

CANADA

Roy Mitchell has been appointed manager of the new Belmont theatre, Montreal, in succession to Thomas Conway, who resigned to handle bookings in Quebec for "County Fair."

Jack Allen, formerly Montreal manager of the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange, Limited, has become manager of the Mount Royal theatre, Montreal, which has been sold to James Sperdakis by A. St. Germain. Mr. Sperdakis is also the owner of the Fairyland theatre.

The Lyric theatre, Montreal, has been re-opened under the management of Joseph Monseur.

The Tivoli theatre, one of Montreal's best known moving picture theatres, has been closed temporarily. Arrangements are being made for the re-opening of the theatre with a straight picture policy, it is stated.

The Regent theatre, Calgary, Alberta, recently conducted its "Annual Mid-Winter Comedy Carnival," the programme for which consisted of four of the latest comedy releases. These were "Number Please?", starring Harold Lloyd; "The Head Waiter," starring Larry Semon; "One Week," with Buster Keaton, and Clyde Cook in "Don't Tickle." This bill was presented for a whole week at regular prices with a children's matinee Saturday morning. There were six performances each day, not including the extra show for the children.

A recent important appointment in Canadian moving picture trade circles is that of John Hazza of Edmonton, Alberta, to the post of Western Canadian district manager of the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation. Mr. Hazza has been placed in charge of the territory comprising the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and will supervise the opening of several new theatres for the corporation, the first of which will be the Capitol theatre in Regina, Sask., which is scheduled to open on March 19.

Mr. Hazza was a part owner of the Empress theatre, Edmonton, which was recently acquired by the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation. He is a former Toronto man and a brother of Phil Hazza of Montreal, proprietor of the Amalgamated Exhibitors' Circuit, Limited. Phil was a branch manager of the Canadian Universal for a number of years.

The City Council of Toronto has made a formal request to the Province of Ontario for an abolishment of the Amusement Tax Act, through which the Government collects a tax on all theatre admission tickets. The Toronto City Council recently adopted a motion to ask the Province to repeal the act on the ground that the law was instituted as a war-time measure and, as such, was no longer necessary.

The new Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors, established on January 1 last, is making a name for itself for apparent leniency. Announcement was made recently that a comparatively old picture, "Damaged Goods," had been approved for showing in Ontario to audiences over 16 years of age and the first public presentation of this feature was held at the Toronto Strand starting Monday, March 7. This picture was rejected several times by the old board.

The Ontario censors have also approved "Way Down East," the Griffith production, which was condemned by the Quebec Board early in January for alleged moral reasons. "Way Down East" was presented as a road show with an orchestra of 30 pieces at the Royal Alexandra theatre, Toronto, during the week of February 28 at prices ranging up to $2.

A rather disastrous fire occurred at the Globe theatre, Queen street West, Toronto, Ontario, on Saturday afternoon, February 26, when a film ignited during a performance. The theatre was crowded at the time but the audience used the exits in orderly manner and no one was injured. The projection room and manager's office were burned and the theatre otherwise damaged by smoke and water. The theatre is owned by Arthur Cohen, vice-president and general manager of Regal Films, Limited, Toronto. Mr. Cohen is also the son of Police Magistrate Jacob Cohen of Toronto.

Rennie Abbott, treasurer of the Allen theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, for two years, has been appointed manager of the Gaiety theatre, a well-known and long-established moving picture theatre in the downtown section of Winnipeg.

H. W. Triller, manager of the Queen's theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, was fined $25 and costs by Magistrate Macdonald in the Winnipeg police court because of alleged violation of the Lord's Day Act. Triller denied that he had charged admission for Sunday performances at the theatre but admitted that a sign had been hung up over the entrance which invited patrons to donate 25 cents each.

Charlie Querrie, one of Canada's noted athletes of many years' standing, has been appointed manager of the new Palace theatre, Danforth and Pape avenues, Toronto. This theatre, which was constructed during the past year, is being operated under the direction of the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation and is classed as a suburban neighborhood house. Musical accompaniment of pictures is provided by a ladies' orchestra, the conductor of which is Marjorie Stevens of Toronto.

Ruth Roland, the noted moving picture actress, was the personal guest of Mr. L. E. Ouimet, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Montreal, Canadian distributor of Pathe and other releases, on February 25-27. A feature of her visit to the Canadian Metropolis was a supper-dance which was held in her honor at the Rose Room of the Windsor Hotel, Montreal, on Saturday evening, February 26. Miss Roland made personal appearances at one or two of the local theatres at the request of Mr. Ouimet.

SPARTANBURG, S. C.

Gerald Gallagher, formerly manager of the Imperial theatre, one of the big moving picture houses of Columbia, S. C., has come to this city to assume supervision of the local interests of Southern Enterprises, Inc., which embrace several moving picture theatres. Mr. Gallagher, who is well known in the field, succeeds C. L. Henry, who has resigned to enter other work.

W. A. Biers, who has been in charge of moving picture theatres of the S. A. Lynch chain, at Sumter, has been transferred to Anderson. This move is a distinct promotion and is a recognition of Mr. Biers' efficient work at Sumter. Mr. Biers was formerly in the moving picture theatre field at Greenwood, S. C.

Depression in the cotton growing region of the country has had a telling effect on the patronage of moving picture houses, reports from various sections indicating that a number of houses have closed temporarily. The Strand theatre here, owned by the Southern Enterprises, Inc., has been closed, it being announced that a lack of patronage is responsible for the move. This city has been considered one of the best theatre towns in the state, but the low prices prevailing in the cotton market have had a disastrous effect on movies here. At the present time, the remaining theatres in the city are recording excellent business.

The Dixie theatre, patronized exclusively by the negroes of the city, will, of necessity, close its doors as a result of a real estate deal involving the theatre site. This property has been sold to a local merchant who has announced he will erect a large store building on the site now occupied by the moving picture theatre. Other sites are being considered by the theatre owners and it is considered certain that the theatre will be reestablished in another section of the city.

Henry Ford, the Detroit magnate, has been invited to come to Iredell County, N. C., to inspect the tractor-movie work being done by W. E. Nattress, of the Carolina Motor Company, of Statesville, N. C. Some time ago Mr. Nattress conceived the plan of operating a moving picture machine with Fordson power current, generated by a Fordson farm tractor. The plan proved an instantaneous success and Mr. Nattress is now touring Iredell County, showing pictures illustrating the advantages of plowing with power. The pictures are being shown in schoolhouses and are attracting widespread attention. Mr. Nattress' idea has started North Carolina moving picture men to thinking and predictions are being freely made that the moving picture exhibition field may be revolutionized as a result of the North Carolinian's invention.

C. L. Henry, for thirteen years in charge of local moving picture theatre operated by Southern Enterprises, Inc., has tendered his resignation to take effect on March 12. Mr. Henry has been in active charge of the Bijou and the Rex here, recently reopening the former house after it had been closed for some months.

Mr. Henry has announced that his future plans are not yet formed, but it is rumored that he will head a big local corporation that will launch a large theatre here.

PITTSBURGH

The Harry C. Simeral Enterprises is the new name of the two affiliated exchanges, Copartner Attractions and the Famous Film Exchange. The organization includes the following personnel, Harry C. Simeral, President and General Manager; Earl Forsythe, who is also the owner of the Star Theatre, Cannonsburg, Secretary and Treasurer, and Jack Frazier, formerly of Metro and First National, Office Manager. The sales force includes Jere Spandau, former manager of the Fox Exchange in Albany; Sol Frank, formerly with Robertson-Cole, and M. J. Haskell.

The Hollis-Smith-Morton Co., well known supply house, now located at 1201 Liberty Street, will move to 636 Penn Avenue, on or about the first of May. This will give this concern a location midway between the two film sections.

At a meeting held at the Davis theatre in regard to the music tax, daylight savings plan and the new state legislation a motion was passed providing that every theatre in Western Pennsylvania should be assessed $5 for a fund to combat the Music Publishers' Association. About thirty-four exhibitors attended who represented over seventy theatres in this section.

The Santoy theatre of Paden City, formerly owned by N. J. Seaman, has been purchased by Misses Coe Pomeroy and Miss Elizabeth Gaffney. The theatre will be remodeled and renamed the Liberty.

The most unusual event of the length of a picture playing in a suburban house came to notice when the New Evaline theatre at Evaline and Penn Avenue played "A Child for Sale" an entire week, and played to capacity business at an advanced admission of 33 cents.

George Berkopec and Nick Starsinic have bought the Dome theatre, Butler Street, Pittsburg, from Fred Querner.

A. E. Booth, of the Strand theatre, Kenova, W. Va., will remodel the lobby of his theatre on or about the first of April.

Charlie John, a merchant of Republic, Pa., has opened a 400-seat theatre in the above town. It is called the Grand and is managed by M. M. Dyer.

Roy McShaffrey, manager of the Star theatre, Monessen, Pa., has produced a two-reel comedy entitled the "Thirteenth Proposal" and exhibited the same at his theatre for three days to capacity business.

The Strand theatre, Salem, W. Va., has been bought by H. C. Perine from Mr. Waggoner. Mr. Waggoner has decided to retire from the theatrical and moving picture business.

The Tilford Studio Method of Centralizing Production Needs

An Interview with T. W. Switzler by a News Representative

DUE to numerous requests for information and to satisfy a degree of curiosity on the part of the producers the MOTION PICTURE NEWS recently made an investigation of the methods pursued by the Tilford Cinema Studios, 165 West 31st Street, New York City, in caring for the production wants of producers.

Their method of mounting productions is very unique and seems to have been the one thing that producers, particularly the independent producers have wanted for years, but did not know that they wanted it.

The Tilford Cinema Studios are composed of men who for years have been connected with some of the largest studios in the East. Their work is divided sharply: each one of these men is a specialist in that particular phase of production over which he exerts supervision.

The personnel of the organization are as follows:

Mr. Walter Ford Tilford, Director, In Charge of Decoration; Thomas Wilson Switzler, General Manager; Wiard B. Ihnen, R. A., Architecture and Design; Thurston H. Homedale, Art and Scenic Effects; Thomas B. Sherman, Construction; Stephen Seymour, Decorations; John T. Lascha, Transportation.

They work on any one of three basic principles.

A.—The producer roughly indicates approximately the character of the production he desires and the Tilford experts submit figures for which they will do it.

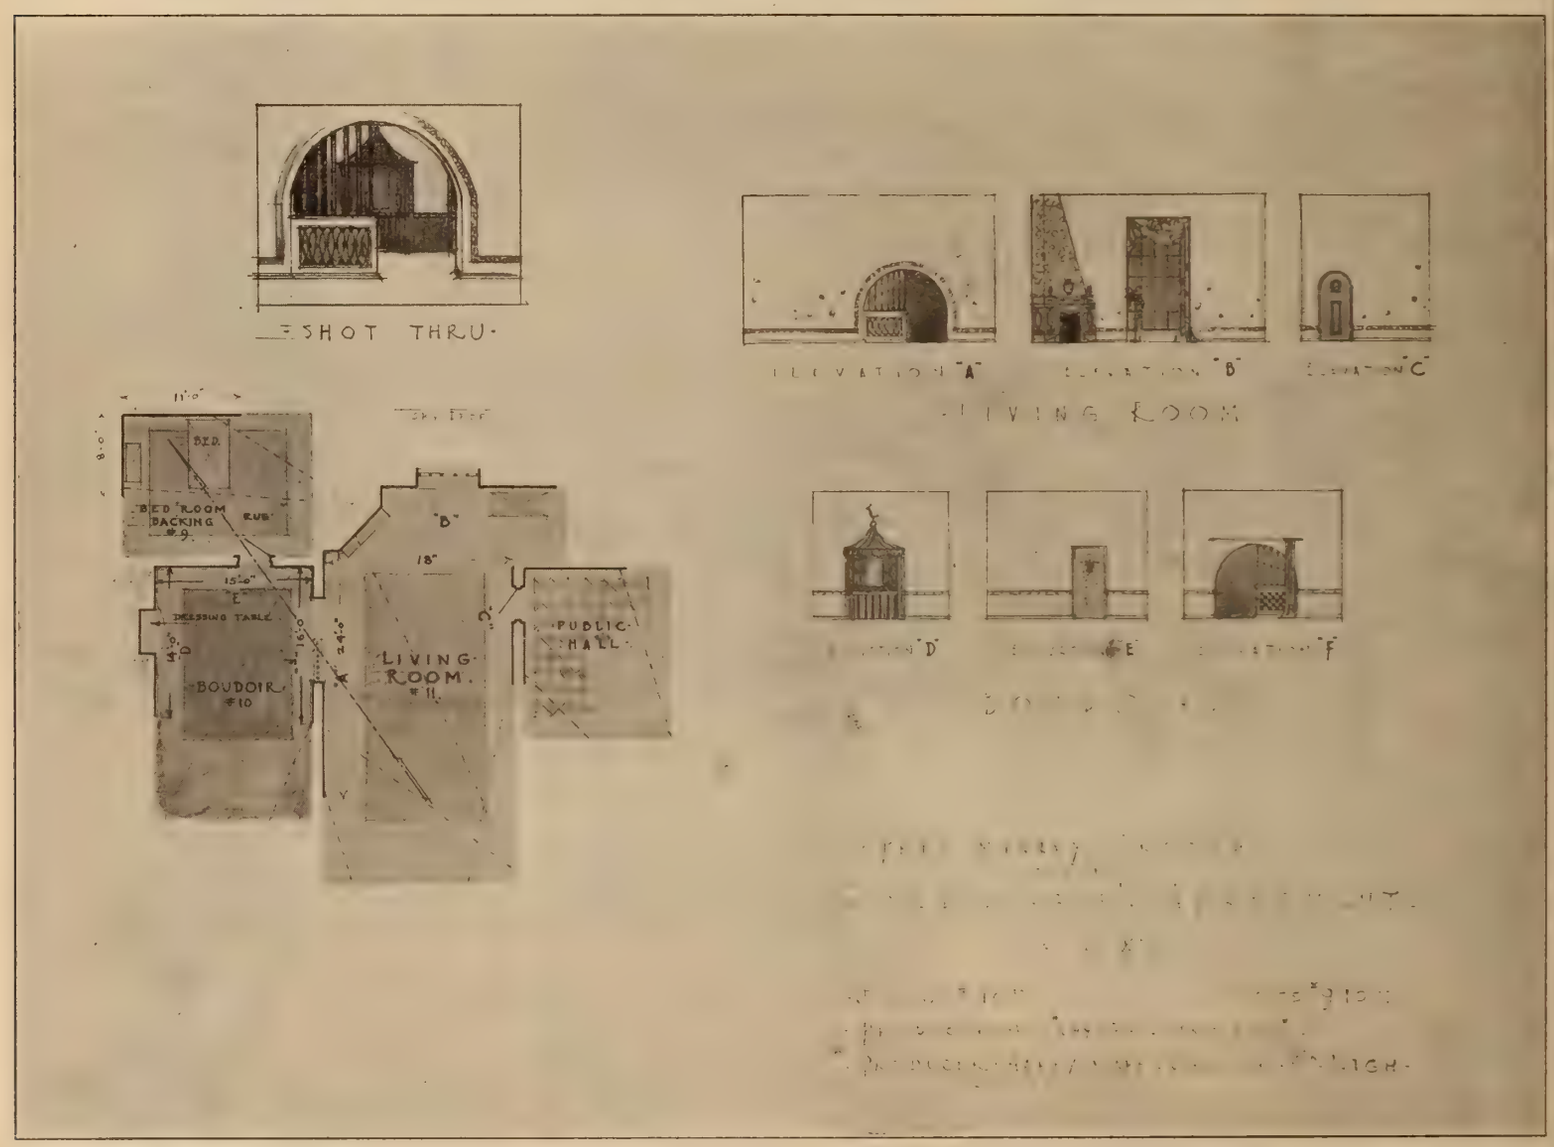
B.—The producer will give the approximate figure he can allot for settings and they will submit to him what can be secured for that sum.

C.—Cost Plus. The cost not including technical or other supervision.

The modus operandi seems to be as follows: The producer will give over to them his continuity and suggest the studio he desires to work in. After a few days complete sketches, showing floor plans, elevation, color schemes and decorations will be submitted for each set called for in the continuity. These settings ar based on the type of characters called for i the story who abide therein or frequent such settings, in other words, the settings are de signed with a view of showing the kind o places people really live, work and enjoy themselves in, getting away with the old idea o "movie settings" into the new idea of sincerity in backgrounds.

Furthermore, the make up of the settings i developed, bearing in mind always that th camera is to record what is built. Also bear ing in mind the various "camera angles" an "shots," "vistas," "shots through," etc., th beauty of which often enhances the plaines of settings. Where special light effects can b utilized recommendations for their use ar suggested to the director. The ordinary an average lighting is left up to the director an his camera-man.

In each production there are several setting where there is action of very brief but important nature.



This is an example of the work of the Tilford Studios. The sketches show (left) the entire layout of the set with all four rooms in their proper relationship. At the right are details of the several elevations and the scheme of decoration handling of the talent and the picture itself. The overhead of the Tilford organization being split up through the various contracts upon which they are working to the advantage of each contract. Through long experience in the securing of materials and properties they know the markets much better and by quantity purchases can secure lower prices than the individual producer. Likewise no question of credit arises with the producer as all the business transactions involved are between the vendor and the Tilford Cinema Studios. The only payments necessary by the producer are his talent, direction and camera salaries and the weekly payment to the Tilford organization.

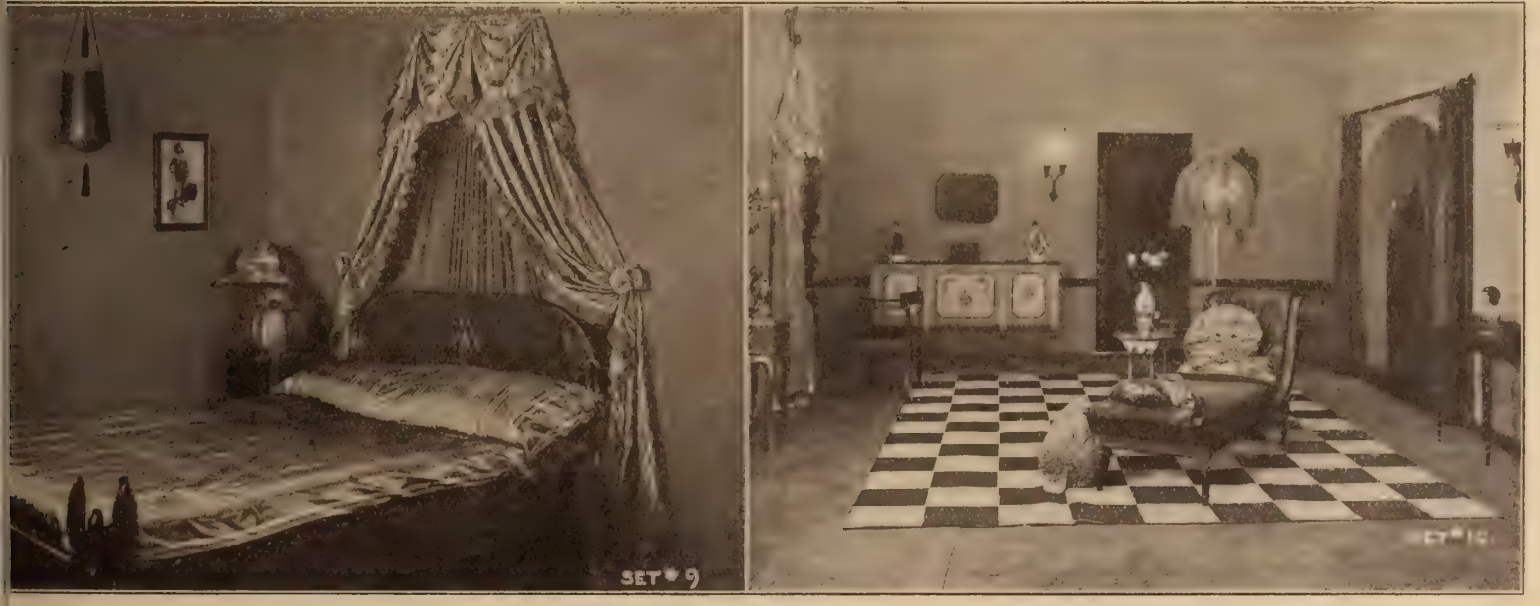
In answer to a request for an illustration of their Methods, Mr. Tilford and Mr. Ihnen both decided the settings as shown on page ?? as an average type of setting used in modern production. To illustrate their method of production the sketches and elevations shown on page 2256 in this instance, first were submitted to Mr. Harry Rapf, representing Warner Bros., and gone over carefully with Mr. Nigh, his director.

The settings were then constructed and decorated, according to the plans and the photographs as shown are the result.

It is far cheaper for the producer to make all his corrections and changes on the basis of such plans than it is for him to make such changes after the settings are completed or partially completed. This is true whether he has his own staff or contracts the work. Independent producers especially find it difficult to accumulate a highly skilled staff of studio artisans for the period of one or two pictures. By adopting the Tilford method this is obviated as they work much the same as an architect, who designs and supervises several jobs simultaneously, each job getting the full benefit of the skilled supervision of the architect himself.



ferring from these "stills" to the drawings on the opposite page it will be seen how closely the original conception was adhered to in the construction and decoration of the bedroom and boudoir sets

Business-Pulling THEATRE FRONT

ELLANAY THEATRE
EL PASO, TEXAS
H. M. BENTELL, Architect.
White and Polychrome Terra Cotta

THERE'S real business-pulling power in the Terra Cotta front of the Ellanay Theatre. People can't help being attracted by its colorful beauty and the broad white expanse of the tile pattern fields. The delicate ornamental details of the arch, frieze and cornice are further accentuated by beautiful ceramic colors,—mostly brown, orange, ivory and green,—while the arts of painter and sculptor are permanently combined in the handsome bas-relief over the main entrance, depicting "The Dance".

Formerly such business-pulling attractiveness was rare in motion-picture theatres. But today exhibitors realize the value of specially designed playhouses, and leading architects from coast to coast specialize in designing imposing and attractive exteriors.

Because of its unlimited range of form and color, Terra Cotta is the favorite material for large and small theatres. No design is too simple, no scheme of decoration too ornate, to find adequate expression in this most adaptable of all building materials.

The maintenance expense of Terra Cotta is practically negligible. There is no replacement or patching to be considered. The crisp, clean details do not chip nor do the colors fade. Terra Cotta is permanent; created by fire it resists fire. The dirt accumulated by age or the elements can be washed right off with soap and water and the original clean, lustrous surface restored.

Consider the beauty, permanence, and economy of Terra Cotta. Can there be any question of its value for motion-picture theatre construction? Wouldn't it make your theatre front a bigger business-puller? For your own information, send for the new brochure, "The Theatre". It shows prosperous motion-picture houses all over the country, all built of Terra Cotta. Address National Terra Cotta Society, 1 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y.

Chair Covers Are a Summer Necessity

AS a final touch of distinctive beauty for a theatre interior, chair covers appeal to the discriminating exhibitor. Not only are they a means of transforming the interior of a theatre, so as to make it appear summery, cool, attractive and healthful, but lend a tone of smartness and luxury to the general appearance of the theatre, that cannot be gained in any other way.

Chair covers represent the most careful thought in the selection of materials and design, and they embody the experience of highly talented textile experts, who for years have specialized in textile specialties. For this reason perfect-fit theate chair covers, must not be confused with "throw overs" or "slip covers" as their fits are accurate and are manufactured "reversible" with a French seam reinforced, with tape binding, and are marked with laundering ink according to their respective sizes. Therefore, when the covers are placed over the chair backs, they are perfect in fit and form a part of the chair and not a mere attachment. The Blue Print Seating Arrangement Plan of the Textile Specialties Co., insures permanent accuracy in fit.

Chair covers should be made of materials that have been selected from the finest chair cover materials. Patterns and fashions should harmonize with color scheme and appeal to the most discriminating persons. The cloth should be non-shrinking and laundry as nicely as a shirt-waist, table cloth or any other washable material, retaining their fresh, clean appearance during the life of the covers.

Per-Fect-Fit theatre chair covers, after final inspection, are packed according to sizes and a blue print seating arrangement plan is furnished representing the same sizes as per the stamps on the covers, and as per row in the theatre so that porters, cleaners, or ushers can install them with ease. This careful method of packing and information, facilitates the handling of the covers without any possible confusion.

Pioneer Detroit Exhibitor Visits Simplex Plant

Mr. A. P. Lombard of the Simplex Organization, derived considerable pleasure recently in piloting Mr. Sam Ackerman of Detroit, through the spacious Simplex plant with its many interesting departments.

Mr. Lombard, who for some time managed the Simplex office in Detroit, has many friends in the automobile city, and not a few Detroit exhibitors make a trip through the Simplex factory a part of their New York itinerary.

Mr. Ackerman operates the East Side theatre in Detroit and besides being one of the oldest Exhibitors there, he has the distinction of having purchased one of the first Simplexes that were installed in the city made famous by Henry Ford. This installation was quickly followed by many other progressive Exhibitors, with the result that today, Detroit stands very high among those cities that are Simplex-equipped in the majority.

Lester Developing Site in Columbia, S. C.

Approximately $400,000 will be expended by L. T. Lester, Jr., moving picture theatre magnate, in developing his theatre property at Columbia, S. C., it was announcing today. Mr. Lester has just acquired extensive realty holdings in the heart of the business district of Columbia and is now prepared to invest a vast sum in their conversion into first class theatres.

Mr. Lester, who already is classed as one of the largest individual moving picture theatre promoters in the South, operates several moving picture houses in the South Carolina capital, and his new holdings will put him far in the lead of his competitors in this line. His latest purchase is Agricultural Hall, located on Main Street, Columbia, next door to the Columbia Theatre, and situated ideally with reference to patronage. Mr. Lester will construct a six-story hotel in the front section of this enormous structure and will have his new theatre in rear of the hostelry.

The theatre, which Mr. Lester plans to construct in the rear of Agricultural Hall, will be modern in every respect, he announced. It will have a width of 77 feet and will be so arranged that the rearmost seats will be much nearer the screen than is usually the case in theatres of similar dimensions. The balconies, too, will be constructed as near the stage as the acoustics of the building will permit, as Mr. Lester plans to add vaudeville to his program.

L. T. Lester owns a controlling interest in every theatre in Columbia except the Imperial. He has on his string the Ideal, the Rivoli, the Rialto, the Broadway, the Royal, the Lincoln and the Rex. The city of Columbia owns the Columbia theatre, Mr. Lester's lease on this house having expired some days ago.

In addition to his plans for a new house, Mr. Lester has closed a contract for the installation of a $20,000 pipe organ in the Rivoli theatre and also for the erection of a stage in that movie house. Frequent improvements in Mr. Lester's holdings have been necessitated because of unprecedented patronge. —(Keeney.)

Barton Announces Ne Organ Model

THE idea of the original Barton Orga been retained in every respect, but num refinements and improvements have been a The Barton Organ is unique inasmuch a manufacturers claim an instrument espe designed for motion picture theatres and a ed for no other use. This together with the that Mr. Barton spent many years as a sician playing in theatres gave him an in into the exact requirements needed.

The Barton Organ does not use any unif duplexing, borrowing or double touch, but h separate and distinct set of pipes for organ stop represented at the key desk, giving the instrument a great variety of color and being a type of instrument recogr by musicians as having the greatest mu possibilities.

The appearance of the console or key de worthy of especial note. It is massive in pearance and is most beautifully finishec genuine mahogany. The console in itself decided ornament in a theatre.

The instrumentation of the Barton Orga strictly orchestral, the instruments being nished with stops representing the string tion, brass, wood, wind and foundation tone an orchestra, as well as a heavy Diapason the softer qualities of the Muted Viols, I cianos, Gemshorns and other beautifully to solo effects. The Xylophone, Marimba, Orc tra Bells, Cathedral Chimes, Bird Effe Storm, Crash, etc., are operated by a pater direct electric action which has a guara backed by years of use in motion picture th tres on Bartola instruments manufactured the Bartola Co.

Mr. Barton has introduced in the Barton gan a new invention, which is the first gr improvement made in pipe organs in m years. It is known as the Divided Manual with this arrangement, the musical possibili of the pipe organ are more than double.

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

Are you thoroughly familiar with the ventilation problem?

Do you know that fresh air blown in from above, or through the roof of a theatre—is the correct method?

Are you acquainted with the system that blows air on your feet, making it necessary to breathe the dust and dirt from the street?

And of course, you know the old buzz fan, that churns up the same old foul air—and annoys your patrons?

Install the TYPHOON SYSTEM now and keep your patrons coming all through the long hot summer months.

Let us tell you more about the correct method—THE TYPHOON WAY.

Typhoon Fan Engineer Takes Exception to Recent Article on Ventilation

Emphasizes in a Letter to the Editor the Points That Might Be Easily Misconstrued

Technical Editor,
Motion Picture News.

In your issue of March 19th, pages 2094, 2096 and 2098, appears an article by Mr. Henry D. Nathan entitled "Ventilation—What It is; Why Necessary and How It is Done."

On the greater portion of the article we have no comment to make, but on that portion which mentions the Typhoon System, we, as an interested party, claim the right to controvert and refute the adverse arguments presented. As Mr. Nathan himself states that the objections which he presents "may or may not be justified," it would have been very much fairer both to your readers and to us, had he first convinced himself whether they were justified. Certainly if they were not justified, he should not have presented them in his article. So much for the ethics of the case.

As to the facts:—Mr. Nathan enters the objection that the Typhoon System "May be noisy, create such a rapid movement of air as to cause drafts, etc. (particularly below where it enters) ——." Ignoring the fact that the "etc." as used is not very illuminating as to just what the Typhoon System "creates," we wish to state most emphatically that any ventilating system may be noisy. The Typhoon System, designed by Typhoon engineers and installed under their supervision, is not noisy and no ventilating system when properly designed is noisy.

As to draughts, Mr. Nathan should know that the ill effects of a draught on the human body are due entirely to the manner in which the body is exposed. A person summering on the seashore might say "I am here to enjoy the ocean draughts," but offsetting that one person there are thousands in their right mind who would preferably say "ocean breezes"—the analogy being that the Typhoon System furnishes breezes, not draughts.

Mr. Nathan also speaks (as one of his objections "which may or may not be justified") of "the tendency at times to cause foul-smelling, tepid air to be blowing into the faces of waiting people in the lobby every time the doors are opened." Auditoriums are usually designed with a minimum of 90 cubic feet of contents for each seat and, in modern theatres, as much as 300 cubic feet of contents is provided. The Typhoon Cooling System is designed to change the entire air in an auditorium once every minute. The Typhoon Cooling System, therefore, according to the design of the building, will provide from 90 cubic feet to 300 cubic feet per minute per person, and, as the requirements for average ventilation demand but 30 cubic feet per minute per person, it requires only a rudimentary knowledge of arithmetic to see that the Typhoon Cooling System provides from three to ten times the quantity of air required for adequate ventilation. Now, if Mr. Nathan will agree that 30 cubic feet per minute per person means average ventilation, if he will agree that absence of odors is a requisite of perfect ventilation, perhaps he will explain to our eager intellects just why three to ten times that quantity of air will result in "four smelling, tepid air." As a matter of fact, when the doors are opened in a Typhoon cooled theatre, the waiting crowds are treated to a cooling and refreshing breeze which truly makes that theatre "the coolest place south of the North Pole."

Mr. Nathan speaks knowingly of air washers, duct systems and Mushroom Ventilators. Perhaps Mr. Nathan will tell us just where the benefits lie for the man who breathes washed air for three hours in a theatre and then breathes unwashed air for the other twenty-one hours of that particular day. Perhaps Mr. Nathan will supply our ardent longing for information by explaining why Mushroom Ventilators provide "the ideal system" when the air, after leaving the Mushrooms, passes first through the dust and odors of his audience's feet and then trapezes gaily past his audience's noses on its way to the ceiling outlet.

Please permit us, now, in fairness, to tell your readers what the Typhoon System really is and really does.

The Typhoon System has been evolved by experienced engineers for the adequate cooling, heating and ventilating of theatres. It has been developed to provide such results at a low cost of installation and with a minimum cost for operation. No special apparatus is used which will require the services of experienced engineers and no equipment is installed which demands expensive upkeep.

As to what the Typhoon System does, we will merely quote from an article in the April, 1920, Journal of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers entitled "Ventilation of Large Auditoriums": "There is still another system which I shall mention in order to get it under discussion, and that is the downfeed system, where the fresh air (cooled or heated) is supplied through the main ceiling and the foul air exhausted at the floor line. Carefully designed, it is my opinion that this is the best method of air distribution for a large auditorium." The article is by Mr. R. S. M. Wilde, who is not and never has been connected with this organization.

In conclusion, permit us to state that if Mr. Nathan has offered all his objections to the Typhoon System in his recent article, we feel certain that he will be a Typhoon adherent when he has had sufficient experience to merit serious consideration. There are over a thousand theatre owners throughout the country who own and operate Typhoon Systems who will willingly tell him how well satisfied they are with their choice for cooling, heating and ventilating their houses.

We sincerely deplore the use of the news columns of your paper as a means of disseminating misinformation regarding the Typhoon System. We welcome at all times constructive criticism but feel justified in stalwartly resenting and resolutely refuting slanderous innuendo whenever and wherever it appears.

Andrew J. Corcoran Dies Suddenly

Andrew J. Corcoran, inventor and manufacturer of the Corcoran Developing Tanks used in most of the motion picture laboratories throughout the world, died suddenly at his home in Jersey City, last Monday.

Mr. Corcoran was born in Dublin, Ireland, eighty years ago and came to this country at the age of 8 years. He engaged in the trade of blacksmith near Syracuse, N. Y., and it was there that he invented the self regulating windmill that first brought him fame. After the Civil War, he moved his factory to Jersey City and at the same time enlarged his line of manufactured products. He was one of the first to appreciate the growth of the motion picture industry and almost from the first has maintained a leading position among the firms supplying equipment for it.

Mr. Corcoran leaves two daughters and two sons, the latter carrying on the business started by their father.

If You Made Your Own Floor Covering —

You would build sturdy durability all the way through—you would make it easy to clean in order to lessen your upkeep bills—you would have it soundproof, soft underfoot.

In other words, you would make a floor-covering identical with Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum.

Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum measures up to and overtops every one of these requirements—it even exceeds the specifications of the U. S. Navy. More than that, it bears a positive guarantee of "Satisfaction guaranteed or your money back", no other floor-covering sold bears such a liberal pledge of satisfaction and safety for the purchaser.

Springy, easy to clean, attractive, remarkably durable, Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is both built and guaranteed for satisfaction. Made in soft restful shades of brown or green.

Gold-Seal Cork Carpet

If you want absolutely silent floors in your theatre—lay Gold-Seal Cork Carpet. Velvety soft and springy, this wonderful floor-covering deadens all sound of footsteps and is as yieldingly cushion-like underfoot as the heaviest woven rug or carpet.

Made in soft shades of green, brown and terra cotta—with polished or dull surface—ten pleasing shades in all. Remarkably durable—satisfactory service and wear guaranteed by the Gold-Seal Guarantee.

If you have a floor-covering problem, put it up to our Service Department—they will be glad to help you. Write our nearest office for samples of these quality floor-coverings, and specifications for laying.

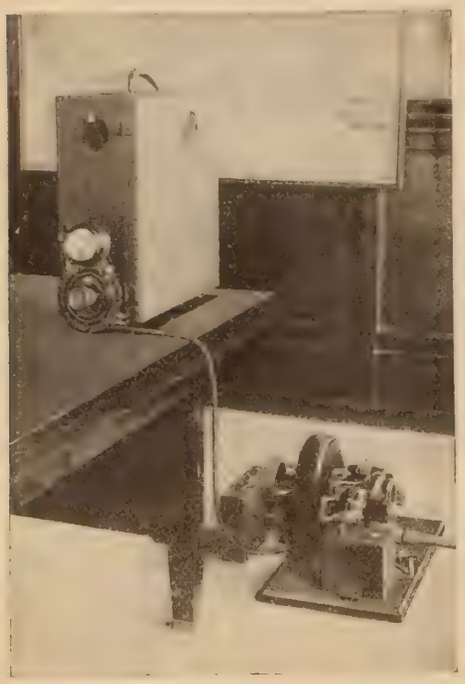
A Portable Outfit of Many Features

The combination portable projector and light plant, manufactured by the United Theatre Equipment Corp., and designed by J. H. Hallberg, has been perfected for the express purpose of filling a long felt want in the small communities where lighting service is not immediately available. With this set which weighs only 115 pounds complete with projector and power plant it is possible to project or review films at any place with a minimum of trouble and delay.



Portable Plant Operating Projector

The projector itself follows along the usual type of the "suit-case" machine. Fig. 2 shows the projector with side opened. It is built for standard film only and is said to be able to project a 9 x 12 picture at distances up to 80 feet. A method of light control makes it possible to stop the machines while a single frame is projected on the screen for lecture purposes.

The power plant consists of a gasolene motor and a small generator, the latter being belt-driven from the motor. The construction of the plant follows rugged lines, although the weight and size are surprisingly small. The plant measures only 17" x 23" and is 15" in height. It requires but one pint of gasoline and ¾ ounce of oil per hour running at ufll capacity. When the projector is not demanding the output it may be used for lighting the auditorium or room in which it is being used. It will operate 10 twenty watt, 32 volt lamps for this purpose.

New Intermittent to be Described

The Papers Committee of the S. M. P. A. report another interesting paper to be delivered at the Spring Convention on the subject of the "Shuestick Intermittent Movement" by R. P. Burrows.

The paper will point out the advantages of this type of movement as applied to a projector. An instantaneous film velocity curve for this movement will be shown in comparison with similar curves of two other commercial movements. An application of this movement eliminating tension shoes will also be described.

New Theatres Building

The new theatre being built by Mr. Wright at Girard, Pa., will be open on or about the first of May. It will be called the Liberty and will have a seating capacity of 400.

Herman Stahl's new $250,000 theatre in Farrel, Pa., will be ready in about two weeks. With the addition of this theatre it will give Mr. Stahl a chain of three theatres, two in Farrel and one in Oil City, Pa.

Messrs. Evans Ryalls and Thomas Jordan have been granted a license to operate a theatre in Milton, W. Va., and will open a theatre very shortly. Milton is about twenty minutes' ride from Huntington.

Joseph Modi of Mannington, W. Va., and also formerly owner of the Idle Hour theatre in Washington, has purchased a theatre in Barnesville, O.

The Y. & O. Coal Co. of Yorkville, O., has opened a community theatre in Glen Robin, O., for the benefit of its employees.

The Hallberg Portable Projector

Sol Burka of the Hippodrome theatre, Fairmont, has bought a lot on Main street, Fairmont, to build a vaudeville house which will hold 1220 seats. Affiliated with Mr. Burka are Jake Linn of the Dixie theatre, Fairmont, Rube Robinson of Wheeling and Gus Sun of Springfield. Mr. Burka has also taken over the lease on the Columbia theatre, Pittsburg, and has also purchased lots in Wheeling, Huntington and Parkersburg for sites of new theatres.

J. M. Plymale and Ed. Smith of Ceredo, W. Va., are building a theatre in the above town to seat about 250.

A new 1000 seat theatre is being built by Mr. Keener of Weston, W. Va., in the above town. The theatre will be under the management of Workman Bros., who also control the New Strand theatre in conjunction with Mr. Keener.

Bluefield, W. Va., is to have a new 800 seat theatre. It will be built and managed by Sol Kaufman and Robert Peters, who own another theatre in the same town. Another theatre is contemplated in the near future by S. L. Matz which will seat 700.

The Corry Amusement Co., of Corry, Pa., owners of the New Rex theatre, have purchased the Grand theatre, formerly owned by C. E. Gable of Sharon, Pa.

The Liberty theatre, New Salem, Pa., has been bought by Queenie Capouzzi, who also owns the Princess theatre in Republic, Pa.

A Study of the Reflection Characteristics of Projection Screens

By Lloyd A. Jones and Milton F. Fillius

In the past a Screen has been a Screen and not much else. It has taken Messrs. Jones and Fillius in their paper printed below which was delivered originally before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to identify the absolute characteristics of motion picture screens. This paper is the most helpful that has come to our attention this year.

Materials Examined

Orders for samples of the commercial projection screens were placed with practically every maker whose advertisement could be located in the trade journals. Response was not obtained from all makers, but a fairly representative group of samples was received. The standard samples were prepared by mounting a piece of the projection screen 8 inches square on a thin metal plate, thus insuring flatness of the sample under examination. In addition to the commercial screens mentioned, several miscellaneous surfaces of interest were examined.

In Table I is given a complete list of the materials measured.

The surface of the magnesium carbonate sample (1) was prepared by carefully scraping a block of the material with a steel straightedge. The opal glass (2) was of the best quality obtainable for uniformity and whiteness, and the surface was carefully ground. The white blotting paper (3) was of the ordinary commercial quality used extensively in photographic work. The photographic stock (4) was a sample of uncalendered and uncoated material. No. 5 was of the same material but treated with the ordinary baryta coating. The drawing paper (6) was the commercial grade of Wattman's hot pressed. Sample No. 7 was prepared by sandblasting a sheet of aluminum. No. 8 was made by sandblasting the front surface of an ordinary plate glass mirror. No. 9 consists of a screen made by superposing a sample of the material such as is commonly used as the focusing screen in photographic apparatus upon the surface of an ordinary plate glass mirror.

The commercial screens examined are also listed in Table 1, beginning with sample No. 10. In the name column is given the trade name applied by the manufacturer to the screen. In the "texture" column is a qualitative statement of the character of the surface, while in the "color" column is a qualitative statement of the color. The terms used in specifying texture and color are very general in nature, no precise quantitative measurements being made of these characteristics.

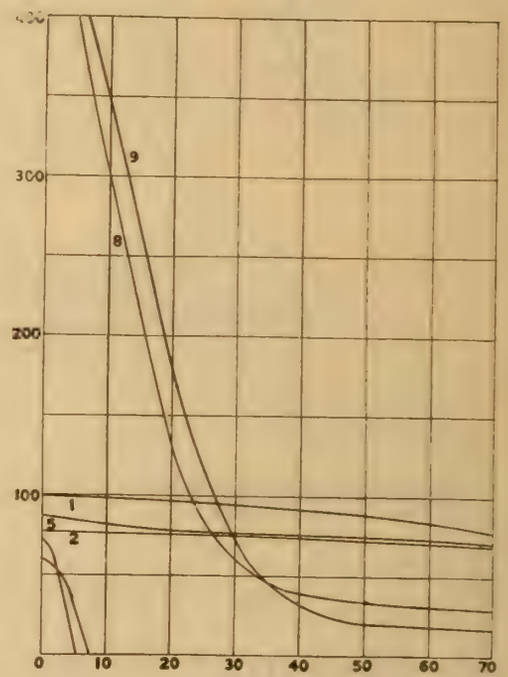

Fig. 3—Distribution curves of miscellaneous surfaces

An examination of the characteristics of these screens shows that they can be roughly grouped into three general classes which may be specified as follows: Included in Class C are those screens which give almost complete diffusion of the incident light. Class A includes those which reflect a large proportion of the incident light within a very narrow angle, and very little light at the greater angles. Class B includes the screens which are intermediate between the extremes represented by Classes A and B. It should be understood that the line of demarkation between these three classes is not distinct but that such classification is entirely arbitrary and made only for the purpose of practical convenience.

The names specular, semi-diffuse, and diffuse may conveniently be applied in the classes A, B and C, respectively. The indication of the class to which each screen belongs is given by the letter in the "class" column of Table 1.

Results

In Table 2 are given the reflecting powers at the various angles of the miscellaneous surfaces examined, while in Table 3 are the detailed data relative to the reflection characteristics of the twenty-seven commercial screens examined. In order to present these data in more graphic form they are plotted as curves in the following figures, the ordinates in all cases being values of relative reflecting powers and the abscissae the angles of observation to which the various reflecting powers apply.

The sample to which the curve applies is in all cases indicated by attaching the sample number. In Figure 3 are given the curves for the mirror with the sandblasted surface, and with superposed focusing screen. It will be noted that the values at normal observation are extremely high, but that the values diminish very rapidly as the angle of observation increases. Curves for samples Nos. 1, 2 and 5 are also given in this figure.

Projection Room at Ambassador Theatre, Los Angeles, is Model of Completeness

Arrangement of Rooms and Equipment Gives Projectionists Absolute Control From All Points

WHEN Gore Brothers & Sol Lesser added the new Ambassador theatre to their list they realized that the clientele of this theatre would be one of the most critical, consequently, they have spared no efforts in equipping the new theatre to meet the most exacting demands.

Many theatre owners seem to think that their patrons are chiefly interested in garish interiors, pretentious lobbies and care little for anything else. This erroneous opinion is not held by the successful theatre men of today. The new Ambassador theatre is not garish but it is most artistic. The lounging room with its luxurious furnishings is most pleasing and restful. The theatre itself, will be a pleasant surprise, for those who will visit it to seek the best in motion pictures.

The task of furnishing all of these many details has been placed in charge of men who are experts in their particular line. In this case the matter of projection, which is so often slighted, has been given its due consideration and the results obtained are sure to prove the wisdom of Messrs. Gore Bros. and Lesser, who realize that good projection is probably the greatest asset of a successful theatre.

Mr. Art Smith, who is supervising projectionist for the Gore Bros. and Lesser circuit, has had complete charge of the installation of the projection equipment. Mr. Smith has had considerable experience in this line of work. He had charge of the installation at Grauman's theatre when that house was opened and supervised the remodeling of the projection room at the Kinema, as well as many others.

Mr. Smith deserves credit for the very systematic and complete layout at the new Ambassador. The projection department consists of three adjoining rooms, the motor generator, the projection, and the cutting room. This is the first time that this scheme has been carried out in this territory and its advantages are obvious to experienced men.

This scheme reduces the fire hazard considerably, makes it possible for the projectionist to attend to his many duties in a systematic and efficient manner. He is able to view the picture on the screen from any one of these three rooms.

The cutting room will be equipped with cabinets for all stereopticon slides, pieces of films and other accessories. A special rewind, designed by Mr. Smith, will be installed here, which will be driven with a variable speed motor, so that rapid inspection or assembly of the film is possible.

The projection room is of ample size and very well arranged. The two type "S" Simplex projectors, finished in battleship grey, will be equipped with several special features, including magnetic shutter dousers.

A signal system in conjunction with the house telephone is installed on the front wall between the two projectors. Speedometers will register the speed of the film at all times. The much neglected item of ventilation will receive proper attention, each projector being vented directly outside through the roof. Both the motor generator and cutting rooms will receive ample amounts of fresh air.

The electrical installation in this projection room is novel in many respects. Mr. Smith has invented a scheme for controlling both the projectors, spot and stereopticon lights from any one of the three positions along the front wall. The projectionist is thereby enabled to have perfect control of his lights at all time and can secure perfect results on the screen. The use of strings and other objectionable features is eliminated by this scheme.

When it came to selecting a motor generator set that would be strictly reliable and would take care of all the arc lights including the spot and stereopticon, Mr. Smith selected a 90-ampere Westinghouse equipment, similar to the one he installed at Grauman's theatre. An enclosed switchboard mounted in the wall between the motor generator and projection rooms, provides all necessary switching equipment and fuse protection. This scheme also employs the minimum run of conduit and wires.

A very novel switching scheme for controlling all of the electrical operations in changing the picture from one projector to another with a single switch has been worked out by Mr. H. F. O'Brien of the Los Angeles office of the Westinghouse Company. This one switch controls both the motors and shutter dousers so that a perfect change over is possible with greatly simplified operations.

The ammeter-voltmeter panel is mounted on the wall within vision of the projectionist, and the automatic rewind will be within convenient reach on the rear wall.

From this description it is apparent that careful thought has been given to this layout to make it neat, efficient, safe, and practical. The completed installation will be a decided improvement in its line and the best results will be assured because of the fact that these details have received their due consideration, by experts. It is consoling to know that the most successful theatres realize this to be the best practice.

We here present the picture of Clem Rizzo, who is business director for the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 307, Philadelphia, Pa. Mr. Rizzo, who is one of the most popular and practical operators in the city, is a practical electrician, machinist, and is thoroughly familiar with the leading makes of Moving Picture Machines. He has been chief operator and electrician at the New Strand theatre on Germantown Avenue ever since the theatre opened. Mr. Rizzo takes a deep interest in all of the operators under him who are reliable and qualified for the business, and he sees that they are well taken care of, but he has no love for the crank turner who is a shirk, and does not give value received for the money he draws.

Camera Laboratory Picture Making Studio Technique

The Important Part of the Laboratory in the Industry

Discussed by Tom Evans, Widely Known Laboratory Expert

Right here it would not be amiss to call the producers' attention to the fact that they can be of great help in conserving their negatives and in getting the most and the best out of them. This they can do by allowing sufficient time to the laboratory and not rush it as they have been accustomed of doing since the very inception of the motion picture,—a custom, alas! that shows no sign of abatement. Some producers delight in making a picture in a leisurely manner, but when it comes to getting the prints made, the rush habit seems to take possession of them, and the laboratory is given a day to do the work that requires a week's time. Time is every bit as essential as latest machinery, skilled workers, etc., to do quality work.

Perforating

The life of a reel of film is too often shortened by poor perforations. A film thus badly handicapped cannot travel far, jagged holes in perforating will cause each step, where the weakened portion comes in contact with a sprocket, to weaken still more; in fact every bit of handling just assists in the rapid dissolution of the film. A roll of film badly started once in use soon goes to pieces. Improper alignment of sprockets in many of the theatres breaks down a reel in jig time, and the distributor gets back his prints with a mass of broken perforations. Attempts to patch up the pictures are always unsatisfactory because parts of scenes or entire scenes are taken out, which spoils the action and the continuity of the story. It is absolutely necessary, therefore, that each and every roll of film be started right and perforated carefully, accurately and cleanly. This means more money and more satisfaction to the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor. The cause of jumpy pictures is frequently traceable to imperfect perforations. When the negative has been badly perforated no laboratory in the world can remedy the trouble.

Printing

A picture on the screen speaks for itself and for everyone who has had a hand in its making. When portions of a picture look normal and others lighter, the fault is sometimes the printer's for having been negligent, if one has a sharp negative to work with. Improper contact in the channel of the printing machine between negative and positive will cause the latter to be blurred and hazy.

Machines and lamps are unable to look after themselves; they are in need of constant attention. To avoid trouble and complaints they should be tested quite frequently. Not many laboratories realize the actinic value of lamps. To buy a job lot of lamps, put them in the printing machines and trust to luck is both foolish and criminal. When the right kind of lamp has been purchased the first thing to do is to determine its actinic value. Test each and every lamp, and cast aside the ones that do not come up to the standard. At stated periods it is well to determine the evenness of exposure upon all the machines. This is done by making what is known as the comparative test.

Motors should run in perfect synchronism. To insure this the motors should be oiled at given intervals and thoroughly tested not once in a blue moon but often. Never should a motor be allowed to run until it stops of its own accord.

One of the surest methods of destroying a negative is that of making several prints without giving it the once-over. After printing a few rolls the negative should be taken out of the printing room, looked over carefully, the weak splices strengthened and polished thoroughly. It takes but an exceedingly minute bit of dirt to scratch up a negative; and a mutilated, dirty negative greatly impairs the quality.

Developing

A very important factor in this branch of the laboratory end of the picture industry is buying nothing but the very best and standard make of chemicals. A thorough test should be mad of each and every chemical before it is put int the solution.

Mixing of chemicals is a process that require knowledge plus care. Sad to relate this work i often done by men having but a smattering o the chemicals they use and who rely almos entirely on luck. Established formulas are o some help, but they cannot remedy the ill use o rusty, old pails or buckets, or receptacles tha are also used for tints, tones and hypo. Filtere or distilled water alone should be used for mix ing chemicals. The ancient, rusty water boile good enough for some will always harm th solution, which of course does the film no good Many a costly negative has been junked as direct result of inefficient mixing of chemicals

There are plants that are far from bein clean. Cleanliness is never so much next t Godliness as when it is found in a film labora tory. Quality cannot be attained by pulling th developing racks all over a floor covered wit developer, hypo, mud and dirt. Racks shoul be properly cleaned before using, as dirty rack carry all sorts of muck into the developer, whic has a way of clinging to the negative or posi tive, and, unless it is properly washed dry int the emulsion, causes a lot of unsightly specks to mar the finished picture.

Many people employed to do the developing are merely "guess developers." It is the "hit or miss" variety that miss all the time. No laboratory that takes pride in its work allows the "guess developers" to etner its portals.

When the test strip is made, the time of development is carefully noted and recorded, so many parts of a picture from the same roll developed at the same time, thus insuring evenness of development. There are laboratories that put in the rolls without any semblance of order, and consequently the development is uneven instead of uniform.

The time of development is at variance in most of the plants. Some develop in two minutes, while others do it still faster. Film should never be developed in les sthan four minutes; four and one half to five minutes is the proper time of development, for it is this proper development that brings out the rich half tones that are so essential in photographic manipulation. The ideal result may be defined as one correctly exposed or timed, neither over- nor under-developed, without stain, discoloration or defects, full of detail in the shadows and half tones, with a certain crispness in highest lights of the subject or respective scenes, and clear, clean titles with sharp letters and black background. Some people prolong development in the hope of getting more detail in the shadows. When development is too rapid, there is an entire lack of detail and the general effect is blurred or muddy.

From a developing point of view there is nothing worse to look at than a subject with unevenly developed rolls throughout its entirety. Unevenness is sometimes caused by lack of proper control of temperature conditions, or temperature of the developing solution. The proper temperature of a bath should not be under 65 nor over 68 degrees Fahrenheit.

A slightly dark and light effect seen on certain portions of a picture is sometimes due to the carelessness of the developer in pulling his rack partly out of the tank and leaving part of it to develop more rapidly than the other while he is endeavoring to find out how far development has been carried. The cause may also be due to the racks not being fully immersed in the solution. Still again, a tank of developer not thoroughly mixed will cause no end of trouble. A series of white spots occurring ever so often across the entire screen means that someone has been careless in handling the frames in developing. To some these spots may seem mere trifles, but the laboratory that is a stickler for perfect work never permits even the most infinitesimal blemish to pass muster.

Russell Camera on Microscopic Work

The Starr Piano Company, as manufacturers of well known phonograph records, was sued by a competitor on processes involved in the manner of recording sound.

The Starr Piano Company put this question to J. S. Brown, Jr., president of Motion Picture Arts, Inc., whose nine years of experience in the industrial motion picture field had brought him in contact with similar problems confronting other lines of business: Could the minute grooves of the original record and the delicate device that cuts them be photographed in action when magnified to a degree where the difference in the two methods of groove-cutting would be easily recognized?

At first glance the problem did not appear to offer unusual difficulties beyond keeping the microscopic attachment correctly focused while the recording instrument was being operated.

But the first attempt so far failed to show what was desired that it was decided to abandon the effort and depend simply upon such still pictures as could be obtained. The combined vibration of the camera and the recording instrument, when so highly magnified, and the excessive halation from the shiny surface to the disc and the metal parts of the stylus, resulted in a meaningless, jumpy exhibition when the film was projected.

For some time, Roy V. Vaughan, secretary of Motion Picture Arts, had been using a working model of the new Russell Camera in and about New York. Among the many features of this new camera he had observed the minimum of vibration in its operation. It was decided, therefore, to try the Russell in an attempt to secure the picture desired by the Starr Piano Company.

With the Russell Camera, and with a novel experiment in the way of lighting arrangements, about two hundred feet of film was obtained which exactly suited the requirements of the manufacturers of Gennett records. The scope of the film was extended to include not only the Gennett system of recording but also that of the plaintiff, the Victor Talking Machine Company. To emphasize the difference in the two methods of recording, cuttings on steel cylinders were also photographed.

The completed picture, one thousand feet in length with titles, contains various magnifications of the stylus and the grooves it cuts. In one scene, the stylus and only three grooves—on a record these are barely visible to the naked eye—fill the entire screen. The vibrations of the cutting instrument under the effect of sound waves and the resulting effect on the removal of material from the disc is plainly visible.

Mr. Brown has received a letter from Fred Gennett, secretary of the Starr Piano Company, emphasizing the important part played by the motion picture in the outcome of the suit. The picture, Mr. Gennett said, would now be used for educational and advertising purposes.

Mexico Makes Bid for Producing Center

"Not long ago," writes Ramon Marty o Monterrey, Mexico, "in my articles publishe in Motion Picture News I called the attentio of the American Producers to the immens field of action that they would find in Mexic for the development of films. I said tha Mexico was filled with surprising landscapes rich in natural scenarios; that the Mexican wa an artist by temperament and easy to be di rected; that the day was not far off whe producers of other countries keen to the nee of pleasing the public who is every day mor exacting, would be obliged to make their film in new places, with new arguments, and sug gestive themes, and that then, Mexico could b one of the most sought countries. Now I am satisfied to say that in Mexico City, a gran studio has been built admirably endowed wit as much apparatus as is needed for the pro duction of good films. The producing depart ment is 100 x 85 feet and has a complet electrical installation, and a very great numbe of mercury lamps and reflectors. The labora tory, printing, and drying departments are full equipped and the best brands of printing ma chines are at work.

"The Spanish firm of Germán Camus an Company, to whom Mexico owes this step to wards the advancement of the cinema art, ar ready to do all they can to produce films tha will have the seal of reality.

"Now they are filming the first productio that will be ready very soon. The drama title 'Hasta Despues de la Muerte,' 'Until Afte the Death,' is taken from the theatrical mas terpiece of Mr. Jose Manuel Othon, one o the best literary men of Mexico; the adapta tion is admirably done and no doubt will resul a matter of great interest. Eight first person ages take part on this argument, being th first stars: Miss Emma Padilla and Miss Elvir Ortiz, both Mexicans and very handsome wo men and with a great artistic intuition. They a know what they are doing and with the intel ligence and discreet direction of Mr. Ernes Vollrath, the production will be a great suc cess. The cameraman, Ezequiel Carrasco i considered the best artist of this republic.

"My prophecy as to Mexico being the fu ture field for film production is about to b realized."

Music and the Picture

enhance all of it, when it speaks again.

Remember, Mr. Exhibitor, that in your house is a mighty instrument, which gives dignity and beauty to your ownings. Consider it as a thing of art—love it for its history and its power of expression. And loving it, treat it as a friend, not a slave. That love will make itself felt by the audience who can be made to revere it too!

Speaking for the exhibitors, I would say to them: You are bringing your instrument and your art into a new channel of activity. And you must adapt your minds. You cannot be the same organist in the film theatre that you are up in the loft of the high-spired cathedral. Give moderation to your attitude and keep in mind that the exhibitor is not like the minister. Always show the manager of the house what you'd like to be done, but not from the point of view of what you like—as this: show him how he can make more money and put on a better performance if he follows your suggestions.

The New Music Forum

(Under this heading the new ideas, queries, suggestions are gathered. This is where the motion picture fraternity gets together on music.)

"I am conducting a high class ladies' orchestra of twelve pieces, in one of Cleveland's finest new picture houses, and want to augment same to fifteen or more pieces, provided I can get what I want—for instance, a good lady player of trombone, oboe, French horn, etc. Have you a department that could secure these players for me? If not, I would greatly appreciate your putting me in touch with someone who could. The engagement is union, paying first class picture house scale, which is $50 per week for six hours a day, afternoon and evening. This is a city of opportunity for musicians and well worth their time to come here. Six new theatres have been built this winter, and living conditions are ideal. I have the Union's permission to import these musicians and anything you could do to help me line up some good ones would indeed be appreciated."

Wants Lady Musicians

Music Editor:

Permit me to suggest, however, that the directorship of the Association should be selected so that neither the managerial nor the musicians of its membership should be able to dominate. It should be divided, I might say on the order of the House and Senate with a higher authority of, say three men, with power of veto. That the musicians interested in the Association not necessarily be union, but drawn from both union and non-union more with the idea of eliminating radical ideas and furthering music in picture theatres. That State branches be organized immediately, so that next year we have 1,000 delegated to attend State meetings may be started just as our original meeting was, choosing a large city where good music in theatres is established. Immediate plans for financing should be made and carried out. These plans should not include the acceptance of any funds from any source which would later bind the organization to obligations which would prove embarrassing. An individual levy, and an initiation fee for new members might cover part of the amount. However, some method should be adopted which would create and establish a treasury immediately and the State organizing be put on a firm business basis.

If there is anything I can do, you have but to ask and if you decide to try to raise funds from the original members, draw on me for 25 dollars.

In your State campaigning, I might suggest some prospective members who would help in the State organizing. When you get that far along, let me know.

One thing we must guard against is the attempt of business interests to dominate the organization for selfish reasons. Some limitation should be formed immediately which would designate just who is eligible for membership. We should not sponsor business deals, but we should establish and maintain a bureau for classifying and endorsing available musicians and artists. From

Says Two Man Plan Only Feasible One

My dear Mr. Isaacson:

It was with a great amount of interest that I read your article in last week's "Musical America" with regard to the motion picture theatres. I hope you will not think me a pessimist for the remarks I am about to make, but will relate to you my personal experience and thought in the matter.

For six years I have presided over one of the many fine organs boasted by Fifth avenue churches, and for more reasons than that can rightly call myself one of the country's leading organists. I am also one of the pioneer "movie" organists, for about seven years ago the Vitagraph Co. took over the Criterion theatre, installed a fine instrument and opened it as a movie house under the name of the "Vitagraph." Here for a considerable length of time I, together with another well known organist, the late Edward F. Johnston, presided, each alternating with the other. I received a salary well in advance of the present union scale for organists, and when the house lost its popularity and the salaries were cut 33 per cent, Johnston and I quit.

To come down to the present time, for a year or more it has been my intention to re-enter the movie field when the right opportunity presented itself. I have had numerous chances—like this one: two weeks ago I was offered a position, eight hours playing per day, seven days a week, at a salary too ridiculous to mention. Think of it.

You quote Mr. William Brandt as saying that an exhibitor is willing to pay from fifteen to twenty thousand for an organ, but cannot get a good organist to play it. Of course not. But the remedy is in his own hands. Perhaps he holds down a comfortable swivel chair all day, but has he ever played an organ for four hours at a stretch, with four more in prospect after dinner and a short rest?

There are hundreds of organists ready to take up the work on a two-man basis, with relief player in addition, and these men would, like myself, prefer to take less money in this way than more money and play continuously. Incidentally, Mr. Johnston, mentioned above, died of kidney trouble aggravated by continual organ playing.

Here, then, is what I believe will attract the organist. In a house like the Rialto, where there is a large orchestra, the organist plays perhaps 50 per cent of the time and receives a large salary. In a house where there is no orchestra he plays 100 per cent of the time. Should he not receive greater compensation than he who plays but half the time? The exhibitor must foot the bill and at the same time recognize that he is employing a human being.

My experience and observation has led me to believe that the two-man plan is the only one. It certainly is the only one I will entertain, and when it becomes a reality the big men will come into the game. Ask a man who plays six to eight hours daily, and he will tell you that by the time he gets into the second half he is so weary that he doesn't care much. So he gets careless, his judgment dulled. Here is something for you to take up with Mr. Brandt, and I am sure that you can do something to help us who are not out for the almighty dollar, only to crack when we get it, but who only want a respectable living and to enjoy life and live long.

I have taken up much of your valuable time, but believe that you are the man who can bring a better understanding of the requisites of each side, relieve the "shortage" of organists and at the same time bring the job to the organist.

With kind regards and admiration of your work, I am

J. H. FEDERLEIN.

New York City.

Resents Piano-Organ Doubling Up

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

On reading your blythe article about musicians in the film theatres I am overwhelmed with the desire to express myself and to address, through you, Mr. Brandt, Mr. Weber and any other gentleman who may be troubled that the musician is "out of step."

Might I suggest to Mr. Weber that the union, far from not being on trial in this case, is, indeed, on trial in every question affecting musical labor and its commerce. And every phase of the union regard to the market and the supply has a strong bearing upon the quality of the supply as Mr. Brandt suggest.

Now I would not seek an opportunity to bring to light a number of abuses without offering a deliberate and hopeful remedy, but by mentioning one abusive feature of the trade in musical labor I can show Mr. Brandt why he finds it hard to get schooled organists and can show Mr. Weber where he can do something to help Mr. Brandt get better quality for his money.

The abuse I have in mind is the practice of "doubling" on piano or organ, as the case may be. I always thought this was contrary to the laws of the Federation of Labor, but, viewed casually, I daresay it is done in the majority of picture houses in New York. Even if it is not strictly against the rule, it certainly is a thing destructive enough to hurt the music in any house and the widespread practice of working musicians, particularly organists, like galley slaves, is doing a damage to the motion picture as well as the musician which threatens to place both in a vulgar aspect from which they can only emerge by hard and long effort.

The organ was regarded fifteen years ago as an instrument deserving the attention of the best brains and the widest culture that could be brought to it. I am quoting many, many people of taste and discrimination when I say that now the organ is one of the most irritating nuisances of life in New York City. A man goes into a picture house almost idly. He wants repose, he desires that his mind rest passive for an hour or so. He trusts his passive mind, more sensitive generally than his active one, to the mercy of the film producer and the exhibitor. We must give the producer credit that he has nearly proved himself worthy of the trust. But the exhibitor! He inflicts upon this sensitve, quiet mind the insidious vaporings of a half-schooled and half-cultured half-organist. And he keeps that horrible organ droning and wheezing not for minutes, but for hours on end without periods, without rests, without intelligent program, and without any other intent than to make some kind of a noise. And every one wants to blame the organ player, who, nine times out of ten, would rather work harder and practice one thing until he could give you three minutes of music, which might be a refreshment and a recreation to you for a day, and then shut off the motors and rest your ear.

Mr. Brandt, if you want real organ playing, that is playing with pep, with sentiment and with clean intelligent appeal to all hearers, you may have it by hiring any one of a hundred men in New York only you must make the man's working conditions such as to increase his self-respect, and you must keep your own attitude up to a demand for quality and not quantity. You must remember that a man in any line can only do a little of his best and that the less you have him do the higher you may require him to keep his standard. You must not force your organist to play band parts for hours and then expect him to bloom forth in two seconds as a soloist. And above all you must not allow him to "extemporize" throughout a half an afternoon merely to escape having a dead house on your hands. Make him feel that every moment he is at the organ he must make the thing talk!

And if Mr. Weber enforces whatever there is in his code to make organists better I think we may hope for improvement in the exhibitor's end of the game that will keep pace with the best the producers can put forth. When you allow the organ to become a mere stop gap for the orchestra you may be sure that the morale and the working sense of the orchestra is not improved.

As in all fields of labor and in all kinds of labor groups the bands of New York City are suffering badly at present. The morale is not good. The union has backed up the band leaders very well, I think. The contractor has become a powerful factor, if not a complete despot, in the market. But the journeyman musician, in spite of apparent rulings in his favor, has not gained very much recently. There is a certain mistrust, if you will, a certain cloud of futility that seems to hang over most of the bands I've heard lately and I believe that this can be dispelled by a little intelligent effort by all hands, by making the job more for the work's sake, stopping this degrading traffic in time and muscle and treating the real negotiable article—musicianship—as if it really did exist and by giving it, wherever met with, credit and encouragement. This does not mean to embrace "temperament" and to endure unheard of eccentricity, but simply to take the regard of ownership. If you have hired a musician do you not want him to turn out to be better than you thought? Suppose he were a railroad bond, or, more aptly, a theatre! And stop this dreadful business of feeding the public its music by the watch.

Restrictions or space have, I fear, caused me to wander somewhat in my subject, but I have thought much about it and would gladly talk for somebody's good, as I hope these sheets are not wasted.

If Mr. Brandt would really like a very good organist who would doubtless hold some of my views I think I might lead him to that fount of musicianship.

WILLIAM HAMILTON,
Englewood Cliffs, N. J.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Thank you so much for the special music supplement. It is a permanent souvenir of an extremely profitable and instructive visit to the Astor Conference. Those of us who expect to keep abreast or to accumulate a library of works on the subject ought to bind and save it. It is the only really practical matter published so far; all the rest waste words in mere jejune theory. It really amounts to a magnificent synthesis of the latest idea in picture showmanship.

One thing the conference did: it convinced the business men in motion pictures that better music and more artistic background actually bring in more dollars and cents. That is no small accomplishment. I hope there will be succeeding conferences to continue the way.

Very sincerely,

BENJAMIN GROSBAYNE.

Mrs. Bendix Supplies Artists for More Theatres

The following new theatres opened during the past two weeks with Mrs. A. K. Bendix's artists:

Tivoli Theatre, Chicago, with Cesar Nesi, tenor.

Senate Theatre, Chicago, with Joseph Martel, baritone.

Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, with Alma Doria, soprano and Paul Oscard Dancers.

State Theatre, Minneapolis, with Lillian Grossman, soprano, Walter Pontius, tenor and Katherine Stang, violinist.

These important new theatres will prove an important addition to Mrs. Bendix's already large list of fine theatres in the leading cities.

Mrs. Bendix is sending six Broadway Beauties to the Alhambra Theatre for March 6th, at which time Mr. Landau will stage a Fashion Revue.

Desha, the charming dancer, famous for her Buble Dance, has been creating something of a sensation at the new Capitol Theatre, St. Paul and new State Theatre, Minneapolis, where she has been for the past few weeks. She plays the Garrick Theatre, Duluth, February 20th, then goes to the Alhambra, Milwaukee.

Some Important Questions for All Theatres

(So fundamental and elemental are the questions in the following letter of Mr. Price, that I am urging our readers to answer them through these columns—I would like to arrange a little symposium of experiences. Tell us what your difficulties are on these points.)

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Should orchestra hold regular rehearsals before picture is shown to public?

Does orchestra leader merely view picture before showing to public and set down music before orchestra at first showing?

Do you regard rehearsal of full orchestra essential?

Are members of orchestra paid extra for rehearsals?

Is it part of musicians' contract that their services are exclusive, i. e., that they should not play outside engagements?

Continuous music—How frequently and how often are rest periods given to musicians in 10-piece orchestra, i. e., do musicians play continuously for one hour or for duration of feature?

Do you think it a fair clause in contract that a rest period of fifteen minutes shall be given each afternoon or evening at discretion of leader?

Is 15 minutes during 3-hour engagement sufficient rest period?

No Loss by Fire to Motiograph Factory

Fire which swept the upper stories of the Ruprecht Building at 564-72 W. Randolph street last Wednesday, was extinguished before any material damage was done to the machinery, equipment or material in the Enterprise Optical Company plant, makers of Motiograph projectors, which occupies the third and fourth floors of this big factory building.

The blaze started in a spraying room of the Western Doll Company on the fifth floor and the inflammable material burned with terrific rapidity and heat, imperilling the lives of many of the four hundred employees of concerns in the building. All escaped safely, however, although firemen were forced to make several rescues by means of ladders.

The quick work of the salvage corp in covering the valuable and intricate machinery of the Enterprise Optical Company and the prompt action of employees, who carried tools, jigs, dies, parts and patterns into safety in the two huge fire proof vaults, prevented injury by water to machinery, etc. So much water was thrown into the building that the floors of the Enterprise Optical Company were flooded several inches deep, but owing to the salvage measures taken ,the damage done was very slight and four hours' work put the entire plant in running condition the next morning, and an inspection by a Motion Picture News representative of the factory at noon showed operations proceeding as usual.

The loss, which was fully covered by insurance, will only amount to a few hundred dollars, and, according to General Manager O. F. Spahr, no delay in deliveries or production will be caused.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Three Torchy Comedies"
(C. C. Burr—Educational—Two Reels Each)

WITH the comedy field sharply divided between the product released under the refined brand and that offered as slapstick, the exhibitor who caters to the former need look no further than the "Torchy Comedies." Judging from what has already been shown they have found their place on the programs of the best houses in the country, because they carry definite entertainment values. Adapted by Raymond Schrock from Sewall Ford's scintillating "office boy" stories they afford the picturegoer a treat in the accepted psychology of the lad whose sole purpose in life is to put something over on his employer.

Ford has gotten away from regulation channels. He does not rely upon the ancient wheeze of the office pest finding excuse to attend his grandmother's funeral and sneaking up to a ball game, nor does he exploit the character in office hokum. There are some brand new ideas incorporated. Ford's hero is romantic. He has grown up out of the toothpick stage. And Johnny Hines makes him a very likeable fellow, indeed. The three comedies are entitled, "Torchy's Big Lead," "Torchy's Double Triumph," and 'Torchy In High." Each is entirely different from the other, although all are based upon Torchy's efforts to circumvent the heroine's parents in his ambition to be with her.

"Torchy's Big Lead" is founded upon a bit of fun with some newly arrived immigrants. Totally ignorant of American customs and speech they are advised to follow a guide who carries a peculiarly marked cane, so they can get around town. It is up to Torchy to hook the cane and pass it round. Cops get hold of it. Ditto the innocent passerby. A bit of plot is exposed when a detective informs Torchy that they are smuggling aigrettes into the country. The picture develops with sure touches, with no padding visible. The conclusion shows Torchy with the aigrettes speeding away with the only girl.

"Torchy's Double Triumph" presents the office boy in the guise of an amateur detective Attired in a painter's overalls, he attends a masquerade ball and flouts the villain who has bedecked himself in a similar costume. Whenever the thief puts over something Torchy is right there to take it away. He has a lot of fun with the "constabule" by doubling in brass as a scarecrow. The comedy is good for a spot on any exhibitor's program, although it does not offer as much humor as the others.

"Torchy In High" is perhaps the best of the trio, because of its variety of incident. It is based upon a stolen automobile and the hero's efforts to meet his girl unbeknown to her parents. There is a good time had by all at the art gallery, and Torchy, doubling in brass again as a chauffeur, is able to present his ingenious methods in having a good time. The star is always at ease in his impersonation. He never forces his points beyond the mark where they would grate upon the nerves. And Dorothy Leeds (late of the Follies) makes a pretty and pleasant heroine. Robert Eddy's direction is praiseworthy. He gets the most from every scene without resorting to padding or repetition. The comedies keep going all the time. —LAURENCE REID.

"The Supreme Passion"
(Film Market, Inc.—State Rights)

THE exhibitor in the state rights field who is looking for a wholesome photoplay which revolves around romance should take "The Supreme Passion" into consideration. The title is really a misnomer if one may judge from its suggestion to sex. In fact there is nothing of sex about it. The meaning of it is founded upon the idea whether a man's love for a woman is based upon physical appeal or upon her soul. The authors, Charles T. Dazey and Robert McLaughlin, found their inspiration in Moore's poem and song, "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," and it must be said in all credit that they have concocted an attractive little story—one which reaches out and conquers because of its romantic pretentions. There is nothing heavy about it—there is no bid for dramatic fireworks. Everything is dependent upon the romance and the attendant conflict.

The action begins in Ireland and presents a modest family, one daughter of which is wooed by a young man above her station in life. Her father is urged to come to America by an Irishman who has become successful in the land of the stars and stripes. The latter has an ulterior motive to win the daughter. Meanwhile the youth has parted with his father because of his devotion to the girl and soon follows her to America. The plot is obvious and certain scenes are amateurishly developed. Certain conclusions are jumped at, yet the interest is held. The director has carefully established the climax which is decidedly novel. The father stands on the brink of ruin, placed there by the scheming worshipper of his daughter. Unless he relents in his attitude the villain will destroy him financially. So to save her family, the girl consents to a wedding. At the moment of the ceremony, she is unable to appear because of an injury to her face. The villain, imagining her beauty will be destroyed, gives up his claim and releases himself.

The surprise finish shows that her plan is a hoax carried on to relieve her of her obnoxious suitor. So she consents to become the wife of the youth who has been willing to marry her despite her appearance. The picture might have been staged in sets which carried more appeal. Some of these are out of place in bringing good atmosphere. And the lighting is rather harsh at times. The picture is well acted by Florence Dixon, Dan Kelly and Robert Adams. LAURENCE REID.

"Payment Guaranteed"
(American Film Company)

"PAYMENT GUARANTEED," the latest "Flying A" feature, offers a clean-cut story of financial intrigue built around a girl who adheres to her high ideals in the face of strong temptation, and director George L. Cox has balanced dramatic incident, heart interest and suspense in such a way as to give this picture excellent entertainment value.

The story deals with the efforts of Harry Fenton, a Wall street broker on the verge of bankruptcy, to borrow money from Steven Strange, a wealthy young business man, using Emily Heath, his fiance, as the lure which will induce Strange to make the loan. Through her loyalty and trust in Fenton, Emily is entangled in his machinations against Strange in a way that might besmirch her reputation. Then comes disillusionment and repudiation of Fenton and all further part in his plots, and Emily discovers her love for Strange, who has cared for her and believed in her high character since he first met her, despite her association with Fenton.

A thrilling incident of the story is a realistic auto accident when Strange and Emily riding in his big roadster along the mountain road are hit by a touring car driven by a crowd of joy riders, and are brushed from the road and plunged down the side of the mountain.

Margarita Fisher, cast as Emily Heath, has excellent opportunities for displaying her ability as an emotional actress and does excellent work in this role. Captain Cecil Van Auker is good as Steven Strange and Hayward Mack, as Harry Fenton, is a polished debonair villain, who would draw hisses if he were on the speaking stage.

Photography and direction are excellent, as are the interiors, and some very picturesque locations add to the general effectiveness of the picture.

Scenario by Lois Zellner. Length five reels.—L. H. MASON.

"LOVE, HONOR AND BEHAVE"
(First National)

Excellent Slap Stick Feature With Good Action and Incident

STARTING with a much better story idea than usually goes into the making of a slapstick production and with a cast made up of Sennett's most distinguished comedians, including Charlie Murray and Ford Sterling, at their best, "Love, Honor and Behave" registers as a very enjoyable picture.

There is nothing especially new in the offering, but many of the gags used have been made to appear as such and after a short prologue which introduces Mr. Murray as a Supreme Court judge, much as if the picture was to be serious drama, there is continuous action and a wealth of farce-comedy incident including some of the best "lion stuff" as yet screened. Trick photography has been used to advantage in many sequeneces, also the dependable chase stuff, etc.

There is, however, more of real acting in "Love, Honor and Behave" than in many a so-called drama. Mr. Sterling puts over a very funny scene explaining by facial expressions the quality of some "hootch" he is drinking. Later both Murray and Sterling demonstrate their histrionic talents with expressive pantomime.

Adding to the feature's entertainment are especially good titles. They are clever without being vulgar and illustrate to advantage many points in the action. There is also quite an idea back of the farce-comedy action provided. The prologue shows a young wife appearing before Mr. Murray as the judge to start divorce proceedings on circumstantial evidence. Court is adjourned while the judge tells a story of what is alleged to have happened to him, the point being to disprove the reliability of circumstantial evidence. In the end it is disclosed that the judge's story was purely fictional, but its effect has been to convince the wife that she has no reason to ask for a divorce.

The cast besides Murray and Sterling, includes Marie Provost, Fanny Kelly, Billy Bevan and other famous players. Ben Turpin is even in for a bit.

For any theatre that likes to give its patrons a wholesome laugh, we figure "Love, Honor and Behave" can't be beaten in current farce-comedy. The picture's exploitation possibilities are also exceptional.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Love, Honor and Behave," a five-reel farce comedy from the Mack Sennett studios with a great cast of famous funmakers, including Charlie Murray, Ford Sterling and Ben Turpin is the feature picture scheduled for showing at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

For pure, unadulterated entertainment, "Love, Honor and Behave" stands as one of the really exceptional pictures of the year. Mr. Murray plays the role of a judge with story telling propensities and a faculty of settling law and even divorce suits out of court. Mr. Sterling is the fictitional hero of the judge's yarn.

The picture is full of action from start to finish and has been developed with much new and original incident of the brand that has made the comedies from the Sennett studios famous. Many novelties in trick photography also aid in making the picture entertaining.

Those who remember "Married Life," "Down on the Farm" and the other five-reel releases of the past year are assured that this picture is even more entertaining than those mentioned. In fact "Love, Honor and Behave" sets a new standard for five-reel slap stick productions.

The feature was personally supervised by that master of farce comedy direction, Mack Sennett, and gives its principal players plenty of opportunity for putting over their best efforts.

PROGRAM READER

Just for entertainment purposes, is the feature picture offered at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' showing, "Love, Honor and Behave." "Love, Honor and Behave" is a farce comedy personally supervised by the king of comedy directors, Mack Sennett and boasts of a most distinguished cast which includes such well known players as Charlie Murray, Ford Sterling, Ben Turpin, Phyllis Haver, Billy Bevan and many of the others of the Sennett studio crew who have made millions laugh.

"Love, Honor and Behave" is a story of a young wife who thought her hubby had given her grounds for divorce and who has applied to the court for her freedom and how Charlie Murray, as the judge, makes her change her mind by telling her a story purely fictional about what was alleged to have happened to him where circumstantial evidence had figured in making things that were not true appear as such.

It is a truly humorous idea on which the picture is founded and as it has been handled by the Sennett funmakers so every foot of the five reels is good for various degrees of entertainment. Among the stunts pulled are some having to do with "hungry lions" that surpass anything of its kind ever attempted.

"EAST LYNNE"
(Ballin—Hodkinson)

Modernized Version of Play and Book Should Interest

THE old "grandmother" of them all, "East Lynne," has reached the screen again with its sure-fire audience appeal intact. Which is to say that Hugo Ballin has placed the emphasis upon the pathos, the heart-rending sentiment and the emotional conflict to such an extent that those who remember the play or the book will pay homage to the picture in terms of sound praise. Mr. Ballin is an exceptional director in the manner of giving tone and quality to his productions. He does this largely by composing his scenes in perfect harmony. He has saturated the picture with artistic touches emphasized through appropriate details and charming atmosphere.

Perhaps in his attention to the production end of it he has neglected to cover his tracks dramatically. Certainly the only criticism may be found in the rather disjointed continuity. This may be explained in bad cutting. Unquestionably the picture was made in considerable footage and the effort to compress it into feature length proved a task to the laboratory people. Mr. Ballin deserves praise in giving it a modern version. He has placed the action in America, with all the up-to-date contrivances giving it breadth and color. There are certain lapses which detract from the interest and make the movements of the characters seem confusing. For instance, there is no break from the time that Isabel Vane leaves her husband and arrives in Quebec—not even a glimpse of a railroad train. One must accept the fact that she is in the Canadian city. Again, a succeeding shot shows the villain returning after a year seeking explanations. A little detail of her life here would go a great deal in clearing up the atmosphere. Another faulty touch is when the investigators of the crime of the murdered gardener fail to ask his own daughter of her evidence until years have elapsed.

Otherwise the picture is well developed, if one may jump at minor conclusions here and there—conclusions which do not detract from the story interest. The picture still tugs at the heart and should find a hearty response among all classes of picturegoers. It has held public interest as well as "Way Down East" and "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The titling could be better in some instances, but for the most part it fits exactly into the key in which the drama is pitched. Mr. Ballin has expended some money here and it does not seem like waste in viewing his artistic backgrounds. The cast is well directed and Edward Earle and Mabel Ballin fit the roles as if they were conceived with them in mind. "East Lynne" is a sincere effort to put forth something entertaining, and it certainly succeeds.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "East Lynne," adapted and directed by Hugo Ballin from Mrs. Henry Wood's famous story and play which has been read and seen by millions. Mr. Ballin has modernized the story and has placed the action in America. This method brings a new appeal to the work. A cast that consists of Edward Earle and Mabel Ballin contributes a performance which exacts the most from every scene. The story revolves around Isabel Vane who, when she believes her husband, Archibald Carlyle, faithless, runs away with Francis Levison to Quebec. She has inherited East Lynn, the ancestral home of the Vanes, and happiness is her reward until she believes her husband to be carrying on a liaison with Barbara Hare.

Isabel's life in Quebec is complete with sorrow. Her child dies, and Levison leaves her, and she makes her way back to East Lynne to beg forgiveness of her husband before she dies. Carlyle, in the meanwhile, has married Barbara when a newspaper account informs that Isabel Vane has been killed in a railroad accident. The picture is appealing and holds the interest through the composition of scenes and the very able acting. It is rich in sympathy, pathos, romance, sentiment and other human elements. Mr. Earle and Miss Ballin carry the burden of the acting and acquit themselves in adequate fashion.

PROGRAM READER

Have you ever read "East Lynne?" Have you ever seen the famous play? The opportunity is yours to see it immortalized upon the screen when it comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a photoplay. The wonderful story of the love and sorrow of Isabel Vane; the pathetic life of the mistress of East Lynne who in a moment of fancy brought sorrow to herself—this has appealed to millions in nearly every clime. "East Lynne" has charmed all who have read it or seen it played upon the stage. No one should miss the chance to see it as a photoplay. The same rich drama, the identical characters, the human note, the powerful sentiment and romance, the effective situations and climaxes—these are all intact. Hugo Ballin has modernized it, which, of course, makes it doubly appealing. The picture is interpreted by a cast that includes Edward Earle and Mabel Ballin.

CATCH LINES

Do you want to see "East Lynne" again? Come to the ———— theatre and see the immortal play as a picture. More appealing than ever.

See "East Lynne" at the ———— next ————. Greater than the play. More interesting than the book. Beautifully staged and finely acted.

"A TALE OF TWO WORLDS"
(Eminent Authors—Goldwyn)

Melodrama Is Obvious, But Carries Punch and Color

THE Oriental-Occidental barrier is behind the theme of "A Tale of Two Worlds," Gouverneur Morris' first story to be written expressly for the screen, and while it follows a familiar groove, those in charge have supplied it with crackling action and incident—elements which measure out a large measure of suspense. Mr. Morris has not been inspired in his theme or characterization. His formula is almost identical with such plays as "East Is West" and "The Sun-Daughter." One must accept it as frank melodrama. The fact that it is highly illogical won't enter into the matter at all. Certainly it entertains because the interest is maintained from the moment of the well executed Boxer uprising, when the heroine is lugged away from danger and taken to America, to the time that she finds love's expression.

Frank Lloyd knows his pictorial values. His dramatic sense is well emphasized in the highly colorful scene when the white parents are killed and a faithful Chinese retainer takes the infant daughter to America. The atmosphere is perfect and the tinting of the photography, the splendid detail of the interiors and the rousing thrill which accompanies the episode—these are sufficient to quicken the pulse. When the action switches to America the play loses some of its vigor and resolves itself into the conflict of East versus West. The heroine, now grown to womanhood, is unaware that she is white, and to pay a debt her guardian promises her in marriage to the very scoundrel who killed her parents. There is no way out of this dilemma on the part of the guardian if he obeys a Chinese custom.

Meanwhile a thrill is caught when the villain uses a crushing device as a means of torture. One of his cohorts is slowly turning the crank which brings the wall down on the helpless individual. The Oriental always throws a gun in the room to give his victims a sweet death by suicide. Wallace Beery plays this character with all his customary vigor. But for once this able actor seems out of place, his physique and demeanor being too rugged. The romantic bid comes in the attention paid the heroine by the American. And the suspense keeps alive through holding off the rescue act until the conclusion. Let it be said that the villain pays for his life by his own horror chamber—the crank being turned by a Chinaman friendly to the girl and her lover. Leatrice Joy makes a charming figure as the heroine, but the best performance is contributed by E. A. Warren as her guardian. J. Frank Glendon appeared ill at ease as the hero. The settings and technical work are of a high order.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A Tale of Two Worlds" is the title of the Goldwyn picture which comes to the ——— theatre next ——— sponsored by Eminent Authors. The famous short story writer, Gouverneur Morris, has contributed a photoplay calculated to intrigue the imagination and stimulate the pulse. It is a story of the Orient and Occident and revolves around a white girl who is brought up in ignorance of the outside world and the fact that she is not a Chinese, by Ah Wing, who kidnapped her away in infancy to save her life. During a Boxer uprising her parents were killed and the Chinaman takes her to the Chinese section of a large Western city. There it is that the wily Oriental responsible for the death of her parents is residing and, according to the custom of his race, a debt must be paid honorably.

Ah Wing has promised the girl to him in return for a certain sceptre. The wily Oriental obtains the precious object and asks for his reward. So the drama builds a conflict between the two Chinamen, the girl's guardian attempting to keep her or give her away to a white admirer. The American effects her rescue in a most dramatic fashion. The picture is remarkably rich in its melodramatic appeal, there being good evidence of thrills. Considerable local color emphasizes the action and incident. A prominent cast interprets the picture in a most capable manner. Frank Lloyd directed.

PROGRAM READER

She did not know that she was a white girl. She had been reared as a Chinese and lived according to the custom and manner of the Orientals. Then into her life came an American and he brought sorrow along with happiness. For she realized that a barrier stood between them—the barrier of color, race and religion. Then on the eve when she was about to be sold into slavery to a wily Oriental her rescue was effected. It was then that she realized that she was white. This is a brief account of the stirring melodramatic photoplay, "A Tale of Two Worlds," which comes to the ——— theatre next ———. It is written by Gouverneur Morris, which accounts for its appealing drama and action. The picture is remarkably rich in adventure and romance and is ably acted.

CATCH LINES

She was ignorant of the fact that she was white. She had been pledged to a wily Chinaman. Did romance come to her? See "A Tale of Two Worlds."

"THE PLAYTHING OF B'WAY"
(Realart)

Justine Johnstone Scores in Satisfactory Offering

JUSTINE JOHNSTONE'S second picture, "The Plaything of Broadway," is certain to attract patronage. With such a colorful title, and a star whose beauty has been widely publicized, there is no reason why filmgoers should not patronize the theatre that shows the offering. Once inside the spectator will be satisfactorily entertained. If he has seen the star in "Blackbirds," he will notice that the present production is more consistent insofar as its characterization is concerned. Miss Johnstone was hardly fitted by temperament or talent to enact the part of a crook, but as an exponent of Broadway night life her experience as a hostess and dancer makes her appear to be the perfect representative of the role she enacts here. Not only has the star developed in her acting, but the picture itself carries far more appealing qualities than "Blackbirds."

While there has been an epidemic of New York night life stories on the screen, "The Plaything of Broadway" carries enough color, enough contrasts and sufficient high lights to be called something different. It is a simple little tale which does not depend upon dramatic fireworks for its appeal, but conquers because of its sentiment and romance. There are flaws to be sure. Most of these can be traced back to the author. It is hardly logical that a doctor would figure as the party who breaks down the pride of the heroine, since a member of the medical profession is ordinarily too busy to appear romantic. Again it does not develop enough variety of situation to keep from being obvious. There are moments when the picture seems to be getting over solely on its titles. Yet it lives up thoroughly to its character. Miss Johnstone is the pet of the club in which she presides as hostess. The rich men of Wall Street become her Broadway sycophants at night.

The plot is constructed around a bet which some silver haired playboys place with her that she cannot conquer the above-mentioned physician in a certain length of time—that the latter is immune to feminine charms. Repulsed by playing her "system" by posing as a neurasthenic, she adopts different methods and by doing so her character is regenerated. Most of these pictures are constructed around the misunderstood heroine, who is painted in material colors, but whose heart is pure gold. The offering makes a bid for the sympathy when she takes up social welfare and finishes with a melodramatic flourish. The ending might be improved. It does not seem convincing that a fainting woman would be left half reclining on the pavement and half supported by a chauffeur. The picture is handsomely staged and well acted. It has some abrupt situations, caused apparently by bad cutting.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ——— theatre next ——— is "The Plaything of Broadway," starring the beautiful Justine Johnstone. The Realart star is said to give an amazingly convincing interpretation of as daring a role as has ever been shown in a motion picture. As Lola, a beautiful dancer, the Plaything of Broadway, and the pet of a notorious club, Miss Johnstone has an opportunity to flash her abundant charm and talent. The plot concerns a wager, made one night after Lola had given an exhibition of her art before the club. A certain guest tells her that no man can withstand her charm. Lola agrees with that opinion, for when another guest says that he knows just one man who would be unmoved by her appeal, Lola, greatly piqued, wagers that she can win the man, whoever he may be.

The situations arising from this idea precipitate a deal of romantic conflict. Complications pile upon fresh complications until Lola discovers that she is forced to capitulate through the power of love. Miss Johnstone's dancing scenes are said to be quite captivating. Crauford Kent in the opposite role gives a convincing portrayal, and others who contribute good performances are Edwards Davis, Macey Harlam and George Cowl. Jack Dillon directed the picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a good title to exploit. And you have the star who is just getting a start on the screen. If you played "Blackbirds," your patrons are aware of this star's wonderful charm. She is acknowledged by celebrated artists to be America's loveliest girl, a girl who is a real beauty in every sense of the word. Use abundant stills of her and acquaint your crowd with her charm. You can bill the picture as a daring drama of a woman's soul. Bill it as a fascinating drama of Broadway. For a prologue you can stage a dancing number against an appropriate background. Bring out that it offers a tense drama of the upper world, the underworld. riches, poverty, selfishness, service—stunning contrasts with a smashing climax. The best angle is to concentrate upon the star and build a following for her. Tell about the other players.

CATCH LINES

See America's most beautiful girl, Justine Johnstone, in "The Plaything of Broadway," a sumptuous picture of Broadway, love and a woman's heart and soul.

"THE LITTLE FOOL"
(C. E. Shurtleff-Metro)

Should Prove Interesting Entertainment

WHEN Jack London wrote "The Little Lady in the Big House," he got away from his customary field and delved into a new phase of the eternal triangle. The screen adaptation of this book, entitled "The Little Fool," emphasizes this novelty of the triangle, although much of the original character is destroyed for obvious reasons. It will be remembered by the readers that the heroine possessed a complex personality, and that she was never sure of herslf in her conduct. The screen version presents her with a good deal of her color intact, though she is far less fascinating—this despite the fact that Ora Carew makes the character appealing.

In the original this character brought the plot and its ramifications to a surprising conclusion. In love with her husband and his best friend she decided that she could not go on loving them both and the twist comes in the manner in which she takes herself out of their lives. The picture leaves out the tragic finale and loses a great deal of its vigor as a consequence. The interest is held, however, in the twist of the triangle. Here are the trespassers, the wife and the other man, who talk over their relations with the husband and advise him with every move they make. Both acknowledge their guilt. Both are eager to make amends. Yet the husband accepts it all calmly, having a great faith in them. He does not take them seriously until he goads them into an elopement. At this point the wife's better self comes to the rescue and she remains steadfast to her husband. The picture might be compressed with padded details eliminated. This would quicken the tempo and heighten the action.

There are many scenes which become tiresome because of their repetitious nature. The entire appeal rests upon the new development of the triangle. In the meanwhile to give the picture balance one is permitted to gaze upon pretty pastoral shots—such as a bevy of guests having a good time at a bathing spot or riding over country roads. The picture may prove disappointing to those who are sticklers for true adaptations. Yet the average picturegoer will not worry over it. He will find a great deal of entertainment in this finely staged production, which is also acted right up to the handle by Milton Sills as the husband, Ora Carew as the wife, and Nigel Barrie as the other man. There are times when Sills holds his scenes too long, and soft focus photography is often overworked. Yet as familiar as this plot may be the spectator is never certain of its development. The picture should prove satisfying.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A modern version of the eternal triangle is offered in "The Little Fool," adapted from Jack London's charming story, "The Little Lady in the Big House." This picture will be the feature attraction at the ——— theatre next ——— with a cast that includes such popular and talented players as Milton Sills, Ora Carew and Nigel Barrie. The Forrests are living on a lonely ranch when Evan Graham, a friend of Richard, comes for a visit. Mrs. Forrest has always entertained in generous fashion. In fact she has kept open house constantly for a number of her friends. Since Richard is compelled to mind his business, he has not the time nor the inclination to pay much attention to the social graces.

Hence it is that Graham takes advantage to fall in love with Paula. He fights against what he considers a caddish trespassing, but Richard is not alarmed—not until he discovers that his wife is determined to hold the affection of Graham. The matter is thoroughly discussed, but at the last moment Paula balks and decides that she loves her husband best of all. The story is always interesting because of its modern development. Considerable charm accompanies the various scenes. The picture is directed by Philip Rosen and is finely acted by Milton Sills, Ora Carew and Nigel Barrie.

PROGRAM READER

Richard Forrest and his wife, Paula, lived together in a big house far away from thriving communities. In fact they lived on a lonely ranch. But that didn't prevent them from entertaining their friends. It was always open house on the ranch. Then one day Paula realized that her affection for her husband was waning. She was in love with his best friend. What happened? Did Richard get a divorce? Did the parties to the triangle discuss their affairs dispassionately? Did Paula remain steadfast in her devotion? What of the best friend? Did the husband have implicit faith in his wife? Should a husband place confidence in his warmest friend if his wife happens to be unusually attractive? These questions are answered in the Metro picture, "The Little Fool," adapted from Jack London's "The Little Lady in the Big House." At this theatre next ———.

CATCH LINES

He had implicit faith in his wife. Even when she came to him and declared her affection for another, he merely laughed. Was he disillusioned? See "The Little Fool."

See "The Little Fool," adapted from Jack London's story, "The Lady in the Big House," a picture of sentiment, romance and intrigue. Fascinating, entertaining and appealing.

"THE PRICE OF POSSESSION"
(Paramount)

Ethel Clayton Gives Clever Performance in Mild Entertainment

WHILE this picture may appear as only average to the everyday picturegoer if he judges from the fact that it offers a mild story, orthodox characterization, and a title not exceptionally attractive, still he should go away satisfied if he is not asking for a large slice of drama. The star has established a healthy following through her sincerity which is noticeable in the manner that she strives to give her best. "The Price of Possession" may not be called her outstanding picture, but there is enough substance to it to keep one interested. Particularly will feminine audiences like it since it carries qualities which should appeal to the sex.

The plot hinges on the conflict to claim title to an English estate. It is a conflict entered into by two very determined parties. When one of them happens to be the star the feminine interest may be appreciated. The biggest fault of the picture is its obviousness. Certainly a mere tyro at screen-gazing can tell how everything will end. From that standpoint the suspense is eliminated. And the situations sort of fall upon those who look constantly for surprises. The star appears as a young widow who, when she puts in her claim, is acquainted with the knowledge that her husband's cousin is the rightful heir. It does not take any gray matter to realize that this figure will get the property and the attractive widow in the bargain. The story develops its tiny thread of drama in a clear manner and though it is not charged with incident to speak of, it manages to appear dramatic in several places. Yet dissecting these one may discover that they are none too convincing.

Hugh Ford, the director, has given the picture a careful production which is marked by its clever composition of scenes. The opening shots are taken in the Australian bush and the scene switches to English country life. In fact the details, acting, and technical details are first rate in every particular. The star and her leading man, Rockcliffe Fellowes, carry the two important roles. In fact the other parts are really subordinated. Yet both are well equipped with talent to hold the attention. One never tires of their portrayals because each is deftly shaded. Indeed one never worries over the other players at all. Eve Unsell's scenario is compact, with all irrelevant matter eliminated to provide a clear continuity. The comedy relief has its place in offering a balance.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Presenting an unusually dramatic and appealing story, "The Price of Possession," will be the feature attraction at the ——— next ———. This offering stars Ethel Clayton, who has an opportunity to flash some of her distinctive talent. The story deals with a young woman whose husband, a bush rider in Australia, meets a mysterious death. She finds some papers which seem to prove that the husband is heir to a vast estate, and the widow goes to England and, showing her proof, is awarded the estate. But the real heir appears and it is only after several stirring developments that the widow comes to a realization of the truth. She is about to give us the estate when the real heir avows his love and both are happy.

This is a picture of unusual merit and it is said that its compact situations, its fine settings make it one of the outstanding successes of the Ethel Clayton repertoire. The scenes are laid in Australia and England and the variety is refreshing. Rockcliffe Fellows plays opposite Miss Clayton and gives an excellent acccunt of himself. The direction by Hugh Ford and the continuity by Eve Unsell is of a high order.

PROGRAM READER

Supported by a cast of unusual merit, directed by a skilled artist in a play which has for its contrasted settings the savage wilds of the Australian bush and the refinements of an English manor, Ethel Clayton gives in "The Price of Possession" one of the most satisfying and pleasing demonstrations of her ability to play intensely human roles that she has yet enacted for the screen. The dramatic incidents arising in the development of the plot crowd one upon another with such haste, and withal so logically, that the interest of the spectator cannot fag for a moment. "The Price of Possession" is a picture calculated to interest every type of picture-goer. Come to the ——— theatre and see the emotional star, Ethel Clayton, at her best.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have a Clayton following there is no reason why you can't clean up with her latest picture. True they haven't been really dramatic offerings of late, but this one is endowed with good points. And once your crowd is in they are going to be entertained. If the names of the author, the scenarist, and the director mean anything to your audience then play them up. You can describe the picture as a dramatic and appealing story. You can tell that Rockcliffe Fellows is the leading man. You can stimulate interest by publishing stories of the star. There is nothing much in a showman way to exploit. The title might come in for some advertising. The best angle is to play up the star and tell that she has an unusually good offering here.

"THE FAITH HEALER"
(Paramount)

Strong Drama Here—Wonderfully Produced and Acted

IT has remained for "The Faith Healer," adapted from William Vaughn Moody's striking play of the same name, to find its place as the logical successor to "The Miracle Man." Any picture founded upon the premise of the latter work is instantly brought into comparison. Let it be said for George Melford's fine production that his is the first which will stand such an acid test—a test that places "The Faith Healer" as one of the BETTER pictures. The dramatic framework is established upon the conflict of spiritual and material forces and the theme is so poignant and soars with such eloquent appeal that one feels uplifted or transported as the case may be.

If one is a scoffer the picture will offer no appeal at all. It is a subject which will be widely discussed and many will dissect and discover its improbabilities. Yet it stands on its own frame asking no quarter from anyone who scoffs at faith-healing. By establishing these arguments the picture will attract patronage. That the mind has control over the body has long been established. The offering brings out this control in scenes which compel attention no matter whether they are founded upon logic or not. From a purely dramatic standpoint "The Faith Healer" is minus the qualities which provide moving moments. There are no melodramatic splurges—no attempt is made to provide suspense or even action. But the conflict between the spiritual and material forces of human nature are ever dominant. There is where one must look for the dramatic meat.

Mr. Melford has caught the message and emphasized it through his knowledge of screen dramaturgy. His scenes are wonderfully composed and suggest a spiritual force in themselves. Had he kept from stressing the infant scene the picture would be flawless. Again he has used too much atmosphere in pointing his idea. The news scatters that the faith healer is performing miracles, and the entire countryside that is afflicted come to be healed. This sort of destroys the force of the playwright's argument. To the skeptical a mere handful of miracles would stand a better chance of approval. The protagonist has found the divine fire through love of humanity, and loses it when he comes in contact with a earthly creature who inspires romantic feeling. Thus he is torn between the spiritual and material forces. When the heroine absorbs his magnetism and is herself inspired then his healing gift is returned. "The Faith Healer" permits Milton Sills in the title role to have his strongest role since "The Honor System." He takes advantage of it by playing the part in an inspired manner. It is a fine portrayal, one rich in poise, restraint, shading and subtlety. Ann Forrest, as the regenerated girl, also acts as one inspired. It is her greatest role, and should make her a star. The spiritual quality, the poignancy of the theme—these will conquer the spectator.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Directed by George H. Melford.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Vaughn Moody, author of what has been termed "the great American drama," "The Great Divide," is the author of "The Faith Healer," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. The authorship of the screen version of this most powerful play has been intrusted to Mr. Moody's widow. In collaboration with Z. Wall Covington, Mrs. Moody has given the screen one of its finest pictures. There is a remarkable thread of love interest all through the interesting scenes. The problem in the play is whether one who has devoted his life to the fulfilment of a mission of healing—to a higher calling—shall place human love on the altar of sacrifice and tread the path alone, or whether he can fulfill that mission and have joy of love and companionship as well.

In addition the story touches upon one of the most widely discussed and debated beliefs of the age—the ability to heal disease and cast out sin by divine and superhuman power. The phase is presented with delicacy of treatment. The drama builds the keenest interest through compelling scenes, which are wonderfully well acted by Milton Sills. Ann Forrest and others. The settings are described as unusual; the photography is rich. George Melford directed.

PROGRAM READER

What is considered one of the finest pictures ever made will be presented at the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Faith Healer," adapted from William Vaughn Moody's powerful and dramatic play of the same name. It is a picture which makes people think and wonder and appraise themselves. It starts you asking questions of yourself. It offers a most fascinating romance which is interwoven in a theme of remarkable beauty. It offers one of the most widely discussed and debated beliefs of the age. It asks of you whether one can devote his life to a mission of healing and have the joy of love and companionship as well. It is a powerful picture, "The Faith Healer," and finely acted by Milton Sills and Ann Forrest. George Melford directed with infinite taste.

"OLIVER TWIST JR."
(First National)

Fairly Entertaining, But Disappointing to Dickens' Lovers

THE works of some authors of another age may be modernized without any loss in the effect of the story, but not so with Dickens. F. McGraw Willis, who adapted the story to the screen, has kept the plot of the original story and, as far as possible, the incidents, but he has necessarily lost the atmosphere of Dickens' country and period, which is just as essential an element of the story as the plot. The Dickensonian has learned to love "Oliver" as a boy and not as a young man of eighteen. "The Artful Dodger" and the "Bill Sykes" whom they knew are not on the screen. "Fagin," one of the most famous villains of literature, and a role of great importance in the stage production of the novel, is pushed in the background in the picture. These characters are remembered from the book for the clothes they wore, the places where they lived and their eccentricities of speech. The picture has lost all this. Take Dickens out of England and the Nineteenth Century, and it is no longer Dickens.

The picture will make fair entertainment for those who expect nothing more than the usual type of movie drama. It has some heart interest and pathos in the orphan asylum sequence and an occasional moment of suspense when Oliver is forced to steal. A romance is dragged in for no reason except to accomplish a pretty fade-out. Lillian Hall is the girl.

Harold Goodwin, starred in the production, does not seem to be imperfectly cast. More than six feet in height and seeming even older than eighteen, he makes a peculiar looking "Oliver" to those who know the book. He does not appear sufficiently helpless or pitiable to take the abuse which is heaped upon him in the asylum. He registers well in the dramatic spots, but his is not an unusually strong personality.

Oliver's troubles with the crafty "Fagin" are minimized in the picture. Forced by "Sykes" to steal, he is wounded and captured in the house, but because of the kindness of the girl he is nursed back to health. He returns to the rendevouz in an effort to aid Nancy and again falls in the power of the gang of thieves. Nancy "Squeals" and the den is raided. Director Webb shows good taste in not emphasizing the more brutal scenes between Nancy and Bill. As it is no one shall be shocked. Sykes ends his career by falling off the roof as in the book.

"Oliver Twist, Jr." is not more than an average picture despite the fact that it has the plot of a great author's work.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Charles Dickens' immortal story of Oliver Twist has been modernized and given an up-to-date setting in the photoplay "Oliver Twist, Jr.," which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This is a William Fox production with Harold Goodwin, who has played opposite Mary Pickford in "Suds" and "Heart of the Hills" in the leading role. He is a new star who presents an unusually pleasing personality and who will undoubtedly rise to the greatest heights of popularity.

Although Dickens' novel has been modernized, the plot and characters of the original story have been duplicated in the screen version. The Artful Dodger, Bill Sykes and Nancy all find their places on the screen and are faithful representations of the characters which the great novelist's pen so vividly painted. The scenes in the orphan asylum, the trials of friendless little Oliver in the big city, the hardships of Nancy and the flight of Bill Sykes will all appeal to the lovers of Dickens.

The story was adapted and modernized by F. McGrew Willis, and the production was made under the direction of Millard Webb. Included in the cast with Harold Goodwin are Lillian Hall, G. Raymond Nye, Irene Hunt, Scott McKee and George Nichols.

"Oliver Twist, Jr." will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

PROGRAM READER

"Oliver Twist, Jr.," which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, is a faithful picturization of Charles Dickens' immortal story of the young orphan fighting his way against a world of obstacles. Instead, however, of laying the story in England in the nineteenth century, William Fox, who produced the picture, offers a modernized version. The story is the same, but it takes place in the present day in the United States. But all the characters that the lover of Dickens knows so well—Bill Sykes, Fagin, Nancy, the Artful Dodger and Monks, all these are in the picture version.

A new star is introduced to the public in this production. He is Harold Goodwin, a young man who has played with Mary Pickford in "Heart of the Hills" and "Suds." He is cast in the role of Oliver and shows rare judgment in his characterization.

"Oliver Twist, Jr." will be seen at the ———— theatre for a period of ———— days. It is expected to prove one of the most popular pictures presented at this theatre in many a day.

CATCH LINES

A modern version of Charles Dickens' famous story with a new star—Harold Goodwin, in the leading role.

"MY LADY'S LATCHKEY"
(First National)

Mostly Good Clothes and Subtitles With Little Action or Incident

EXCEPT to those of the old time fans who revel in stories presenting the beautiful heroine and handsome hero in five reels of closeups with the clutch always in sight, we do not think this feature is going to register as much of anything worthy of emulation. The story is formula in plot and very episodic and convenient in the way it has been developed. No incident that provides entertainment has been evolved and there is no comedy relief. Katherine MacDonald is as beautiful, in her cold expressionless way, as ever. She wears a lot of pretty clothes and has been nicely lighted. The hero is of the matinee idol type and wears his dress suit very well. Acting opportunities are few and far between. The story is told mostly by titles with the result that the players walk into a set and talk to each other with nothing to do that would furnish some action. A single characterization, that of Hellena Phillips, stands out as interesting, although Thomas Jefferson also has a character role.

From a production angle the picture has been built with painstaking care. Photography, lightings, attention to detail in stage settings and general atmosphere are excellent.

The plot of "My Lady's Latchkey" concerns a gang of crooks, the leader of whom marries the heroine in order to gain an opportunity of robbing one of her relatives, only to be reformed through love for his wife and therefore escapes according to orthodox movie methods paying the penalty for his previous crimes. It is quite possible that the original novel, from which this was adapted, was a plausable and interesting crook story, but in picture form nothing much is in evidence but a lot of meaningless scenes explained by titles and a doubtful reform theme. May slide by without raising a storm of objections if they like Miss MacDonald, but if we were going to play it, we would do as Manager Plunkett of the New York Mark-Strand has done, run another feature on the same bill.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Annesley Grayle.....Katherine MacDonald

Countess De Santiago.....Claire DuBrey
Lord Annesley-Seton.....Howard Gaye
Lady Annesley-Seton.....Lenore Lynard
Mrs. Ellsworth.....Hellena Phillips
Ruthven Smith.....Thomas Jefferson

Directed by Edwin Carewe.
Story by C. N. and A. M. Williamson.
Scenario by Finis Fox.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"My Lady's Latchkey," adapted from the novel "The Second Latchkey," by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, a story of the reform of a crook through the influence of his wife, is the feature picture to be presented at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

Katherine MacDonald, the American beauty of the screen, has the leading role and is ably supported by a fine cast that includes Edmund Lowe, Thomas Jefferson and Hellena Phillips. The story is one that permits the star to wear fine gowns that enhance her beauty and which stages naturally amid fine settings and pretty exteriors. The picture is primarily a romance with a theme founded on the regeneration of a man through love. It gets its title from the fact that Miss MacDonald has a key to a house which has been robbed and is under suspicion along with her husband as being implicated in the crime. The production is a First National attraction in five reels. Miss MacDonald scores again as a screen star and has been ably supported.

PROGRAM READER

"My Lady's Latchkey," with beautiful Katherine MacDonald in the leading role and supported by a fine cast of players that includes Edmund Lowe, Claire DuBrey, Thomas Jefferson and Hellena Phillips, is the feature picture attraction to be presented at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' showing beginning ————.

In "My Lady's Latchkey" Miss MacDonald plays the role of a young English girl of noted family connections who is tricked into marrying one of a gang of crooks, solely for the opportunity that would be presented to rob a certain house of its valuables but who through her influence is responsible for the reformation of her crook husband and the means of bringing to justice the other members of the gang who refuse to mend their ways.

The picture is primarily a romance with a theme of redemption through love but there is also considerable suspense obtained in the melodramatic incidents surrounding the theft of some jewels including a very valuable diamond. Miss MacDonald is under suspicion by her relatives of having been implicated in the theft but proves herself innocent.

"My Lady's Latchkey" is a First National attraction produced with a careful attention to detail and with much that those who enjoy the well constructed society drama will find of unusual interest. The production is in five reels.

SUGGESTIONS

Several exploitation campaigns for "My Lady's Latchkey" as put over by well known exhibitors have been described in detail in recent issues of the News. They offer tried and proved suggestions by practical showmen that can be fully recommended. Among this number was the exploitation used by Milton Bell, publicity director for the Crandall theatres, Washington, D. C. Mr. Bell put the picture over to a good week's business and we suggest that exhibitors copy his plan as nearly as possible in exploiting the production.

CATCH LINES

The American Beauty in an interesting story of an English girl who married a crook without knowing his record and then succeeds in reforming him by her goodness and virtue.

The story of how the influence of a good woman will change the life of a bad man. Of the reform of a crook who had married only that it might aid him in putting over a master robbery.

"BEAU REVEL"
(Ince—Paramount)

Fairly Interesting, Though Would Be More Convincing If Developed Humorously

IT is rather an unusual picture in many ways which Thomas H. Ince presents in "Beau Revel." Not having read Louis Joseph Vance's book of the same name we cannot state whether the adaptation is faithful. But if it is a truthful version, then Mr. Ince missed an opportunity to make it score by developing it in a humorous fashion. The characterization is not convincing. Any man who has played the beau, whose sole purpose in life is to please his own vanity and conquer feminine hearts, would take life lightly. His motto would be "off with the old love, on with the new." Yet the picture builds to a surprising and tragic conclusion.

Here is a dandy of middle age who boasts of his power over women. A time comes when his son falls in love. The father enters into a compact with the young man whereby the latter will give up his attentions for two weeks so that the former may decide whether she is fit to be the wife of the youth. Naturally he falls in love with her. It is during the dandy's expressions of his amours—his primping, his nonchalant mannerisms, his captivating charm which spell the entertaining moments. When the picture takes up its conflict it becomes hectic and loses its vitality and color. "Beau Revel" might have made a scintillating comedy. Instead it develops a coarse fibre. Ince and his director have given it a beautiful production. Yet they have not paid good attention to technical details. There are a number of abrupt stops in the continuity and fade-outs never have a chance to score before the action switches to another scene.

A good deal of the plot hinges on conversation and the titling is really commendable except for one excerpt which says, "Can't you understand—I'm leaving you?" The elderly gay Lothario excites admiration and sympathy because of his "system" and his pride in himself. But when he stoops to petty tactics he not only loses respect, but the plot loses its character. The son comes home at the appointed hour with fire in his eyes and a gun in his hand. He knows that his beloved is in the house and believes his father guilty of most anything. A wordy argument occurs which culminates in the girl coming from her hiding place and denouncing both men and the gay father committing suicide in a very dramatic way. The death will be listed as accidental, for in arranging the portieres he fell out of the window. Such a man would have appreciated his error and continued his pursuit of women. Lewis Stone gives a cameo portrayal of the rounder, while Florence Vidor and Lloyd Hughes as the sweethearts are excellent. The picture is a character study. Naturally it is not crowded with action and incident.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An example of the results that may be obtained through the combination of an unusual story, a brilliant cast, good direction and sterling photography, "Beau Revel," the Ince-Paramount picture, adapted from Louis Joseph Vance's story, will be presented at the ———— theatre next ————. It is a story of the ultra-fashionable, wealthy society leader of New York, whose object in life once his business hours have drawn to a close, is to cultivate his power over women. He boasts of his conquests. Everything he does is measured by his desire to please them. His vanity makes him a dandy. Beau Revel is fascinating to women. He has a system with them.

But one day he discovers that his son is infatuated with a hostess of a popular dancing club. Wishing to break up his son's infatuation, he makes a compact with him not to see her for two weeks. He says he will have her alone in his apartment on midnight of that day to prove to Dick that she is not of his world. What follows is a highly dramatic scene, the detailing of which would spoil the interest for the patrons of the ————. Suffice to state that it is charmingly presented—that it offers tense drama, luxurious scenes and that it is acted by a sterling cast headed by Florence Vidor, and which includes Lewis Stone.

PROGRAM READER

He was a dandy—a dude who lived only to please his own vanity. He knew that he had a power over women. He imagined every woman to be in love with him. He gave them a month at the outside to fall in love. Then he suddenly discovered that he had a chip of the old block. His son, Dick, also liked a woman. But the father had played fast and loose to such an extent that he imagined every woman to be immoral. He proposed to the son to keep away from the girl for two weeks—so that he might discover her faults or vices. What happened? Was he disillusioned or did he discover that the woman was possessed of fine moral fibre? See the unusual and dramatic picture, "Beau Revel," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast that includes Florence Vidor and Lewis Stone.

CATCH LINES

When a man undertakes to prove to his son that the girl he loves is unfit for him, he assumes a great obligation. See "Beau Revel," the intensely interesting picture.

"CHICKENS"
(Ince-Paramount)

Forced Comedy and Hokum, Never Ring the Bell

THERE is always a penalty attached to the job of making a great picture. The succeeding one is always brought up in comparison and its shortcomings are perfectly visible. The law of averages cannot make them all good. But "Chickens" is a mighty poor vehicle for the star who came into popularity over night as the result of "Twenty-three and One-half Hour's Leave." It may be termed a comedy if one wants to generalize it. But after it has run through its spool, there is nothing which indicates comedy—not even in the broadest sense. For most of the action, it is extremely dull, without even the saving grace of slapstick. Had the idea been intrusted to one of a half dozen of our best slapstick comedians with the hokum greatly exaggerated, the picture might have some appeal.

But the director seems to be up a tree—whether to develop it along legitimate lines or force it over with gags. The unbalanced plot brings out an uneven continuity. There is none of the appeal, humor, characterization or fine detail which are usually incorporated in a MacLean feature. "Chickens" is as light and feathery as a newborn bantam and never grows up into a full-fledged story. The director has resorted to some properties to start the picture—one of which shows a motor car of the vintage of 1900. Bringing in this gag emphasizes the fact that it has been used time and again in slapsticks to better advantage. After the hero trades his speedster for the old relic and plunges through the side of a barn the comedy may be said to have spent itself. The remainder of the story has to do with a country yokel who has the mortgage on the young man's farm, the girl who is wooed by both, and a barnyard full of chickens. The hero is a city chap and according to Hoyle must be ignorant of anything which is identified with a farm.

The picture sags because there is nothing to hold the interest. There are no surprises, no twists—every detail, every incident is developed in regulation style. It is the kind of picture which Mack Sennett has been burlesquing to much better results. There is an effort to add a novel touch by employing some photographic feats. The hero's nightmare in which he dreams of chickens, roosters and other barnyard specie as having gigantic proportions is the one refreshing touch in the picture. Compressed into a two-reeler or at the most a three-reeler, "Chickens" would look better. There is no opportunity for the players. MacLean has a comedian's role but he is not a comedian. So all he does is look pleasant. The titles are as forced as the hokum.—Lenght, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Chickens" is the title of the Paramount picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— starring Douglas MacLean. This is an adaptation of Herschel S. Hall's magazine story, "Yanconna Yillies." The picture deals with the humorous, and, at times, tragic difficulties of a wealthy city chap, who takes to chicken farming as the result of his departed uncle's will, aided and abetted by love at first sight. The girl owns the chickens which are the pride and envy of the countryside. They command a fabulous price. One day the blooded fowl are apparently poisoned and the young man has a nightmare in which the chickens return to wreak vengeance upon him.

The complications resulting from the predicament in which Stanwood finds himself are fraught with genuine comedy and melodramatic highlights. In reality the picture may be called a scintillating comedy which is said to furnish as much entertainment as "23½ Hours Leave." Gladys George is the leading woman and the support generally is excellent, it including such players as Claire McDowell, Charles Mailes and Edith Yorke. Jack Nelson directed from a scenario by Agnes Christine Johnston.

PROGRAM READER

Have you ever raised chickens? Did you ever chase a chicken or have one chase you? Douglas MacLean was chased by giant chickens in his newest comedy, "Chickens," which is the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This picture is said to be one of the best in which Mr. MacLean has appeared since he became a star. It may be called a delightful comedy filled with laughter and thrills, not to speak of many surprising photographic effects. This picture is adapted from one of Herschel S. Hall's magazine stories and tells of the adventures and romance of a city youth who takes up chicken farming. "Chickens" is a tale of eggs and scrambled situations. Come and be royally entertained.

SUGGESTIONS

Douglas MacLean has established a following and it would be well to look over this one and give it a presentation. While it isn't as humorous and perfect as "Twenty Three and One-Half Hours Leave," nevertheless it has its humorous possibilities which can be made the most of in an exploitation scheme. You can bill it as a story of scrambled situations—a story of eggs, hens, roosters, a city chap, and a country girl. Bill it as a snappy comedy which scores with delightful humor. Link up with meat markets, poultry dealers, etc. If you are located in a city which is putting on a poultry show it would be excellent advertising to link up with it. .Why not put over some bally-hoo stunt by having some one ride about town in a 1902 model of motor car? Such a one is used in the picture.

"THE MAGNIFICENT BRUTE"
(Universal)

A Good Western With Plenty of Action

EVERY now and then we get the usual Northwestern picture with mounted police and French Canadians playing the prominent roles. "The Magnificent Brute" is a picture of this type, but it is far and away from the usual crop of these westerns. Not that the plot in itself is unusual but that the characters are stronger and are drawn more naturally. To give impetus to the story the scenes take place at a season of the year when the northwoods is clothed in mantles of snow. The outdoor shots have been carefully selected and have never been beaten in our best scenics. The opening scenes show Mayo guiding a canoe in a snowstorm with an Indian as his companion. He is on his way to claim his "girl" after an absence of three years. But another has taken his place in the young woman's favor and when he pleads with her, is slightly scorned. The story now shifts to the villain and his accomplices, bringing in a few good fights, until the big moment when the girl's father is attacked and left for dead. Villain now accuses hero of the dead. From here on the story shifts back and forth in such a way that the spectator is kept constantly guessing until the end when hero "gets" the girl.

The last scenes remind us very much of the old melodrama days for the characters are all assembled in hero's home for the grand finale. First hero has a fight, which is thrilling to say the least, with a bad man; villain then enters with his accomplices who try to seize hero, who is too alert for them; then the girl is told by villain that hero is in a closet and orders one of his men to shoot through the door. This is done in the hope that the girl will scream, which she does, and draw hero to the front door that they may get him. But hero is still elusive and makes his entrance through the roof with gun in hand ready to shoot if necessary.

The production is melodramatic in its sequences and should afford plenty of excitement.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Frank Mayo's latest Universal feature, "The Magnificent Brute," will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

It is a story of France in America at a time when romance was young, and the principal characters were of the strong, virile sort. Roles of this kind are exactly suited to Frank Mayo's talents and it is indeed a pleasure to witness the handsome star portray the principal character, that of an honest trapper who leaves his sweetheart for a three years' trip in the woods, only to find on his return that his place has been usurped by a scheming villain.

This production is entirely different from the usual run of Canadian Northwoods' pictures, for it has an exceptionally strong story and the characters are as near to life as the originals themselves.

The scenes are laid in the Northwest when the forests are clothed in their winter mantles which is an added attraction, for the scenes are well selected and lend a certain charm to the story in the wildness of their settings.

A splendid cast supports Mr. Mayo in "The Magnificent Brute," which is only equalled by the capable direction of Robert Thornby.

PROGRAM READER

Frank Mayo's latest Universal, "The Magnificent Brute," should interest all patrons of this house who enjoy the strong, virile story, laid in most attractive settings.

The picture is one of the best Westerns ever produced in that the characters "do something" and are exceptionally true to life.

In the opening scenes the patrons will be drawn by the natural beauty of the scenic shots, which were taken in the Northwoods at great peril to the actors and at a time of year when these woods are clothed in their mantles of snow."

In the opening scenes the star is seen guiding a canoe in a snowstorm with an Indian as his only companion.

He is on his way to claim his "'girl" after an absence of three years. But another has taken his place in the young woman's affections, and when he pleads with her is slightly scorned.

The story has many strong melodramatic situations, has romantic value and enough interest to keep out patrons sitting straight until the very last close-up.

The production is well directed and has a splendid cast, among whom is Dorothy Devore, Percy Challenger, Alberta Lee, J. J. Lanor, Dick Sutherland and Ely Stanton.

SUGGESTIONS

Don't be afraid to book this one, for it will give your patrons plenty of interest value and a story which will keep them guessing upto the last reel.

You can go as strongly as you like on the story, for it surely will not disappoint. Especially play up the outdoor scenes, which are rather a novelty, in that well-selected spots have been chosen, which picture the woods in all their winter grandeur.

Of course, Mayo is your one best bet, but do not forget to run as many short accounts of the plot as you can in your town papers.

If you can decorate your lobby so it will give the atmosphere in which the picture is surrounded and dress up a couple of men and a woman in the costumes of the country, not forgetting the snowshoes, etc., and let them walk around, so much the better.

SENNETT'S BEST IS THE BEST.

When Charley Chaplin ran a nail in his foot it was as bad as if Heifetz had lost a finger and it led us to hope that Mack Sennett's title writer will persuade his boss to be very careful in crossing the street. Casualties involving Sennett and Chaplin involve national resources, and if Chaplin is ever so careless we hope Sennett will be careful. If we lose one of them it will be bad, no matter which it is, and we prefer it is not Sennett.

When he touches high, as he does in his latest release, The Small Town Idol, it is as high as Chaplin and Sennett works all the time. He produces. His is a Niagara of production, almost like the flood that Dickens used to release.

To name the classics of moving picture comedy would be to name at once three of Chaplin and at least five of Sennett. Chaplin was only half developed in Carmen, but he reached his peak in Shoulder Arms, Easy Street, and The Kid. Sennett was on his heights with Uncle Tom's Cabin, Salome vs. Shenandoah, Married Life, Love, Honor and Behave, and now in The Small Town Idol he has his head wrapped in a cloud.

He has no trouble in running in competition with Chaplin right at this minute when Charles is at his best in The Kid. We are half inclined to say that The Small Town Idol is the greatest moving picture ever made. For some time we have been convinced that if Sennett would take D W Griffith as George Cohan takes a melodrama or a romance and Josh D W within an inch of his life, the United States would laugh so that Europe would hear it.

He is within an inch or so of doing that very thing in The Small Town Idol, but what he needs as a basis is the honest to goodness production of Mr. Griffith to begin on. There's Way Down East if Sennett has no scenario handy. This is just a suggestion to a man who seems to need none.

The cussed censor has done something to The Small Town Idol. It may have been inevitable. When Sennett uses all of his girls for scenic effect a censor is likely to think that something must be done about it and so thinking do it.

A censor who would touch this picture would take a whitewash brush to Raphael, but some one must have had the heart to do it. Sennett was going strong with a Babylonian scene which filled one of our ambitions or would have filled it. That ambition was to have Sennett take Griffith's Fall of Babylon and join to it the scene in Salome where the bird drowns out the debacle by upsetting the water tank. You remember the scene. "My Mistake."

Harrison Says

The one thing that stands out the most in this picture is Director Willat's intelligent work. His characterization is so marvelous, that he should be entitled to the fame of a director of first rank. His children characters could not be handled any truer to life; nor could his spinster characters.

"THE FIRST BORN"

STARRING SESSUE HAYAKAWA

Is one of the first five of the Best 40 Productions of the year, selected by National Board of Review

Produced Under Direction of

COLIN CAMPBELL

The Critics Wrote:

In Motion Picture News:

" THE FIRST BORN " should draw like a house afire.

It has a universal appeal.

A simple and expressive feature with a star who is thoroughly grounded in his art.

The picture is remarkably rich in atmosphere, the setting being correct and generating romance and color.

In Moving Picture World:

The power the picture exercised on a crowded house at the Strand Theatre put " The First Born " over as an unqualified success.

Exhibitors Trade Review:

The feature, on the whole, ranks as an attraction of the first grade and quality.

The elements of suspense is well maintained, there are thrills in plenty and abundant pathos.

Colin Campbell has done a good directorial job, the continuity is flawless and fast action is continually in evidence.

Exhibitors Herald:

" The First Born " is a picture new in theme and beautifully presented.

A heart-stirring tale that will strike response in the breasts of the child-loving world.

High grade in artistry and excellent in every way.

Directed by Colin Campbell.

Franchise

The formation of the Allied Distribution Corporation creates a definite market for the product of the worthy independent producer. It assures him an outlet in the independent field that will put his production plans on a definite basis.

For the operator of the independent exchange in every territory it means an assured quality product with a definite number of releases during the year.

In operating on the Franchise basis with the buyer he is assured of such product and such quality and in sufficient number so that he can place his business policies definitely before the exhibitor much in the same way that the program companies do.

And for the Independent Producer it offers a market where the intensest kind of showmanship prevails in the exploitation of a picture which means it will earn its utmost.

Independent Producers Buyers

Our plans are mighty interesting. They are a definite step in the co-ordination of the independent faction.

The Independents' Diagnosis

THE Man With an Editorial to Write went in search of three or four learned market experts for an answer to the question, "What is the matter with the independent market?"

The diagnosis is not complete. For no two physicians of the body commercial can be found to agree. On only one point is there unanimity. There is something wrong with conditions in the independent field.

All the symptoms are present. One glance at the advertising pages of the trade journals will answer this point. A healthy independent market is always reflected in a plentitude of offerings, and in a variety of attractions—from thirty thousand dollar "good buys" to hundred thousand dollar negatives.

When the pulse is low and the blood pressure high—well, look things over as they stand to-day.

No First Runs?

THE first diagnostician approached declared that we could find the answer right in our own text pages.

"Look over your own department, 'With the First Runs,'" was his statement. "Check off the number of houses that are apparently signed up for their fifty-two-week product from two or three definite sources—and then try to figure how you would squeeze an independent attraction in for dates.

"It isn't a question of merit. The calendar settles the problem. There are fifty-two weeks in the year and a limited number of first runs on which the producer must count for his 'big money.' The managers of first rank houses select the two or three organizations on which they are willing to rely for a definite quantity of pictures of a certain standard and obligate themselves far in advance. Take this big money away from the 'possibilities' on a picture and what encouragement do you leave for the ambitious producer?

"Only the other day the head of one of the largest booking circuits in the country told me, 'If I were offered a good picture almost free I'd have a difficult time finding a date for it in one of our houses before next October without knowing that I was going to shelve some other contracted picture for it.'"

The Exception or the Rule?

THE diagnosis of the first expert we had encountered seemed plausible until we met Expert Number 2. This professional gentleman admitted that there might be some truth in the first analysis but what about this:

"Look at 'Hush.' You find that picture getting first runs, don't you? You see it getting dates, big money, and exploitation, don't you? It's even booked at the Capitol.

"No, the trouble with the independent market is that there aren't enough pictures worthy of the first runs. Dates can always be found if you have the goods."

This satisfied us until we met a cynic who countered with this view, "Yes, but what's the use of making big pictures if you can't get the cash for them? How many territorial buyers are there with the money to swing many good pictures? You can't make hundred thousand dollar negatives with white paper money."

How About the Exploitation?

BY this time we were ready to admit that the patient might die at any moment and the Coroner's jury would inscribe the verdict, "Cause Unknown."

Then we addressed the head of a large producing company and sought an "outsider's" viewpoint on the independent situation.

"Have you ever stopped to figure how much of the trouble might be due to the advertising on the average independent picture?" he asked. "If we set out to gross six hundred thousand or more on a production, you'll find us spending a business-like proportion of that in advertising showing the exhibitor that it is a six hundred thousand dollar picture.

"But, judging merely from the side-lines, it seems to me that the average independent with a picture of the same quality, and, perhaps, with the same hopes for his gross, will attempt to market it with the least expense possible. A thousand dollar appropriation for trade paper space, for example, can't be expected to play a tune in the ears of the first run man that says 'a thousand a week rental.'

"How can they hope to 'get by' that way? It's a show game. The same independent whose press book will tell the exhibitor in a city of fifty thousand, 'Use big space, spend money on this picture,' will attempt to cover the United States himself with a wandering page or two of copy. It can't be done. You can't convince the exhibitor that your picture is worth an expenditure of two hundred dollars or so for the week's run in his town when your own effort indicates that you think it worth only a few hundred for the entire country. And if you don't sell him the important exploitation angle nowadays you don't get the booking."

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Picture and Theatrical Industries Launch Campaign for Irish Relief

THE motion-picture and theatrical industries have been called upon by the American Committee for Relief in Ireland to co-operate in the campaign to raise funds to feed and clothe the Irish women and children who have been made destitute by the reign of terror in their country. At a luncheon on Friday, March 18, at Delmonico's, leading representatives of the motion-picture interests and of the principal theatrical enterprises in America, were entertained by the executive officers of the American Committee for Relief in Ireland, and an earnest request was made that theatres throughout the United States co-operate in this campaign in the same effective way in which they aided the recent Hoover Drive and the various War Relief movements.

The response of theatrical and motion-picture men to the call for aid was a hearty one, and a committee representing the various interests of the two industries was appointed to work out concrete plans for raising funds in theatres throughout the country. This committee is composed of William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Sam H. Harris, president of the Producing Theatrical Managers' Association; John Emerson, president of the Actors' Equity; Martin Beck, head of the Orpheum Circuit; E. F. Albee, of the United Booking Offices; Samuel S. Scribner, of the Columbia Amusement Company; Joseph Webber, president of the American Federation of Musicians; Harry L. Spencer, assistant president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators; George M. Cohan, William Fox, Marcus Loew, and Walter J. Moore.

This committee was chosen by Ex-Judge Morgan J. O'Brien, chairman of the American Committee for Relief in Ireland. In explaining the purpose for which funds are now being gathered for relief in Ireland, Judge O'Brien emphasized the fact that the campaign is distinctly non-political and non-sectarian in character.

W.C.T.U. to Launch Big Drive on April 3rd

National headquarters of the W. C. T. U. has made the announcement from its offices in Evanston, near Chicago, that a tremendous drive for a strict observance of the fourth commandment (which includes Sunday closing, etc.) and against the use of tobacco, will be opened April 3. On this date, people all over the country will be urged to go to church, and the week following will be a week of prayer. Then comes anti-tobacco Sunday, April 10, which will be followed by a nation-wide anti-tobacco crusade.

Some of the things that should not be permitted on Sundays, according to the W. C. T. U., are automobiling for pleasure, golf, baseball, dancing, theatres and moving pictures.

All local unions and branches, Sunday schools, churches and schools will be asked to co-operate. Leaflets were sent out Monday for general distribution.

Recent Incorporations in State of New York

THE following motion picture concerns were incorporated in New York State the past week. The capitalization as well as the directors of each are given as follows:

Yankee Film Corporation, $10,000, Samuel Borchardt, James R. Boswell, William A. Leith, New York City; Four Horsemen Exhibiting Corporation, $5,000, Nelson and Norbert Ruttenberg, S. Edward Fink, New York; Mastodon Films, Inc., $20,000, Charles C. Burr, William T. Lackey, A. J. Romagna, New York; Affiliated Distributors, Inc., $20,000, Charles C. Burr, William C. Lackey, Anthony J. Romagna, New York; Burnside Theatre Corporation, $5,000, J. A. Lewis, Myron Butler, R. L. Schweriner, New York.

New Company to Feature Pacific Northwest

To take a conspicuous part in production of motion-picture plays, utilizing the great scenic attractions of the Pacific Northwest as a background, a group of Portland specialists has organized the Kizer Studios, Inc., and is preparing to register results early this season with the first set of dramatic films.

Associated in the project are: F. H. Kiser, who has given fame to Oregon's scenic assets in still photography; R. J. Grace, architect and engineer; Anna Shannon Monroe, magazine and dramatic writer; George Natanson, a well-known figure in musical comedy, and Fayette E. Marsh, attorney and fiscal agent of the corporation. Later Walter Pritchard Eaton, of Boston, will be one of the executive staff.

According to Mr. Marsh, the producing staff is equipped now to make a start on a photoplay, which will have its setting in the vicinity of Portland with a story written by Miss Monroe interwoven in natural scenes. It will be followed by the filming of another Monroe scenario of the Boy Scouts, probably in Glacier Park. Eaton also will furnish a theme.

Famous Players Promotes Oscar A. Morgan

Emil E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces the promotion of Oscar A. Morgan to an important position in the foreign department of the company. Mr. Morgan will work directly under Mr. Shauer.

Warns Exhibitors on New Insurance Policies

A letter has been addressed to the N York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Co merce by the president of the Herbert Ebenstein Co., insurance brokers, an the alleged inclusion of a clause in n policies which would make the compar issuing these policies not liable "for juries or death to any person as a resu directly or indirectly, of fire or conflag tion." This letter, as quoted by Herb R. Ebenstein, is submitted in part s follows:

"I wish to bring before the body the very ser condition which has just arisen in connection v Liability Insurance for theatres.

"Our office has discovered that the new poli being issued by the various companies specifically clude 'Loss from Liability for injuries or death any person as a result, directly or indirectly of or conflagration.' This clause, which has been ge ally adopted by all the Companies, members of Conference, specifically excludes what, in our opin is the greatest hazard to which a theatre owner constantly exposed.

"This clause, by its brevity, covers a wide field it is our belief that should the interpretation of clause remain in the discretion of one of the sma companies, that Liability could be disclaimed on one of the following contingencies:

"Should smoke from the boiler-room rise in theatre and cause a confusion and a general exodus your patrons, and should anybody be trampled or h as a result of this confusion, the Liability could disclaimed as an indirect result of a fire.

"Should a fire occur upon the premises next nearby adjoining the theatre and should the noise the fire-engines cause a confusion with similar resu liability could be disclaimed as resulting indirec from a fire.

"Should the film in the projection booth catch and cause a glare which might frighten your audie and cause confusion with a general retreat from theatre, an accident resulting therefrom might be claimed as resulting indirectly from a fire.

"The fact that this insurance is excluded from a one particular policy is not of vital importance if alternate plan for insuring this liability is offer The seriousness of the situation lies in the fact t should any such contingency occur, the insured wo be left without protection of any sort and since t limits of Liability insurance are governed only the psychology of a Negligence Lawyer or Jury, th is no definite way in which a theatre owner co prepare to offset this loss, and there is no reason w a more or less serious accident of this nature could result in the entire loss of his property."

Pathe Will Sell Product of Stoll Film Co.

Paul Brunet Signs Agreement to Handle Output of British Producers

TWO international factors in the field of motion pictures have become affiliated through a contract just executed, whereby Pathe Exchange, Inc., will actually sell, as well as distribute, the product of the Stoll Film Company, Ltd., throughout the United States. Under the terms of an agreement signed by Paul Brunet of Pathe, and Jeffrey Bernerd, managing director of the Stoll Film Co., Ltd., and co-managing director of the Stoll Picture Productions, Ltd., of England, Pathe assumes immediately the selling of the Stoll output. Mr. Bernerd came here from London for the express purpose of forming the affiliation with Pathe, and the day after the contract was consummated he returned to England.

The twelve pictures already released by the Stoll organization here, will continue to be sold under the series plan. However, beginning with the second or third week in May, Pathe will inaugurate a new selling system. Instead of releasing one picture a week, Pathe will issue one every other week. Each production will be sold on an open booking basis—on its individual merits, in effect. No new Stoll pictures will be offered between March 20 and the inauguration of the Pathe plan of selling.

A desire to create an American market for English made pictures, which he has every assurance will become better and better during the coming year, found Paul Brunet ready to take over the selling of the Stoll product. While in Europe last year Mr. Brunet became thoroughly conversant with the elaborate plans of the Stoll Company to produce for the world market—particularly for the United States. He was informed of the Stoll plans for the biggest studio in Europe and the third largest in the world—where now five companies are working.

"The American market is now ripe for the English made picture," said Mr. Brunet, in discussing the arrangement with Stoll, "and it affords Pathe a feeling of the deepest pleasure to be placed in a position to sell the product of the Stoll Film Company. Sir Oswald Stoll represents the highest type of motion picture producer in England, and his product represents the best. In the past, perhaps, the British producer failed to grasp the American 'idea' in his picture making. In fact, he did not make for the world market, but for the 4000 theatres of the British Isles. But the greater field—the United States with its 17,000 motion picture exhibitors—offered such a vastly wider scope for the operation of the English producer that he began to select stories and produce pictures with an eye across the Atlantic.

"The Stoll organization with its remarkable plant at Cricklewood, London, and its country or exterior studio at Surbiton, was in a splendid position to take the fullest advantage of his opportunity.

"Consequently I think I am justified in predicting that American audiences will thoroughly enjoy and welcome the big productions Stoll will offer in the future.

"We can afford to release only the best pictures we receive from England, for out of the forty or fifty we anticipate receiving in the coming year, we will issue only twenty-six.

"Pathe welcomes the opportunity of placing before American audiences the best English made pictures and feels particularly gratified by the confidence in its organization manifested by the Stoll Company in selecting Pathe as its distributing agency."

Before sailing on the Imperator Mr. Bernerd gave an insight into the present and future plans of Stoll that indicates a determined effort to corral a goodly share of the American picture business.

E. E. Fulton, Picture Pioneer, Dies Suddenly

Founder of E. E. Fulton Co., Well Known to Trade, Succumbs in Chicago

THE sudden death of E. E. Fulton, president and founder of the E. E. Fulton Company, which occurred in Chicago Friday night, March 18, after an illness of but a few hours, marks the passing of another of those pioneers of the motion picture industry on whose enduring foundations its present greatness has been built.

Since the earliest days of motion picture activity the name E. E. Fulton has been identified with mid-western and western motion picture affairs. One of the first, if not the first, in the film distributing field, he has always been closely associated with motion pictures in one form or another. Of late years, however, he has been best known as the manufacturer of "Fulco" specialties.

While he had not been in good health for the past year following an attack of paralysis last April, his death at the Hotel Sherman Friday as the result of acute gastritis, has come as a complete shock to all who knew him. Seemingly he had recovered to a very large extent from his former illness and was himself looking forward with zest to a return to active participation in the manufacturing details of the E. E. Fulton Company. For the past several months it had been his daily practice to spend a good part of the day at the factory and on Friday he made no exception to this rule. Following a morning spent in going over with his sons, in whose hands the active management of the business has rested since his first illness, he accompanied his son Ralph downtown in the afternoon, and shortly after they had arrived in the loop he was seized with an acute attack of gastritis and was taken to the Hotel Sherman, where the end came unexpectedly at 7:45 P. M.

Simple services were held Sunday afternoon attended only by the immediate members of the family and business associates. Interment was in Chicago Monday.

Indicative of the character of the man was the splendid spirit of comradeship which existed in both his personal and business family. To all he was "Dad," and as "Dad" Fulton he was known from coast to coast. It is rare that such closely knit relationship between father and sons is extended to business activity, but in the E. E. Fulton Company existed a perfect and sympathetic understanding and team work which has done much to create the splendid reputation which Mr. Fulton and his sons enjoyed in the business world. High ideals and a firm conviction in right for right's sake marked all his dealings.

E. E. Fulton entered the motion picture field as western representative for Lubin in the days when the film industry was indeed but an infant and through the successive stages of General Film Company, Universal and Mutual reorganizations, he advanced to considerable prominence in western film activities. But it was following the advent of Mutual to the field of film exchanges and "the battle of the independents" that, with the keen foresight that has characterized all his activities, Mr. Fulton sensed the possibilities of the supply field and in 1910 organized with his sons the E. E. Fulton Company of today, as dealers and distributors in motion picture supplies and accessories, from which developed the present large manufacturing business. He also has been inteersted in the U. T. E. since its organization.

He leaves a widow and three sons, Leroy Myron, Ralph H. and Carl H., who were associated with him in his business; and three brothers, George Fulton, of Dayton, Ohio; J. H. Fulton, of Chicago, and Guy Fulton, of Indianapolis.

Censorship Victories in Two More States; N. Y. Hearing Set

Idaho and Missouri Bills Unsuccessful; Preparing for Albany Fight

FURTHER news of motion picture victories in the series of legislative battles, which are now being waged in many States, is reported this week. In Idaho, after a strenuous battle on the part of organized exhibitors, both censor and Sunday closing bills were killed in the Legislature.

Utah, which is now without cigarettes under the new law, escaped further drastic restrictions when the Sunday closing bill was withdrawn from the Legislature by its author. The bill would have made it unlawful to show any lewd, vulgar or offensive picture or pictures depicting the smoking of cigarettes. It would also prohibit the attendance after six o'clock in late afternoon of children in theatres who are under 16 years of age or under the apparent age of 16 years unless accompanied by parent or guardian. The bill provided that guardians must be real and not persons appointed by the theatre to avoid the law. Section 3 of the bill would have provided against the holding or operation of any motion picture theatre, vaudeville or any other theatre on Sunday and also provides that no entertainments should be conducted on that day.

A bloodless victory has been won in Wisconsin. A stiff censorship bill suffered the unusual fate of becoming lost after it had been introduced in the Legislature last month. The clerk of the Senate has no record of the bill and says it must be an Assembly bill, but the clerk of the Assembly states that he has never seen it. The legislative reference library, which writes up the proposed laws, has no record prescribing cures for motion pictures.

Missouri Bill Defeated

The Missouri Senate on March 15 refused to take up the motion picture censorship bill by a vote of 17 to 14. The bill has been on the Senate calendar for engrossment for the last ten days. A similar bill was passed by the House March 3 and sent to the Senate the following day. This bill was referred to the Senate committee on criminal jurisprudence, where it has remained for the last ten days.

Senator Hostetter, one of the authors of the Senate bill, after waiting all day for an opportunity to call the measure, at a late hour moved that the rules be suspended and the bill be taken up for engrossment. This met with strenuous opposition and eventually the Senate adjourned.

Prepare for N. Y. Hearing

Practically every member of the executive committee of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League reached Albany early in the afternoon of March 23 for a conference and for outlaying a plan which will be followed in opposing the Clayton censorship bill at next Wednesday's hearing, which will take place before the joint ways and means committee. This hearing was arranged after repeated requests for it were made during the past week. It will probably be one of the largest held during the present Legislature session.

Those who arrived in Albany made their way to the State Capitol where they held a long conference with Senator James Walker. Later they conferred with other Legislature leaders. Among those who attended were Sydney S. Cohen, president of the National as well as the State association, C. A. O'Reilly, S. I. Berman, C. A. McMann, all of New York; Frank Kock, Irving Salyerds and Jack Farren, of Rochester; Ira Moser and Roscoe Mitchell, of Buffalo; C. A. McCarthy, of Hoosic Falls; William A. Dillon, of Ithaca; C. A. Hayman, of Niagara Falls; N. Dipson, of Batavia; W. H. Linton, of Utica; George Roberts, William Bernstein, and Fred Elliott, of Albany.

William A. Brady also arrived in Albany on Wednesday and met and conferred with Senator James Walker, but refused to divulge the nature of his mission.

Local Victory in Buffalo

The local censorship battle in Buffalo has been settled, with the exhibitors winning a decisive victory, the committee of citizens proposing local censorship having accepted two ordinances backed by the exhibitors and based on those accepted by the State Conference of Mayors.

A meeting of committees representing the exhibitors and the citizens was held in the offices of Roscoe R. Mitchell, attorney for the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association, in the Fidelity building last week when two ordinances were agreed upon and the chairmen of both committees were instructed to propose to the city council their adoption, with, however, the suggestion that no action be taken until after the present session of the Legislature had adjourned. If a State system of censorsh is adopted, the local ordinances will be u necessary.

The first ordinance agreed upon relat to advertising of pictures and theatres an provides that such advertising shall tru describe the nature and character of pi tures shown in Buffalo.

The second ordinance provides for th regulation of the showing of moving pi tures and prohibits the showing of an pictures in the city which are obscene, in decent, improper, licentious, immoral c tend to degrade the public morals or t incite or encourage crime or disrespe for law.

The ordinances provide for the appoint ment of a motion picture commissione and an advisory committee of citizens wh shall serve without pay. Pictures will nc be censored before being shown if the have passed the national board of review Those not thus passed will have to bea inspection before being shown.

Dr. Craft Active

The announcement by Dr. Wilbur F Craft, superintendent of the National Re form Bureau, that his organization wi sponsor a bill for a Federal Inter-Stat Commission to license and control motio pictures, has brought forth a vigorous pro test from officials of the National Associa tion of the Motion Picture Industry.

A charge of unfairness has been lai at Dr. Craft's door by the motion pictur interests. They say that at a conferenc on the subject of censorship held o March 14, Dr. Craft assured the pictur men that he would refrain for a reason able length of time from advocating o encouraging any national legislation in volving the motion picture industry, thu enabling the producers and distributor of pictures to put into effect a set o standards for production which will elimi nate all objectionable matter from th screen.

Hearing on Clayton Censor Bill Set for March 30

A PUBLIC hearing on the proposed Clayton censorship bill will be held at Albany on Tuesday, April 5, at two o'clyock, before a Joint Committee of the Assembly Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee, instead of Wednesday, March 30, as was previously announced.

Exhibitors Confer on Fight Against Clayton Bill

Sydney S. Cohen, together with th various members of the executive com mittee of the Motion Picture Theatr Owners of New York, met at Albany N. Y., on March 23 for the purpose o considering such measures as may b adopted in combatting the Clayton censor ship bill in the New York State Legisla ture. The meeting was held behind close doors at the Hotel Ten Eyck. Fred Elli ott, manager of the Clinton Square thea tre in Albany, and one of the vice-presi dents of the State Association, was amon those in attendance.

"Film Production Becoming Decentralized"

Consolidation Is Giving Away to Individual Producing Units, Says J. D. Williams

"THE day of huge groups of consolidated producing units is rapidly passing away on the West Coast. Production is becoming decentralized.

"Individual producing effort is taking its place.

"Stars and directors alike, instead of renewing affiliations with great producing organizations, are breaking away and setting up their own independent units.

"The result is a great increase of healthy competition, which is already beginning to make itself felt in the improved quality of the pictures thus made, and which is bound to result in better pictures than these same stars and directors ever made under the old 'consolidated' system."

These are the developments in production that J. D. Williams, manager of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., found most significant in his recent visit to Los Angeles. Mr. Williams returned to New York Sunday, March 20, after an absence of three weeks in the West, thoroughly delighted with the results of his trip.

"There is a marked change in production methods at the West Coast studios," said Mr. Williams, "and one which is most assuredly going to result in better pictures and bigger pictures—pictures that will be better and bigger from an artistic as well as from a box-office standpoint.

"The change I mean is the breaking up of the huge consolidations of stars and directors, and the formation, by these stars and directors, of their own independent producing organizations. These have multiplied on every hand, until there are twenty producing units, each one competing with every other, where there were two or three top-heavy groups before.

"Its effect upon the quality of pictures will be not only decisive, but it will be almost instantaneous. When twenty stars or directors are working, each independent of the other, to produce the best possible product for the same market, the competition is not only many times keener than before, but many times healthier.

"The independent producing system is the only one that will give the exhibitor the really 'super-productions' that are now more necessary than ever to the continued popularity and prosperity of the motion picture theatre. The old system has proven, in operation, its own condemnation. It has written its own death sentence.

"The motion picture production must always be the creation of individual personality. It cannot be standardized or reduced to a rule-of-thumb. Only when the creator of a picture has absolute freedom to put into his work everything of which he is capable, without being hampered or hindered by anything that resembles a rigid 'factory' system, does he ever produce a great picture.

"Shoes, automobiles, clothing, soap can be manufactured on an infinite scale, according to an invariable formula. They are most successful when they are so made. But motion pictures are not manufactured; they are created. Each one is a separate work in itself. Its greatest charm and appeal is that it is individual, inimitable, that it is not the duplicate or replica of some other picture.

"And it is the clear realization of this fundamental fact that has led the most successful stars and directors of the American screen, one by one, to forsake their old affiliations, form their own producing companies, finance their own activities, and give themselves up, whole-heartedly, to the production of the best pictures they are capable of making."

Elaborate Plans for Rochester Convention

Expect New York State Convention Will Lead to Results of Highest Importance

ROCHESTER exhibitors are making elaborate plans for the entertainment of delegates to the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, which will be held at Hotel Seneca, Rochester, on April 5, 6 and 7. It is expected that the convention will be the largest in point of numbers that the state exhibitors have ever held, and that, likewise, it will be the most important in results. There has never been a time when so many subjects of vital concern to the exhibitors awaited action, and an effort is being made to make the Rochester convention 100 per cent representative.

Liberal fare concessions have been obtained by Chairman of the Convention Committee I. M. Salyerds from railroads for the transportation of delegates, and several large parties have already been formed. The New York City exhibitors have already engaged 125 places in the special cars that will transport them to Rochester. Reduced hotel rates have also been secured, and full details on both matters can be secured by any exhibitor who will write Mr. Salyerds at the Victoria Theatre, Rochester.

The convention will not only be a valuable symposium of ideas and plans, but it will be a complete exposition of the latest in motion picture productions and exhibit. Practically every large producer and dealer in theatre equipment has engaged booth space.

But while the convention will be primarily a business one, provisions are being made for the entertainment of those attending the convention. The Rochester Exhibitors' League is preparing several events of purely entertainment interest. One of them will be an elaborate dinner for delegates, at which a number of notables in the film world, in legislative affairs and in public life will be guests and speakers.

The other big event of entertainment interests will be a grand ball to be staged in the New York State Armory at which many important motion picture stars will be guests. All the arrangements for the ball are in charge of John J. Farren of the Victoria theatre, Rochester. The following screen luminaries are announced by the M. P. T. O. of A. headquarters as popular attractions for the movie ball: Corinne Griffith, Alice Calhoun, Eugene O'Brien, Martha Mansfield, Marion Davies, Edna Wheaton, Vivian Martin and Leah Baird.

Irving M. Salyerds, state organizer for the M. P. T. O. and president of the Rochester Exhibitors' League, is head of the executive committee that has general convention plans in charge.

Every exchange in the state has been placarded with large posters advertising the convention, and specially designed souvenir postcards are being sent to every exhibitor in the state, asking him and his wife to attend the convention.

The press and the municipal authorities of Rochester are taking an active interest in the convention. It is expected that during the three days of the meeting the entire city will be given opportunity to hear of the problems that confront exhibitors and producers and that an immense amount of valuable propaganda will be released for public consumption.

J. Hoffberg Heads Goldwyn Foreign Sales Dept.

J. H. Hoffberg, former assistant to Arthur Ziehm, is now in charge of the activities of Goldwyn's foreign sales department, and will supervise the sale and distribution of this company's pictures in Latin America and the Far East.

New Pennsylvania Organization Is Activ

Members of Week-Old Exhibitor Body Appear Before Legislature to Fight Bills

PLUNGING aggressively into the fight for the protection of the motion picture industry of Pennsylvania, members of the executive committee and other officers of the newly formed Pennsylvania branch of the M. P. T. O. of A., appeared on March 16, or exactly one week after the State-wide exhibitors' organization was formed in the convention at Harrisburg, before the Judiciary Committee of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives at Harrisburg and vigorously opposed the Brady bill, which would place a one per cent tax on the gross receipts of all theatres.

At the same time a hearing was held on the Donnelly bill, prohibiting the sale of tickets for seats behind pillars in theatres or in other parts of the house from which a clear view of the stage or screen cannot be obtained. The exhibitors' representatives agreed that such a measure was justified, and did not vigorously oppose it, an agreement being reached to amend it in some respects.

There are a dozen other bills affecting motion picture theatres now pending, but argument on them was postponed, by reason of the time consumed in fighting the Brady bill, until March 21, at 1 p. m., at which time it was arranged to hold a hearing before the same committee in Philadelphia.

Among the chief spokesmen to oppose the Brady bill were M. J. O'Toole, of Scranton, secretary of the new exhibitors' organization; Fred J. Herrington and H. E. Wilkinson, of Pittsburgh, both vice-presidents of the organization, and C. Floyd Hopkins, of Harrisburg, all of whom are members of the legislative committee of the new M. P. T. O. of P. They emphasized the fact that the gross receipts tax would prove such a burden as to drive many neighborhood theatres in Pennsylvania out of business.

O'Toole, who led the fight, declared that the Brady bill probably had been offered through a lack of understanding of the nature and purposes of motion picture theatres of the present. He urged that the committee look upon them in the light of educational institutions doing much of the work that newspapers do. He said the State should no more tax a theatre than a school or a newspaper, showing how the motion picture theatres at all times stood ready to co-operate with the State in activities that have aided in spreading welfare propaganda relating to sanitation, fire prevention, health and kindred subjects. He quoted a recent speech of Pennsylvania Labor Commissioner Clifford B. Connelly, who said the motion picture is as essential as the school or the church.

"This tax is inequitable, discriminatory, unjust and a menace to our business," he concluded.

Representative William J. Brady, of Philadelphia, author of the bill, was asked by Chairman Hugh A. Dawson, of Lackawanna county, whether he had any remarks to make. Brady referred to the State's urgent need for new revenue and declared the tax proposed in the bill would yield $601,000 a year.

C. Floyd Hopkins, who represents the Wilmer & Vincent theatrical and motion picture interests in Harrisburg, denied a report that the theatre and motion picture interests in Pennsylvania make a profit of $80,000,000 a year. He said that represented the gross receipts of all amusements. He pointed to the unfairness of a tax on gross receipts which do not represent even possible profits. He quoted statistics to show that some of the theatres he manages, that have the largest gross receipts, make the smallest profits, yet if the Brady bill were enacted, the theatres with the largest gross would pay more tax than the theatres with the largest profits.

Fred J. Herrington told how taxes are driving the smaller theatres out of business. Five years ago there were 324 motion picture theatres in Philadelphia, but now there are but 184.

Former State Senator John E. Fox, of Harrisburg, as counsel for the Wilmer & Vincent interests, pointed out there is no instance in the statutes of the State in which the gross receipts of a private business are taxed. "If theatres are taxed, why not tax department stores?" he asked.

H. E. Wilkinson, representing t Olympia Amusement Company, of Pit burgh, said the Federal film tax, origina placed on the manufacturer, had be pushed along to the exhibitor.

New Restrictions Propose for Pennsylvania

Radical restrictions on the exhibition motion pictures for educational purpo in "schools, churches, auditoriums, ins tutions and similar places of public asse bly" have been tentatively prescribed the Industrial Board of the Pennsylva Department of Labor and Industry, whi announced in Harrisburg on March that a public hearing on a newly draft code of rules will be held on April 12, a meeting of the board.

Following the hearing, the rules, if a proved by the board, will become eff tive. They provide, among other thin that only licensed operators shall be p mitted to exhibit pictures in such plac that no admittance shall be charged a that the exhibitions in each place shall n exceed six a month. The full text of t proposed rules follows:

The following tentative Rulings were considered the March 15, 1921, meeting of the Industrial Bo and are herewith submitted for the criticism of concerned:

"(1) The films exhibited shall be restricted to th used for educational purposes.

"(2) Projectors of an approved type shall be u or a fire proof enclosure must be provided. Such j jectors shall, during all times of operation, be in cha of a licensed operator.

"(3) The number of exhibitions given shall not ceed six per month.

"(4) Admission fees shall not be charged.

"(5) Application for permission to use such sch church, auditorium, institution or other similar pl of public assembly for the exhibition of motion ture films, must be made to the Industrial Board, the means of egress, aisles, seats, etc., shall be vestigated by the Bureau of Inspection, Departmen Labor and Industry, and a report and recommen tions as to the safety of such school, church, a torium, institution or other similar place of public sembly, for the purpose as above set forth, shall submitted to the Industrial Board.

"The provisions of the Fire and Panic Act s apply as far as may be consistent in consideration local and other conditions."

Zukor Sets Sail to Confer with Producers Abroad

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, sailed on the Aquitania on Tuesday of this week on his annual trip to Europe for the purpose of conferring with the British and Continental producers affiliated with his company. Mr. Zukor will explain the fourteen requirements for clean pictures recently adopted by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in its campaign for cleaner and better pictures and will call the attention of all other European producers to the necessity of adopting them in the production of their pictures.

While in London Mr. Zukor will confer with Sir James M. Barrie regarding the picturization of Barrie's play, "Peter Pan," which is to be produced in this country soon as a Paramount picture. Arrangements also will be discussed by Mr. Zukor, while in Paris, looking to the exhibition of Paramount pictures at the Paris Opera on nights when operatic performances are not being given.

Mr. Zukor stated before sailing that he also planned to enlarge the production activities of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., the company which makes Paramount pictures in London.

Screen No Place for Cla S. Hamon, Says Beban

GEORGE BEBAN, who is making personal appearances in connection with the showing of his big picture at the Ascher Brothers theatres in Chicago, is aroused by reports that Clara Smith Hamon had accepted a contract to go into moving pictures. In an address to more than two thousand persons who crowded the Commercia theatre, Mr. Beban said: "If the time should ever come when Clara Smith Hamon succeeds in breaking into the movies, then I would feel like quitting producing and acting in them. There is no place in modern moving pictures for one whose only claim to fame is participation in crime.

"I do not hesitate to assert that there is no prominent producer who will dare to put Clara Smith Hamon before the great public of American movie fans. Public opinion largely controls moving pictures of today."

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

May 1st is generally considered moving day in Chicago but the film exchanges are taking time by the forelock and many will get into their new quarters on film row before that date. The Consumers Building and 207 S. Wabash avenue, for some time known as the Film Exchange Building, will lose a number of tenants this week and the Mallers Building will also cease to be the headquarters for film men.

Wabash Film Exchange announces that they have decided on April 4th as the opening day for their new exchange. They will be located at 804 S. Wabash avenue on the third floor, and already have completed their sales organization.

Silee Film Exchange for a long time located in the Consumer's Building will make their headquarters at 63 E. Adams street, during the month of April and on May 1st expect to get into their new exchange building at 830 S. Wabash. Lee Herz's organization will have an entire building to themselves and the quarters will be commodious and up to date in every particular.

Universal started moving its Chicago Exchange from its quarters in the Consumers Building to 837 S. Wabash avenue on March 19th and the transfer was made without a hitch, business being conducted at the south Wabash avenue address on Monday. Universal now has one of the largest and best equipped exchanges in Chicago and is located in the heart of the new film district.

Gollos Enterprises got into their quarters at 808½ S. Wabash Tuesday where they will have both office and film handling departments. This will enable them to improve the service to their customers as heretofore it has been necessary to have the service department in a separate location from the booking offices.

Manager Willard of Realart has completed his plans for moving from the present office at 207 S. Wabash avenue to his new quarters at 845 S. Wabash during the second week in April.

Educational Films, Chicago exchange, which has made remarkable strides under the managership of I. Maynard Schwartz, and although only six months old is reported to be doing one of the biggest short reel businesses in Chicago, will move its offices from the Consumers Building, 220 S. State street, to 837 S. Wabash avenue this week, where it will occupy much larger quarters, which were made necessary by the expansion of the staff as business grew.

Joe Friedman was in New York this week attending the meeting of the directors of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, of which he is the president, and is expected to return to Chicago the first of next week.

Ned Homes, who is in Chicago preparing for the opening of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," and already has secured considerable publicity for this monster feature in the daily press, and started the advertising campaign.

Nate Woody, of Pinnacle Productions, is in Los Angeles for a few days and while there will inspect the new studios where his company is now producing. Important announcements as to future plans of Pinnacle are expected on his return to Chicago.

Gollos Enterprises, which recently announced that they had acquired the rights to "Deliverance," the George Kleine production, for Northern Illinois, now has arranged to distribute the feature throughout the entire state, many requests from exhibitors throughout this territory having caused them to extend their activities to cover the state.

Billy Shea, who edited Sidney Franklin's "Courage," brought the negative to the Chicago Rothacker plant last week and a few days later Danny Gray, film editor for Marshal Neilan, arrived with the negative of Bob Hampton of "Placer." Edward O. Blackburn, director of Rothacker Industrial films, is in Ohio in connection with the industrial pictures.

The Midland Film Company and General Film Brokers' offices on the third floor of 112 N. La Salle street, were damaged by fire which broke out in that building on Saturday night. A. Teitel, who also has his headquarters in this building, and who had a number of valuable features stored in his vaults, awaiting to be cleaned and renovated, escaped damage.

Joe Hopp and W. D. Burford, who were called to New York last week for a conference with Sidney Cohen, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, returned to Chicago Wednesday. They expect to have an important announcement to make within a few days as a result of their trip.

"East Lynne," the widely advertised Hodkinson feature, has been booked into the Ziegfeld for a run, opening April 9th. Manager Dunas reports bookings on this feature are coming in rapidly to follow this run. Many novel tie ups with music and publishing houses are being arranged, which will give wide publicity to the showing of this picture in Chicago.

District Manager Joseph H. Gilday, of Famous Players-Lasky, reports Kent Week, which opens in Chicago March 27th, will be one of the most successful events of the kind recorded in this territory as more than three hundred houses booked Paramount pictures for this week dedicated to General Manager S. A. Kent.

Moving day for Metro will come some time before April 1st, according to Manager Rozelle, who expects to be located in the new quarters at 837 S. Wabash Avenue, where Metro will occupy the entire third floor, within a few days.

Harry Spanuth is making an extended trip throughout the east and central west in the interests of his Vod-A-Vil Movies and before returning to Chicago will visit Detroit, Buffalo, Cleveland and a number of other cities.

Vern Lynch, of the Tiffin Theatre on North Avenue, is reported to be improving following his recent operation and is expected to be back on the job at the Tiffin within a few days.

Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is in New York in the interests of his company, and Johnny Jones has just returned from that city.

Pathe has one of the heaviest, as well as the largest, sales forces in Chicago, but the strenuous work of Brunet month is pulling down the avoirdupois somewhat. The "lucky thirteen" just weighed in on the third week of the drive at 3,120 pounds after losing 220 pounds during the drive. Celebrations are the order of the day with this organization at present, Art Hollah, feature salesmanager, and Chuck Kepple, northside salesman, having had birthdays recently, and James Gillick is planning to become a benedick on April 2nd, following which he will take his bride on a honeymoon trip to New Orleans.

Lubliner & Trinz have closed for "The Devil," George Arliss' feature picture, which will open on this circuit at the Senate and Pantheon for a week on May 1st.

Max Goldstine has returned from a four week's trip to the west coast and immediately got busy on plans for opening Orchestra Hall with "Passion" the great first National feature, on April 9th. Mr. Goldstine reports that there are indications of resumption of activities at Hollywood and other producing centers around Los Angeles, and that business in San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Denver and other points he visited, is holding up fairly well.

The above is the largest scene as yet filmed in Paramount's new Long Island studio. It is the cabaret scene for George Fitzmaurice's "Experience"

Aywon Feature is Near Completion

The work of titling, assembling and cutting the Aywon feature based on the "East Is West" theme, is fast nearing completion according to a statement just issued by Nathan Hirsh, president of the organization. As yet no name has been chosen for this feature.

Music and the Picture

The Short Subject and Its Setting

By Charles D. Isaacson

I HAVE often wondered why the short subject has been slighted when music is considered, for to me it seems to be more necessary to envelop the one-reel picture in an atmosphere than the big feature. The super-picture can take care of itself much more readily than the brief study.

What I mean to point out at this time has to do with the importance of concentration of effort in the one-reeler. I am reminded of an old nursery story. "I'll tell you a story of Jack and Dory and now my story's begun; I'll tell you another of Jack and his brother and now my story's done." The short-reel has hardly stated before it is over. There is no time to build up a cumulative effect. Everything which is accomplished must be in a brief period—everything must be called into action immediately. Thus if music is capable as all will concede of accentuating and improving an atmosphere, a mood, an effect or an idea—surely the logical place for it is in the picture which cries for quick results.

Is it not a logical point of view to consider how, for instance, in a scenic, the spirit of the setting ought to be simulated and stimulated with music? The high mountains, capped with misty clouds, can appear in all their majesty, when enveloped in the kind of music which suggests the altitude, the rarified air, the uplifting proximity to the heavens. The same scene introduces into a feature picture can be allowed to pass unheeded by the musician, because the action is of the prime importance. In the scenic, it is everything, and must be magnified in mood to its maximum possibilities. In a strictly educational subject it is even more necessary to "work fast."

Of course, in commenting upon the opportunities for the short-reel manufacturers to utilize music, I am not unmindful of the way that the big managers have sensed this thought, and have made the short-reels the backgrounds for the most glorious musical moments in their programs. Rothafel has a penchant for the one-reelers, and oftentimes revels in artistic blending of tonal and actual scenics. Hyman, of the Brooklyn Strand, I believe was one of the very first to cue-sheet his educationals and reviews.

Heretofore the makers of the one-reelers and specials have paid no attention to the musical phase of their pictures. On this they have made a grave error. The shorter the subject, the more paraphernalia it calls for. Otherwise it gets "lost in the shuffle." It needs as much attention in advertising, needs as much press assistance and then cries for a setting. The highest art is that which is the fullest. The greatest enjoyment is that which is fullest. The poet says that love's ecstasy cannot last for long periods, because it is so full of emotion that the lovers would die.

I have studied the field for a long time. I have noted the activities of the Educational Film Company, and have been much moved to give praise to their endeavors. And now I am inclined to commend the Kineto Company which is seeking to put out the Charles Urban subjects with the same careful scoring for music which the Famous and Goldwyn have attempted with the big features.

I believe that, perhaps, I have "put my foot in it" in accepting Mr. Urban's invitation to make his music cue-sheets! The man who is preaching from the pulpit had better stick to his speaking and not try to be an example. The man who is writing about how to do a thing ought never try to do it. Whenever a dramatic critic writes a play, oh, what a laugh the rest of the playwrights have on him. Now, what will the cue-sheet makers say?

For I know what I want to accomplish. I think that the best cue-sheet is one which suggests rather than indicates. I think that the sheet which enables the musician to follow his own intelligence instead of giving him a fixed diagram is best. I believe that a musician knows his own limitations, his own possessions, his own local taste and affairs better than any one else. I believe that if you will tell him what you'd like to see accoomplished with the music, he can adapt the indications to his affairs.

In the Kineto-Urban Reviews, I have been permitted to make a new kind of cue-sheet. Think of it! I don't give the timing; I don't show the running time; nor the tempo.

Well, to show you just what I mean, here's the way I've scored C. Urban's Kineto Review, No. 37, "The Emerald Isle."

"THE EMERALD ISLE".

There is a remarkable unity of spirit in the film—which must be retained in the music. Rather than make a hodge podge of tunes Irish, I would much more prefer to have a single melody used.

As a prelude to the picture, I would recommend one of the following ideas:

Group of girls and boys in Irish costume, dancing to "Molly on the Shore" (Grainger arrangement). Full orchestra. If this is not available, use any good Irish jig, with men and women dancers.

Suggestions: Harrigan's Reel, Dannybrook Fair, Mouse in the Cupboard. . . . In the arrangement, I should urge the interpolation of a harp with an Irish bagpipe, and if is at all possible, I should like that to be he prominently throughout the whole picture. (If a bagpipe and harp are not available, then th violinist can "imitate" the bagpipe with a jerk exaggeration in his playing with a rather loos bow.) . . . Note: If dancers are not avai able, and the bagpipe is, let the latter be fea tured on the stage in costume, or as a final po sibility, even do it as an interpolated numbe on the organ.

Body of the Picture

Open with "Come Back to Erin." At titl "Further Inland," change to "The Harp Th Once Through Tara's Halls." (Note: Har solo at this point, if possible.)

At title, "Villagers Leaving Church," moc erate into "Bendemeer's Stream."

At title, "An Irish Funeral," moderate int "The Minstrel Boy."

At title, "Exquisite Scenes," swell louder, an on good ringing style play "Where the Rive Shannon Flows."

At title, "To Kiss the Blarney Stone," mak a dead pause, and then play a real break dow jig during the scene (see suggestions in pre lude). End with a dead pause.

At title, "In the Vicinity of the Gap," pla "Killarney;" modulate after three minutes t a little bit of "Believe Me If All Those En dearing Young Charms."

Forty-five seconds from the end, return t "Come Back to Erin."

Note: The above suggestions are adaptab to the biggest theatre orchestra and the sing piano orchestra. Every music publisher has is sued Irish collections. I urge that this pictur be done with real Irish music—not any comed Irish songs of a late day, because they wi only satirize and make ridiculous the beauty o the scenes.

"THE HOLY CITY"

The intention of the musician in this instanc is to create a single and harmonious whole, i an atmosphere typically Jewish and Orienta It would be calamitous to attempt to differen tiate any of the episode by different themes ex cepting insofar as has been indicated. No fixe suesheet is written, no single composition in dicated. If you haven't any of the music men tioned, get the nearest to the idea. Jerusale suggests a slow, uplifting, plaintive melody i the minor mood. And it is this idea which wi create the atmosphere.

As a prelude to the film:

Soprano solo: "The Holy City" (in a audience essentially Hebraic, substitute for thi "Hatikvah" the Jewish national anthem o even "Eili, Eili" or "Yohrzeit" . . . where is impossible to get a vocalist, this may b played upon the organ or piano).

For the body of the film, play any one of th following compositions:

Andante Cantabile of Tschaikovsky (for fu orchestra).

Hebrew Melody, by Achron (played as violi solo with piano and organ accompaniment).

BULLETIN OF ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE MUSICAL INTERESTS

WE have much pleasure in reporting that there is a remarkably fine trend toward membership. Already, despite the fact that only a tentative organization exists, a large number of individuals and companies have sent in their membership fees and applications.

If musician, motion-picture man or one interested in the commercial or art phase of the allied industries desires to join and enjoy the benefits of membership in the new association, he is urged to apply at once.

There are three classes of membership—as follows:

(A) Those of the motion-picture industry seeking to broaden their appeal through music.

(B) Those of the music industry and music profession seeking to widen their scope through the film.

(C) Those seeking to give the public a greater opportunity to hear good music.

Dues are as follows: For individuals, $2.00; for corporations or companies, $10.00.

Temporary Headquarters are 7th Floor, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

Temporary Executive, Charles D. Isaacson, Chairman pro tem.

Elaborate Prologue at the New Stanley Theatre

In conjunction with the first showing of "Polly With a Past," Edgar Wolf, the manager of the Stanley theatre, in Philadelphia, staged an elaborate fashion show, as a prologue, which proved to be a great success.

Every year Gimbel Brothers give a fashion show. This year they decided to give it at the Stanley, and together with Mr. Wolf, they managed to get an elaborate prologue that fitted in admirably as a forerunner to the story of the picture.

The first thing in the prologue was a dance by Mlle. Fegelle Tseri, representing primitive woman. This was followed by "The Woman of Today," a display of the latest creations of all the famous modistes of the world. The first number was a riding habit, a "Passion Dress," by Henry and Tallet, of Paris, a racetrack dress of white charmeuse by Molyneau, and worn by Miss Dorothy Kistler. Another riding habit, adorned Miss Eleanor Rogers. Next came a chiffon dinner dress, a flower girl gown, and a brides' gown, each again bearing the Paris imprint as explained in the program.

These were followed by examples of the Directoire style, dance frocks, bridal array, sport dresses, bridesmaids' dresses, Directoire coat dresses, Foulard creations, Canton crepe models, Spanish designs, and so forth, the entire display finally ending up with a wonderfully staged bridal group, the bride being in the exact center of the stage with the whole party spread out on either side.

Not only were the clothes pleasing, but the musical accompaniment was delightful and the eighteen minutes consumed by the show were deemed all too short by the entire audience, at the opening show, masculine and feminine alike.

Huge Jack-knife Advertises Picture

A big jack-knife over ten feet long, with blades that opened and closed in most alluring fashion over the heads of pleasure seekers, bathers, sailor gobs and just plain folks—such was the attractive display made by Otis Hoyt, proprietor of Hoyt's theatre, Long Beach, California, the day he started to exploit "The Jack Knife Man."

The huge jack-knife was made of paper mache, with great wooden blades and operated electrically to open and close slowly. It was a great eye catcher. In addition he got up an attractive lobby display with four large boards seven feet high, depicting scenes from the Jack Knife Man. Mr. Hoyt used the title for all it was worth in his newspaper advertising, billed the boards and streets cars, and staged a children's matinee with souvenir toy balloons on which "The Jack Knife Man" was inscribed. The week before the new bill he distributed large folders to the audience every night.

Boys Jazz Band Helps Put Over "Dinty"

Samuel Lesselbaum, owner and manager of the Stadium theatre, Brooklyn, with the aid of Max Ruddick, last week staged one of the most effective prologues ever presented for "Dinty."

Max Ruddick, who enjoys great popularity for the acts he has staged and the "kid" song reviews he has owned, has among his interests a newsboy jazz band. Mr. Lesselbaum knew about this aggregation and asked Mr. Ruddick to borrow it for four days.

Consequently, the announcement of the "Dinty Jazz Band" as a prologue appeared on special one sheets which Mr. Lesselbaum had printed and posted for the occasion.

The prologue in itself was such a knockout that it became the talk of the vicinity but the striking part of its exploitation possibilities developed when Mr. Lesselbaum discovered that a group of almost twenty children had formed their own jazz band and were serenading about a block away from the theatre. Pots, pans and soapboxes were the instruments used and the din created resounded for blocks at times. Mr. Lesselbaum shrewdly distributed candy and stuck a sign at the head of this volunteer organization and thereby reaped a good ballyhoo at a very small price.

Maiss, San Diego Musician, Writes Special Score

For the week when "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court" was shown at the Superba theatre, San Diego, Cal., a special overture was arranged and rendered by the house organist, Paul Maiss, which he called "The American Abroad." The various airs which entered into the arrangement carried the traveler from the United States to France, Switzerland, Scotland, England and Ireland concluding with "Home, Sweet Home" as he again reaches his native shores. Mr. Maiss received many words of commendation for his effort.

Rivoli Theatre Presenting Easter Novelty

One of the most charming bits of stage presentation ever shown on Broadway is on the bill at the Rivoli theatre this week, in an Easter week fantasy under the title of "Easter Fantasy."

The number is designed not only as a significant part of the regular program, but as a special attraction at the children's matinees, which Managing Director Hugo Reisenfeld, in conjunction with charity and orphan societies of New York, is giving all this week and which is providing a morning's treat, free, to a thousand kiddies daily.

The Easter Fantasy, which intrigued both the little people in the forenoons and the adults and children later in the day, had seven characters—a boy and girl, a pair of rabbits, a pair of chicks and a grotesque black cat with a black silk hat. Paul Oscard, ballet master at the Reisenfeld theatres, trained the dancers and appeared in the role of the cat. Vera Myers played the girl, Louise Boslet appeared as the boy, and Grace Eastman, Florence Roggie, Helen Coyne and Ermina Mathews appeared as the Easter animals.

An atmospheric and quite mysterious setting had been created for the little stage number. The boy and the girl entered and peered about among the branches of the trees until, wearied of tramping, they lay down to sleep. Soft voices sang them sweet dreams from unseen hiding places.

The scene became more distinct and two huge rabbits were seen at the back, leaning against multi-colored eggs. They came forward and danced about in duet and, after being offered tid-bits, danced with the boy and girl. The eggs burst open, and two little chicks appeared, flapping their yellow wings and nodding their funny heads. They danced a bit of a cock fight and then all six gambolled merrily, only to be interrupted and frightened by the wily cat. With a bound he was among them, scattering them behind the eggs and trees. Pleased at his own courage, the cat danced a humorous number, thus encouraging the children and animals to come from their hiding places. Again threatening them, he was bound tightly with bright ribbons and tied to a little cart in which he was compelled to draw the girl about the scene—the boy, rabbits and chicks holding the reins.

The production, which was one of the New School of Opera and Ensemble, was a distinct departure from anything previously attempted on the Rivoli stage and reflected the Easter spirit as truly as had the Christmas Fantasy, which was a part of the program during the holidays and which carried the spirit of the Winter festival. The spirit of Spring, light-colored and mysterious, was sensed in the scenery as well as in the music in the Easter number, a delicate bit in conception and execution and a credit to the creative genius of Hugo Riesenfeld.

Canadian Theatre Boosts "Outside the Law"

When the management of the Maple Leaf theatre in Vancouver, B. C., booked "Outside the Law," a tie-up was made with the Vancouver Daily World, and a search instituted for a Vancouver woman with a thumb-print resembling that of Priscilla Dean.

The paper devoted big spreads to the stunt, on successive days for a week, showing various poses of Miss Dean, reproducing her thumb-print, and describing how to make clear thumb-prints to submit to the Moving Picture Editor of the World.

Many hundreds of thumb-prints were received by the paper, and great interest was aroused in the search and in the forthcoming picture.

Real Rain for Vocal Number at Brooklyn

While the Strand orchestra was playing a selection from "Babes in Toyland," the front drapes were drawn disclosing a pastoral drop and Dorothy Bell began singing "Pitter Patter."

It meant extra work and a little care to furnish real rain for a novelty at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, but the extra note of realism it provided was well worth the trouble Managing Director Edward L. Hyman decreed.

Proper focussing of lights upon the stage deluge made a rainbow and this, too, put the novelty over big. Naturally this ballad called for rain, and from a perforated pipe back of the production stage came a splendid April shower, a drain carrying off the water.

Clergymen Assist Raleigh

"The Inside of the Cup" Exploitation at Portland, Ore., Based on Church Cooperation

A. C. Raleigh, manager of the Columbia theatre, Portland, Ore., obtained one column "top head" story and six other news articles varying in length from three to twelve inches, in an exploitation stunt he pulled for "The Inside of the Cup" box office receipts. The stunt cost him absolutely nothing. It brought him three days business more than his original booking. This was his scheme:

The day before "The Inside of the Cup" opened in Portland, the Columbia management phoned the fifteen most prominent ministers of the city and invited them with their wives to be present at the matinee the next afternoon. Each of the ministers so invited volunteered the information he had read the book and each promised to come if business appointments could be so arranged. Ten clergymen actually came. They were met at the door by a special representative of the theatre and personally taken to a section of loges reserved for them. As they came out of the theatre at the close of the performance this representative asked them how they liked the picture and drew them together to casually discuss the play. Everything they said was noted and finally the suggestion was made that they preach on "The Inside of the Cup" the following Sunday night. Three of them agreed to do it so that the book and picture were later discussed in sermons before at least 2,000 persons.

Newspaper publicity was obtained through interviews of ten pastors who violently disagreed on the message of the film.

Every newspaper welcomes a church fight—nothing makes quite as interesting reading and nothing is more generally welcomed as public has decided opinions on religion and the church. Therefore these interviews of conflicting opinions expressed by ten of the most prominent and widely known pastors of the city was just "duck soup" to the press. The first newspaper to acquire the story gave it an entire column and remaining papers of the city "picked up" the story the next day. On the Monday following the Sunday evening when sermons on the book and picture were preached, the morning paper devoted its church page to covering the three addresses on "The Inside of the Cup."

Any picture which centers on the sincerity of the church may be exploited in such a manner at no financial expense.

Bebe's Misfortune Brown's Gain

Bebe Daniels was driving her car some where outside of Los Angeles recent when she ran afoul of the arm of the la and was instructed to appear before rural judge who has the reputation handing out jail sentences to motoris convicted of violating the speed regul tions to the extent of having been sto watched at fifty miles an hour or bett Bebe was accused of hitting about fift six and her trial has been set down f March 23rd. Of course the case dre front page stories in the Los Angel newspapers, so Manager Brown of Clune Broadway theatre decided to avail himse of some of the publicity for Miss Daniel picture, "She Couldn't Help It," booke for the Broadway for the current week.

Mr. Brown got out a card about thre by six inches on which was printe "Bebe Daniels Arrested for Speeding b She Couldn't Help It"—all the words b the "but" being in big bold face typ Under this announcement was printed i small type: is the name of her latest phot play to be shown at Clune's Broadwa starting Sunday, March 13th."

The card got no end of attention fro all Los Angeles.

Special Showing Starts Rumpus at Kansas City

Frank L. Newman, owner of the Newman theatre in Kansas City, unintentionally created a religo-ceneographic war a few days ago which resulted in widespread, beneficial advertising for "The Inside of the Cup," as well as the theatre itself.

Desiring to obtain the sanction of Kansas City ministers, Mr. Newman issued special invitations to them to attend a preview. Following the preview, the picture was denounced by one of the leading pastors as "creating hostility toward the church, among people who are not churchgoers." Liberal space was given the matter in newspapers, and the war was on, with the public columns of the newspapers as the battle ground, and scores of civic organizations and individuals as the participants.

The argument spread to the Missouri capitol, where a censorship bill is being debated on the floor of the senate. Womens' clubs consolidated in the support of a censorship bill for Kansas City. Through it all, Mr. Newman, doubtful as to the logic of his move, anxiously awaited the outcome of the upheaval created by him.

Oleson Gets Big Results with Window Display

Another small town exhibitor who realizes the advertising value of the co-operative window display is Manager Oleson of the Pastime theatre, Delevan, Wis.

On this page is shown a recent window display secured for the exploitation of Dinty."

A close inspection will disclose several incense burners, an opium pipe, a Chinese knife and a Chinese cleaver.

The unusual articles attracted the attention of the whole city and the showing of Dinty" profited thereby.

The display was arranged by Lynn Vilear of the Pastime forces.

West Is Live Wire Middle West Exhibitor

The display is simple of construction and to be especially recommended to small town exhibitors, along with the statement by Manager West that exploitation of this sort pays even in a town as small as Knoxville, not a metropolis.

Mr. West purchased some cheap muslin and lined the lobby. Then he painted numerous red question marks on the cloth and also such questions as "Do you believe in ghosts?" Green lights were used in the lobby to add to the "ghostly" atmosphere.

For a ballyhoo Mr. West built a huge "ghost" about ten feet high. The head was stuffed and attached to a long pole. A boy was hired to get underneath the "ghost" and parade the streets. The stunt went over big.

Ferguson Devises Mechanical Exploitation Novelty

As exploitation for "The Girl With the Jazz Heart," six dancing, painted cut-out hearts on top of the marquise, mounted on a rod which was kept in motion by an electric motor so that the hearts danced about continually, attracted the attention of every one who came within sight of the Bijou theatre, Richmond, Va. The stunt was the idea of W. R. Ferguson, of Goldwyn's headquarters staff, and was carried out under the direction of Harry Bernstein, Richmond manager for the Wells theatres. Crowds collected on the sidewalk across from the theatre to watch the jazzing hearts and a large percentage of those who stopped to watch, walked across the street to the box office and purchased tickets.

The lobby was tastefully decorated and the theatre did the usual amount of billing and newspaper advertising

Des Moines Theatre Presentation of Skinner Picture Elaborate

Effective adaptation of the prologue possibilities of "Kismet" was employed at the showing at the Des Moines theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, where simple settings, one vocal number, pantomime and light tricks enabled the picture to "get away" to a start that gave it an exceptional success.

The accompanying stage plan and "key" will give any exhibitor all that he needs to diagram a similar presentation. Photographs illustrate what simple designs, when combined with oriental colors and outlines can accomplish in the creation of atmosphere and effect.

The left stage was prepared with a back flat, a wall decorated with the large circular panels featured in the "Kismet" harem scene; the one nearest the screen (B) being a transparent scrim, painted to match the others. Blue and white foots were installed along the line A-B and a red border flood (5) above a divan placed behind the scrim. An amber spot (2) was concealed in the deep red curtain draps that hung over the top of the flat.

Following the specially arranged overture by Director Mitchell, the blue foots came up slowly and a singer in queen-of-the-harem costume started the song "Kismet" and as she sang the red flood and a white spot (4) gradually brought her out into full brilliancy under which the scrim disappeared. A character in the full Hajj regalia moves to the spot 3 where he is seen in the amber circle from the spotlight at 2. Light cues are reversed for the fade out of both singer and male character and music changes at complete darkness, as the picture opens with gong cues.

Spectators awaited with keen interest when the actual picture opened without any apparent use of the stage at the right which remained completely dark until the scene in the screen version shows Hajj the beggar lying on his stone outside and mosque and the next scene shows the minaret and the morning call to prayer. The screen curtains are closed again and blue and amber foots are brought up slowly to illuminate a mosque set with foliage drop and wings and an arched temple doorway.

Simultaneously with the bringing up of the foots a baby spot, playing from the lamp room, is brought up slowly to show Hajj in rags, stretched on the stone at the doorway in the pose in which Skinner first appears in the picture. As the spot achieves full brilliancy, Hajj wiggles his toes, stretches and yawns and rises to a sitting position as characters to represent Moslem worshippers cross the stage to enter the mosque. He pantomimes the begging for alms and clutches eagerly at the coins flung to him by the passersby. Only three or four of the latter are needed. As the last one enters, Hajj sinks back on his stone as the screen story resumes.

This second prologue episode replaces a section cut from the film and serves as an excellent break in the picturization. The same piece of action is cut from the print to avoid duplication.

The entire house lighting system ha been provided with specially dipped globe in oriental reds; ushers, doormen and ca riage men were outfitted in the brilliar colored costumes of harem girls and a tendants and the lobby had been give very attractive trim with heavily cor structed Arabic arches.

The presentation was planned as to de tails by A. G. Stolte, supervising direc tor of the Des Moines theatre; H. D Groves, house manager, and N. E Mitchell, musical director.

Fowler Obtains Wurlitzer Company Assistance

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood heatre, one of Buffalo's finest neighborhood theatres, last week put over one of he best musical stunts ever staged in the ueen City of the Lakes when he arnged a tie-up with the Rudolph Wurzer company, through which two of the ost famous piano soloists in the ountry appeared on the Elmwood stage ch evening during the week and gave a minute concert assisted by the Ampico producing piano.

The Wurlitzer company in return for e use of the theatre, placed page ads in l the Buffalo newspapers, advertising the rogram at the Elmwood. Stories of a ecial nature were also placed in all the usic columns, thereby attracting the ghest type of music loving residents of uffalo, who attended the Elmwood to ar the excellent programs and became w patrons of the theatre.

Grindley Gets Results with Cut-out Displays

Here is a little lesson for the exhibitor ho thinks that in a short run house the pense of building lobby displays, etc., exploitation is greater than the returns extra profits.

The above cut shows how Thomas C. rindley, whose official title with the Star eatre, Astoria, Ore., is operator, but hose duties also include other matters of portance around a theatre, decorated r the showing of "Once to Every oman" at a total expense of $5.00 and ur hours' time. Mr. Grindley states that believes he can hang up a medal for eed economy and efficiency in utilizing e producers' paper in making cut-outs. r. Grindley uses all sizes of paper up to sheets for the purpose and will send a mple of his work to anyone writing him.

Exploitation Man Gives Small Exhibitor a Boost

Decidedly artistic, was the opinion voiced in Carthage, N. Y., of the window display tie up arranged by Harry Swift, exploitation representative for the Albany territory of Paramount Pictures, in connection with the showing of "The Restless Sex" at the Opera House. Owing to the town's limited population of 4800, the means of exploitation were also limited. Swift resorted to a tie up with the leading department store, a feature of which was a portrait of Marion Davies partly draped by flowing lace. In addition posters in the window and stills from the picture established the tie up.

Ballantyne Puts Over Another Big Campaign

For the showing of "The Last of the Mohicans" at the Moon theatre, Omaha, Neb., Manager R. S. Ballantyne played particularly to the schools in the city. It was effective. He knew he would receive hearty co-operation from the Board of Education officials and teachers. A special performance of "The Last of the Mohicans" was held on a Saturday morning before the regular opening of the attraction. School children were admitted at reduced prices.

For a prologue to this picture, Manager Ballantyne arranged a beautiful snow-ground setting about the striking figure of an Indian chief, Os-Ko-Mon, who portrayed "The Dance of the Senses."

One of the Omaha newspapers ran a contest for school children on essays about "The Last of the Mohicans." Prizes were offered for the best written compositions.

Pontiac Exhibitor Is Local Columnist

Hal Opperman, manager of the Crescent theatre, Pontiac, Ill., has successfully inaugurated an inexpensive bit of exploitation that should interest practically all exhibitors in cities where newspaper rates are within reach.

Mr. Opperman's stunt is simply this. He has arranged for about a quarter column in the Pontiac afternoon newspaper. In this column he runs chatty news items about the various features which are being shown or which will shortly be seen at his theatre. He calls this column "Movie News" by O. B. Still.

This cut shows how Peter Theopolis, manager of the Opera House, Lorain, O., decorated his lobby for the showing of "Outside the Law"

Wendt Reserves Section for Toledo Scribes

For many years there have been sections reserved at the ball parks and at the prize fight rings holding the most coveted seats, these sections being known as press boxes. These seats have been especially reserved for the men on the newspapers, their work necessitating a good view of all the proceedings, and the management of the sporting project appreciating the importance of the scribes. But now Harold F. Wendt, publicity director of the Rivoli theatre, Toledo, again steps forward with an innovation for theatre men. This time it is a theatre press box.

The choicest section of seats—the center loge—in the Rivoli theatre has been set aside for newspaper people only. A neat brass plate marks the press box. At no time are these seats sold, but all holders of press tickets will always find available seats in this loge.

On Sunday, when critics visit the theatre to "cover" the show, they can immediately be seated.

How Orner Puts Over a Serial

Exploitation geniuses are not confined to the ranks of the big town exhibitor, nor is the value of exploitation confined to large communities. J. C. Orner, manager of the Isis theatre, in Fernie, B. C., recent "stunted" the Universal serial, "King of the Circus" in a way that would have done credit to any theatre.

Orner did the thing up right. Not only did he stage a street parade through Fernie, with music, clowns and other circus parade requisites, but he also decorated the front of his theatre to represent the main entrance to a circus tent. To cap the climax, he gave ice-cream cones and peanuts to all the youngsters present.

"Arabs" Advertise "Kismet" at Boston

Boston is now listed among the cities where "Kismet" exploitation has added to the box office totals most materially.

During the showing of the production at the Majestic theatre several "Arabs" in native costume were used around the streets. Their time in the morning was taken up with the distribution of blotters in the office buildings. Everywhere they appeared, their costumes made people look, stop and inquire.

Every once in a while, usually at the busiest corners, the "Arabs" threw down prayer-rugs on the street and knelt, effectively tying up traffic and bringing not only the public, but the newspapers to inquire what it was all about. Then the newspapers told their customers of the "stunt."

The "Arabs" were also taken to an athletic meet where they openly challenged the mat champions, and secured attention for "Kismet" again. The Boston newsboys were also brought into the exploitation campaign and for days they walked around with signs that read: "Have you seen 'Kismet'."

Kaliska Invents Novel Lobby Display

"Flying Pat" played a two days' gagement at the Vaudette theatre, Atnta, recently, and was even more sucssful than it had been on its first run rther up-town.

Manager Jack Kaliska "poked fun" at e aviators, and their little boats in a most gaging way, and the lobby which he eated at little expense and a minimum of ne and labor, caused a great deal of inrest.

Strung across the front of the theatre a black cord that was scarcely noticeble, were more than a dozen toy planes, ch as can be found at any five-and-ten nt store. Swinging from a black cord, d fluttering madly in every breeze, they ught the instant attention of every sser-by.

But the star position in the lobby benged, right enough, to a wee toy aviation mp, mounted, which was complete in ery detail. Across the back of the little atform on which the "camp" rested, as the hangar; in front, three or four anes were drawn up, as if in readiness r instant flight. Down front, a plane ood waiting for "Pat" and her "aviar"—two wee dolls dressed in imitation the character played by Dorothy Gish. The whole thing was so perfect in deil, and so in keeping with the spirit of e picture that it made a pronounced hit, d, Manager Kaliska feels sure, aided e box-office receipts no little.

Crowell Constructs Novel Lobby Display

One of the most novel lobby displays t recorded was recently constructed by anager Crowell, of the Galox theatre, sheville, N. C., for the showing of "The irl With the Jazz Heart."

Two phonographs were used with the ell-known "dancing coon" attachment, t the coon was changed to a girl wearg a low cut evening dress. The instruents were kept running all the time but music records were put in. A meanical "shimmy doll" was borrowed om a local concern and placed on a ble in the lobby. The shoulders of the ll shook in the movements of an exeme form of shimmy dancing.

Across the lobby were run five wires presenting a staff of music. Notes were aced in the spaces and on the lines. The otes had legs of paper attached to them nd they were kept in movement by the ntinuous vibration of the wires. Litle fool'scap bells were hung on wires and ngled enough to attract attention.

In the lobby was a cut-out figure from he six-sheet poster showing a dancing rl in knee dress. Her legs were pasted n beaver board and attached to the body they would swing back and forth. very few minutes a door boy gave her gs a swing and they would continue to wing for several minutes.

Omaha Showman Puts Over Another Knock-out Stunt

Comedy interspersed with appealing quartet harmony made up a novel prologue to "The U. P. Trail" at the Moon theatre, Omaha.

R. S. Ballantyne, manager of the theatre, arranged the setting, that of an interior of an old railroad coach.

The idea was much exploited by the first audiences at the Moon theatre.

For street publicity, Ballantyne rigged up a motor truck with huge cut-outs of a railroad engine, as shown in an accompanying photo.

The outfit was operated through the downtown streets.

Ballantyne's exploitation stunts attracted huge crowds.

Presents Prologue Successfully on Small Stage

It is an easy enough thing to put on prologues in connection with photoplays when you have a regulation sized stage, but it is quite another task to do this when your stage is only 6 feet deep.

The cut on this page shows the suggestion of depth given to the Butterfly stage, Milwaukee, in a recent prologue used in connection with "The Jucklins." As the audience saw it from the front it was hard to believe that the entire setting was only 6 feet deep. More remarkable was the performance of a black face quartet, two dancers and a banjo player in this limited amount of space. It only goes to show that prologues may, with a little thought, be used in most every theatre.

Mangan's Artistic Prologue

"The Inside of the Cup" Elaborately Presented at Broadway Strand, Detroit

THE Broadway-Strand theatre of Detroit may well boast of another artistic prologue in the number staged for "The Inside of the Cup."

In this number the figure of Christ appears and mingles with the characters on the stage, and though the character of Christ is projected, it has been so wonderfully photographed that each and evety move and gesture fits most admirably with the acting of the real characters in the flesh. The scene itself is two massive white pillars on the left of stage, which is reached by four white steps to conform with the pillars in color. The remainder of the setting consists of simple scrim and it is upon this scrim that the figure of Christ is projected.

The scene opens with pale blue lights bathing the stage. Suddenly a Pharisee is seen dragging the Magdeline up to the Temple Pillars, and calling to the Christ to judge a fallen woman and as he throws the woman to the steps the music suddenly ceases with a tremendous climax. At this moment the figure of Christ appears coming through the massive pillars, and walking over to where the prostrate woman lies, reaches out His hand and exclaims: "Let he that is among you who is without sin cast the first stone." The Pharisee hastens away. Christ turns to go into the Temple, but comes back and says to the woman still lying on the steps: "Arise and sin no more"—at this he vanishes.

At the moment of the appearance of the Christ, made a most dramatic situation, and while the figure is upon the scene, there is not a note of music until he vanishes and the Magdeline arises to sing the "Ave Maria, which is the closing number of the prologue. The voice of Christ is made mysterious by the use of a megaphone at a very distant point in the fly gallery.

The difficult manipulation of characters in the flesh and a screen character was admirably done, as each move of the screen character was timed to meet the advances of the real characters. It was a daring number very well done. Of the many stage novelties introduced by Mangan at Gleichman's Broadway Strand, this prologue is not only the most original, but the most daring as well.

Hyman Tries Out Ad vance Prologue Idea

Edward L. Hyman, managing directo of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, ha tried out the advance prologue idea.

When audiences appeared on Sunda one day before the opening of "Th Kid," they were treated to the "Chaplin Prologue Comique." The stage set was o futuristic design with a girl dancer attire à la Chaplin interpreting the comedian t his mannerisms in a most graceful dance This prologue was not a lengthy affair just a few minutes, but long enough anc impressionistic enough to let all know that the prologue had to do with Charlie Chaplin.

As the prologue concluded a trailer on the screen announced that Charlie Chaplin would open a six-day engagement in "The Kid" on the next day.

Kremer Answers Bankruptcy Charges

In connection with the statement published last week, on top of the action brought by Jacob Shenfield, that the Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., was about to be forced into involuntary bankruptcy, Mr. Victor Kremer, President of the company, answers through his attorney, Louis Weinberger, that Shenfield has no claim whatsoever, the only transaction between the Victor Kremer corporation and Shenfield being that Shenfield was hired by Mr. Kremer as office manager under a contract for a year. Shenfield, states Mr. Kremer, made no investment whatsoever and owned no stock of the corporation.

"Prior to the present proceeding," states Mr. Kremer, "Shenfield had instituted two other legal proceedings, both of which had been dismissed and decided in favor of the Kremer corporation."

"It is intended by the Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., to promptly institute suit against Shenfield," states Mr. Kremer.

The Kremer Company, it was said, has never experienced a better period of prosperity than it has during the past few weeks and despite the continued statements that the motion picture industry is undergoing a period of depression this condition does not apply to the Kremer Company.

New Chicago Exchange to Open in April

Wabash Film Exchange of Chicago announces that their opening date has been decided on as April 4th. They will be located at 804 So. Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Allied to Sell Franchises

Territories to Be Allotted on Product of Newly Formed Concern

ACCORDING to an announcement from the Allied Distributing Corporation, a company recently formed for the distribution of pictures on the state right market. They will operate with a certain number of pictures a year for which franchises in the various territories will be allotted.

The company will also secure its product from the independent producer and to this end negotiations are already going forward with some of the most prominent producers in both the East and West. The product of this company and other producing companies will be released by the Allied Distributing Corporation to their franchise holders throughout the United States and Canada.

Already the company has disposed of the franchise for their output for several of the big territories and it is their intention to be ready to operate fully in a 100 per cent of the state right regions within a short time.

Charles H. Rosenfeld, president of this company, when telling of the formation of the Allied Distributing Corporation remarked: "We feel that in this company, we can offer a co-ordination of the interests of the producer and state right buyers in such a way that both will secure greater gains than they have been able to secure in the past under the old catch-as-catch-can proposition. The producer knows where his product is going and the buyers also know how many pictures he will be able to offer his clientele during the year of certain brands.

"This will work to a co-ordination of the important factors in the state right market and allow the exchange man to organize his business much on the same basis as in the program companies. He can offer the exhibitor definite materials during the year."

"It is our intention to dispose of the pictures on a franchise basis which the independent exchangeman, from our investigation, leads us to believe is the most desirable methods."

C. B. C. Busy with Comedies

Hallroom Boy Series to Be More Elaborate as Federated Releases

WITH Hallroom Boys Comedies soon to be distributed by Federated Film Exchanges, word comes from the West Coast, where these comedies are being produced by Harry Cohn, of elaborate preparations that are going forward for the making of these comedies for Federated.

Work has already been begun on the first picture to be released through Federated. It is entitled "False Roomers," and in it are narrated the adventures of Percy and Ferdie Hallroom in a rooming house.

The stories of the four pictures to follow "False Roomer" on the Federated Hallroom Boys Comedies series, are already lined up, it is announced, and while no definite announcement is made regarding them, since the subjects are to be kept a surprise, it is said by Mr. Cohn that each is unlike the other, and that their subjects are as uncertain to forecast as the weather. It is said, however, that each follows a definite central idea, and that this idea is not jumbled up with a lot of extraneous comedy and stunt matter, but made to follow a definite thread wherein all the action is logical and has a real meaning.

Each comedy, it is said, has a definite locale, and it is rumored that there is soon to be a side-splitting schoolroom comedy.

Sid Smith, as Percy Hallroom, bears the biggest burden of the fun-making. Mr. Smith, through his work in former Hallroom Boys Comedies has earned the nick-name "the nerviest man in pictures" and it is said that the stunts that he will tackle in forthcoming Federated releases demand every atom of nerve available. Harry McCoy continues to aid and abet him as Ferdie.

The newest current Hallroom Boys Comedy, titled "In Bad Again" will, in all probability, close the series of Hallroom Boys Comedies that the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is releasing.

Falkner Has Three Pictures for S tate Rights

Within the next month or so Fred W. Falkner announces that he will release three pictures on the state right market. All of these three subjects will star Susan Gram. They are to be comedy dramas.

THE Independent Films Association has contracted for the release of a series of five-reel western dramas to be produced by Cliff Smith, well known director, who recently formed his own organization, under the name of the Cliff Smith Productions. The company will feature Pete Morrison, Naida Carl and Al Kaufman. Eight subjects will be produced during the year, it is stated, and Smith will handle the megaphone for all of them.

Jans Pictures Secure Randolf Productions

Herman F. Jans who is now en route for the Western Coast reports that he has just signed contracts whereby he will control the product of the newly-formed Frontier Features, Inc., headed by Anders Randolf.

The first special picture which will be released under the Jans Pictures, Inc., banner with Anders Randolf as the star is from a story laid in the tropics and offers an exceptional opportunity for Anders Randolf to portray a virile character such as he is so well fitted for both by physique and temperament. The locale of the story, which will be made in the Bahamas assures all the wealth of tropical beauty and picturesqueness so abundant in that southern clime where the material verdure and the ocean itself lend themselves so readily to artistic environment.

Harry Garson's Work Is Commended

Harry Garson, who directed the last two Clara Kimball Young productions, "Midchannel" and "Hush," which are released by Equity, is receiving many messages of congratulations daily, states Equity, for the excellent work he has done on these two pictures.

Not only have men well known in the industry sent in laudatory messages, but expressions of approval have also been received from many movie fans and even exchange men.

Ritchey Posters Ready for "Supreme Passion"

The multi-colored posters for "The Supreme Passion" now off the Ritchey Litho Company's press are said to be as attractive and compelling as any ever published. Mr. Ritchey and Mr. Oscar Lynch, both of the Ritchey Company, declare that the posters made up for Robert W. Priest on this feature are among the best that the Ritchey Company has ever made.

The 24 sheet on Ivan Abramson's new feature, which is reproduced in colors in the press book.

Abramson Has Press Book

Lithographs in Color a Feature of "Mother Eternal" Press Book

"MOTHER ETERNAL," Ivan Abramson's newest production, starring Vivian Martin, will have a press book in which will be incorporated an unusual feature in the form of reproductions in miniature of all the lithographs and exhibitors' aids in actual colors.

This plan was explained at the offices of the Graphic Film Corporation as being the only one that would obviate wasteful buying on the part of exhibitors who heretofore had been obliged to make their selections of paper from lifeless black-and-white facsimiles, with the result that in most cases the particular sheets that would have benefitted them most were the ones of which they bought the least.

The press book will abound in human interest stories touching on the various phases of "Mother Eternal," and will also contain several distinct layouts of newspaper and general advertising and publicity campaigns suitable for almost any locality, states the producers.

In a number of newspaper articles great stress is laid on the advisability of mothers sending their children to see "Mother Eternal" for the great moral lesson the "rising generation" may learn while being entertained. And one of the exploitation suggestions calls for the enlistment of school teachers who, it is expected, will agitate for special matinees for their classes.

Roland West Edits Film

Well Known Author Completes "Rossmore Case" at Palm Beach

ROLAND WEST believes he has in his latest screen production "The Rossmore Case" a picture as powerful in its appeal to film patrons as his stage play "The Unknown Purple" proved to regular theatre audiences.

The author has just returned from Palm Beach where he took the closing scenes of the play. Palm Beach society availed itself of the opportunity to get itself filmed and volunteered to pose for groups incidental to the story which in part is laid at the Florida winter resort.

The director was further specially fortunate in getting for a scene at a fashionable gambling club involved in the drama about $100,000 worth of costumes voluntarily contributed by the many firms who recently bulked their fabric exhibits at New York's Silk Show.

A cast of principals supporting Jewel Carmen, "The Rossmore Case's" star includes George Fawcett, Florence Billings, William B. Davidson, Kenneth Harlan, J. Herbert Frank, Riley Hatch, Henry Sedley, Lionel Pape, Grace Studdiford, Ida Darling, Ina Rorke, Lillian Ashley, Charles Wellesley and others.

Roland West wrote the play. So far he has refrained from divulging its story. Report has it a play with big scenes, surprise situations, continuous suspense and the mystery atmosphere peculiar to the author's dramas.

The Palm Beach scenes include besides its society element a group of well known theatrical celebrities including Flo Ziegfeld, Arthur Hammerstein, Lee Shubert, Edgar Selwyn, Ray Comstock and others.

The Palm Beach home of Otto Kahn and the yacht of Jesse Livermore are filmed bits included.

Are Women's Clubs "Meddlers"?

ROY F. SOULE, general sales director of the Kineto Company of America, one who condemns those who cry "meddler" the minute they hear film censorship and women's clubs mentioned in the same breath. Mr. Soule, who has written a pamphlet entitled, "Meddlers," which will soon be issued, does not believe that the interest shown by the women of America in pictures warrants their being classed as fanatics and meddlers.

Mr. Soule points out that some of the greatest characters of history were women who were in their day classed as unwelcome intruders upon a new field. He shows how Florence Nightingale was assailed on all sides by men who persisted that they did not want a woman interfering with the affairs of war, and how Susan B. Anthony, the pioneer of suffrage, and Frances Willard, were both condemned and ridiculed in their day.

"It is true and perfectly natural," writes Mr. Soule, "that an industry so young and so rapidly expanding should attract both good and bad interpreters of public desire in film. Many pictures are produced which cannot stand the censorship of those who demand merit and common cleanliness. It is further true that exhibitors can be found to show such pictures and that a certain part of the public will pay to see them.

"But the movement for better pictures has been under way for a long time. Fewer bad pictures are being produced and there is a rapidly increasing number of those exhibitors who insist on giving their patrons the best pictures men and money can produce. These producers and theatres welcome heartily the co-operation of American women.

"Thank God for American women's interest in the further development of an industry which speaks a common language and wields such a constant influence on the men and women and the boys and girls of this country."

"Babyhood" Kineto Release

Charming Bit of Entertainment Promised in First April Picture

"BABYHOOD" is the subject of the new Kineto Review that is to be released through the National Exchanges the first week in April. Although only one reel in length, the picture made a great hit when shown at the Capitol theatre in New York recently.

"Babyhood" is described as a perfect riot of babies. For fifteen minutes the screen is filled with babies of every size, color and type. As a study in baby-expression the picture is full of interest. For the infants, with a lack of self-consciousness that many a star might envy, register all the emotions known to their age. The baby parade is an interesting feature of the reel, with its close-ups of the blue ribbon winners. And the derby—in which the maximum age limit seems to have been six months—is full of amusement. And there is a proud moment when the "Lollypop Twins" have the screen to themselves.

Every phase of baby-life is touched. Eating, sleeping, crying, laughing, working and playing, they fill the reel with laughs. Mothers will gasp at the sight of infants being put through "stunts" that would almost phaze a seasoned aviator. Turned upside down, swung hither and thither until the onlooker's head reels, the babe is seemingly unaffected and comes through the performance with stolid calm.

Perhaps the most striking feature of the picture is the little fellow, not more than a few weeks old, who performs on the trapeze. Almost unbelievable unless witnessed, this scene raises a laugh at every time it is shown.

This Kineto Review is the first of a series on "Childhood," "Girlhood," and "Boyhood," in which the delights and woes of each will be portrayed in the vivid and charming manner that has made the Kineto Reviews so popular.

Tri Star Has New Product

To Release Frank Powell Productions on Independent Market

THE Tri Star Pictures Company, New York City, have taken over the Frank Powell Production, which includes a number of features starring Marjorie Rambeau, Nance O'Neill and Zena Keefe. They have also taken for distribution, the McClure pictures, starring Alice Mann and Donald Hall.

The Tri Star Pictures Company will market these productions on the State Right plan. The Marjorie Rambeau pictures include six of what are claimed her very best pictures, one with Nance O'Neill, and one with Zena Keefe, in which Sheldon Lewis also appears.

The advertising matter on these productions are practically completed, and the screening of the prints for the state right buyers will be inaugurated in next few days.

This company, in addition to operating as state right distributors will also open their own exchange for New York and New Jersey starting April 15th. In addition to their own productions they will also handle many other independent pictures in their exchange.

C. A. Meade Now With Pierce

C. A. Meade has taken charge of the Atlanta offices of Pearce Films, whose guiding spirit is J. Eugene Pearce of New Orleans, owner of the Federated Franchise for New Orleans and Atlanta territory. Mr. Meade is well known throughout the industry through his long connection with Pathe and Vitagraph. For the past two years he has been operating in the independent field.

C. B. C. Contracts for Robt. Hatton Series

The C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has contracted with C. Edward Hatton for the production of twenty-six two-reel Western pictures. The company announces that henceforth its Star Ranch Western series, under which general subject title it has been releasing one two-reel Western every two weeks, will be devoted exclusively to the release of these Hatton pictures, two of them being released each month.

Hurst-Chaudet Company Formed on Coast

Paul Hurst and Louis Chaudet, both well known directors, have formed their own production company, to be known as the Hurst-Chaudet Productions, and will commence work at the Independence City studios next Monday on a five-reel outdoor melodrama.

Arrangements for the release of their pictures, eight of which will be produced during the year, were completed a few days ago with Eddy Eckels, president and general manager of the Independent Films Association, whose organization will market the Hurst-Chaudet stories on the state rights plan.

An all-star cast will be used and Hurst and Chaudet will alternate in the direction of the stories, it is said.

Frontier Pictures, Inc., Formed in N. Y.

The Frontier Features Inc. was formed last week, the incorporation being made in the City of New York for the sum of $100,000. Its purpose is to produce motion pictures and to engage in such other branches of the business as deemed necessary.

The officers of the corporation are:—Anders Randolf, president; John D. Voorhees, vice-president; Howard B. Ragsdale, secretary; Floyd T. Buckley, treasurer.

Mr. Buckley reports that arrangements have already been practically concluded for the first picture. Mr. Randolf is to be starred.

Zierler Places "Hush" in Capitol Theatre

Sam Zierler, president of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, announces the booking of "Hush," the newest Clara Kimball Young feature, to the Capitol Theatre for the week beginning April 10.

Miss Young Popular in Canada

Baum Negotiating for Effective Exploitation in Dominion

LOUIS BAUM, sales manager of the Equity Pictures Corp., returned from a week's tour of the exchanges of Canada, with the announcement that Clara Kimball Young, Equity star, is one of the screen-idols of the Dominion's movie fans. In a large part of the Dominion, states Baum, she is the supreme favorite, while in other parts Miss Young is rapidly rising to the front in popularity. There were some districts in the western provinces of Canada where her pictures were released rather late. It is this delay in her appearance on the screen that accounts for the fact that she is not yet in first place in Canada's preference, says Equity.

Baum visited Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. In Toronto the Allens, one of the foremost exchanges of the Dominion, reported excellent business on the first series of the Young pictures. The strength of the Equity star, they explain, might be accounted for in the fact that the French population was particularly pleased at the Parisian setting of Miss Young's second release,, "The Forbidden Woman," where the Equity star, in the role of Diane Sorel, portrayed the character of a French society woman with the brilliance ot reality. Ontario and Manitoba, two of the Dominion's leading provinces, are strongholds of the Young pictures. These provinces are mainly French in make-up.

From the information given Baum by the exchangemen he visited, the motion-picture goers of Canada are lovers of artistic sets and scenery. They are appreciative of the luxurious in screen investiture. Harry Garson, Miss Young's director, is said to spare no effort or expense in outfitting every Equity production with the latest designs in interior sets and wardrobe worn by the cast.

"The Eyes of Youth," Miss Young's first Equity release, is still running in Canada's leading houses, while "The Forbidden Woman" is at the height of its career. The purpose of Baum's visit was to arrange for the most effective distribution and exploitation of the new series of the Young pictures, beginning with "Hush." It is planned to launch an extensive campaign among Canadian exhibitors, and to secure as near a 100 per cent. booking on this series as possible. From all indications, all records will be broken on this new group of Young productions, Equity states, as the demand has steadily increased, and theatres are filling return engagements on the first two pictures in abundance. A number of first-run theatres that rival the largest American houses in size and equipment, have sprung up in the Dominion, and are arranging for dates on the Young series.

Baum also reported a marked increase in the demand for independent productions. Canadian exhibitors have awakened to the calibre of state-right pictures and are governing their choice on merit. Exchangemen who are handling independent product are reporting a vigorous booking, and the slump that was noted in territories in this country has apparently had little effect in Canada. The Clara Kimball Young pictures were pointed out as instrumental in raising the prestige of independent releases and popularizing Independent stars.

"Whispering Devils" and "Keep to the Right," two Equity special productions, the first starring Conway Tearle and the second Edith Taliaferro, were subjects of considerable interest among exchangemen. Baum is now negotiating with several prominent state right buyers for the distribution of these features in the Dominion.

Bruce to Do New Scenic Series

"Super-Scenics" Will Be Released by Educational

ROBERT C. BRUCE, who has been making Scenics Beautiful for Educational Film Corporation since the formation of the company, left this week for the Far West to begin a new series of pictures which it is said will prove a striking departure from anything that has ever been attempted in the outdoor class. Although the exact locations of the pictures is withheld, they will all be taken in the United States.

Bruce recently returned from Europe where he made seven pictures in England, Scotland and Switzerland and these will be released starting in April. Just before this trip he visited Cuba and Jamaica and the product he made there is being offered as current releases. With the exception of these pictures his work over a period of nearly seven years has been confined to this country and neighboring portions of Canada.

According to Educational, the constantly increased demand for single reel pictures of the highest character will result in a further specialization in this line during the next year and future and additional time and money will give the production of these pictures and the number of releases will be strictly governed by quality, with the average of one regular, or series, release a week and specials from time to time—pictures that are judged to have unusual box office worth.

One of the series to be included on the schedule shortly will be "World Wanderings." These are said to be pictures of an unusual character, made by a French photographer and covering various series of Europe, Egypt and the Holy Land. The photography is said to set a new standard and there has been a great deal of time in editing and titling them to give added dramatic value. According to Educational ten times as much film was discarded as was employed in the selection.

In addition, Educational has on hand a large number of selected Chester Outing pictures and a number of others that have been bought from independent camera men and which are declared to be exceptional. Some of these pictures will be released in small groups, such as the Hudson's Bay Travel Series in four pictures, the final of which will be given its first showing late in April. These pictures were made in cooperation with the Hudson's Bay Company and are the first motion picture records of that vast country ever made. Many similar novelties are promised.

"Scenics pictures," commented E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, were our very first product and we have always maintained the greatest interest in them. We have seen the demand grow from practically nothing to the great majority of the theatres of the country. And the desire, with us, for higher quality has been increasing at the same time. We have never offered 'also a scenic'; in the future every one of these single reels will be of a standard that will make it a gem on every program—a real and appreciable asset to every theatre."

Exchanges See Success for "Supreme Passion"

State rights exchange men are showing extraordinary interest in "The Supreme Passion" states Robert W. Priest, and they predict great exhibitor success for it on account of the magnetic title and powerful love story it presents.

Mr. Priest, who is meeting with unusual success in state righting this picture, expresses keen satisfaction at the reception given his first big release of 1921. A complete list of sales will be announced shortly, at which time an exhibitor and fan drive will be inaugurated.

New Exchange Buys Film

Cosmopolitan Film, of Boston, Buys "Every Woman's Problem"

A DEAL was consummated this week between Nat Levine, president of Plymouth Pictures, Inc., and the newly organized Cosmopolitan Film Co. of Boston, whereby the latter acquired the New England rights to Plymouth's "Every Woman's Problem." According to Robert Cobe, of Cosmopolitan, "Every Woman's Problem" will be the company's first offering to New England exhibitors and will probably be released around April 1st.

In discussing Cosmopolitan's policy Mr. Cobe stated that the new Independent Exchange will confine itself exclusively to big first run attractions and will distribute in New England a maximum of twelve independent features a year. Each Cosmopolitan attraction, said the company's general manager, will be backed by an intensive sales and exploitation campaign.

Commenting upon his purchase of "Every Woman's Problem" for New England, Mr. Cobe characterized the Plymouth feature as one of the outstanding Independent offerings of the current season. "I and my associate, M. C. Goodman," said Mr. Cobe "happened to be present at a trial showing of the picture in a Boston theatre and were immediately impressed with its exceptional possibilities. Aside from the excellent production given the story and the pictures entertainment value, we saw in the star, Mrs. Wallace Reid, the title and the timeliness of the theme, a combination of real box office power and an opportunity to put over a smashing advertising campaign. Our faith in the possibilities of "Every Woman's Problem" is reflected in the fact that we signed our contract with Mr. Levine less than one hour after we saw the picture and are making "Every Woman's Problem" our first release.

Interest in "Annabel Lee"

Title and Authorship Arouses Exhibitor Interest in Joan Film

THE latest state-right release of the Joan Film Sales Co. "Annabel Lee" an adaptation of Edgar Allan Poe's poem, in which Lorraine Harding and Jack O'Brien are starred, has begun to attract the attention of exhibitors, states Joan. This is considered a strong symptom of the popularity of this poem-picture, as no attempt has been made by Joan to interest theatres directly. The only effort that has been launched has been directed at state-right buyers. The few announcements that have appeared in the trade-papers were enough to arouse the interest of many of the foremost exhibitors of the country, as indicated by the number of inquiries that have been arriving at Joan headquarters for the past two weeks.

An examination of the demand among theatres for "Annabel Lee" shows that it is based on three prominent features of the picture. First is the title. The name of "Annabel Lee" as the favorite poem of thousands was declared by some exhibitors to be the "magnet" that will attract patrons. The second popular feature of "Annabel Lee" was stated as the authorship.

The plot of "Annabel Lee" constituted the third interesting element of the Joan release. The action, being laid in the fishing-village off the New England shore and being replete with picturesque scenes of the life of the fisher-folk, accounted for the appeal that "Annabel Lee" would have to fans. The dramatic intensity of the story and the sentimental touches with which the action abounds, were pointed out as among the attractions of the picture-poem.

R. W. France Now with Blazed Trail Co.

News of recent changes in the personnel of the Blazed Trail Productions, Inc., includes the announcement that R. W. France has been made vice-president and general manager and will take care of the company's interests in New York. John L. Russell, who continues as president of the organization, will confine his work almost entirely to the company's studio in Gloversville, New York, where the Blazed Trail pictures are made.

A change in policy is also announced. Long subjects of a special character are to be substituted for the two-reel pictures made formerly. A feature production is now under way at Gloversville under the direction of Oscar Apfel. The story is said to be laid in the timber country, and some of the thrills of the lumber jack's life are incorporated into the picture. The scenario was written by L. Caseo Russell.

New Producing Units Announced in West

Two new film companies are reported by C. O'D. Blanchfield, who is to act as sales manager for both. One is the Apache Trails Productions, which will make two-reel westerns at Globe, Arizona, featuring J. B. Warner and Vester Pegg. The organizers are all Globe, Arizona men, and the two companies will be directed by A. J. Scott and Buck Connors.

The second company is making South and West comedies of one-reel each; J. R. Wallace will be featured with Laurell Bishop playing opposite under direction of Bob Gray. W. C. Thompson is the photographer.

Ridgeway Series Rising in Favor

Reports have been coming in to the offices of the Capital Film Company from the various state righters handling the Fritzi Ridgeway two-reel features, produced by the Capital Film Company, which indicate that this series is gaining in popularity with every release.

Ben Amsterdam of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia is one to report that the series is making great headway.

"Things Men Do" Is Sold

Trump Film Co. Buys Schlesinger Film for N. Y. and No. New Jersey

MAYER B. SCHLESINGER who last week announced that he had acquired for world distribution the rights to "Things Men Do," has disposed of the New York State and Northern New Jersey rights to his latest offering for independent distribution, to the Trump Film Company of 729 Seventh Avenue, N. Y. Mr. Schlesinger attributes the sale to the advertisement which appeared in the Motion Picture News last week.

The contract which was closed in what is considered a record time, was consummated after the Messrs. McNevin and Huber, representing the Trump Film Company and M. B. Schlesinger had witnessed a private showing of "Things Men Do." Such an impression did the picture make on the two Trump Film Company officials, that a figure acceptable to both parties was definitely agreed upon, and satisfactory terms were arrived at almost within an hour after the showing. An extensive and far-reaching advertising and publicity campaign has been inaugurated in behalf of the production by the Trump Film Company, and huge banners and streamers proclaiming "Things Men Do" have been posted in almost every available location along New York's Film Row. Though the rights to the production were only acquired during the week, the Trump Film Company report many first-run bookings throughout their territory. Mr. Schlesinger also reports the receipt of a large number of inquiries from state right buyers. While no definite contracts have been closed on "Things Men Do" for any other territory but New York State and Northern New Jersey, it is understood that a number of territorial sales are at present pending.

"Things Men Do" was produced by Cyrus J. Williams, who has been and is now making a series of two-reel Western subjects for release through the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Wins B'way Booking Again

Bebe Daniels Film for Rivoli; Is Her Fourth to Get B'way Showing

WHEN "Ducks and Drakes," with Bebe Daniels in the leading feminine role, is shown at the Rivoli theatre, where Dr. Riesenfeld has booked it for the week of March 27, it will mark the appearance on Broadway of the fourth Realart Star Franchise production with this actress. This is a 100 per cent record, all Bebe Daniels Realart pictures having been given Broadway showings.

The first was "You Never Can Tell," which was given its New York premiere at the Rivoli theatre the week of October 3, 1920. This production, which established Miss Daniels as one of Realart's most popular stars, was followed by "Oh, Lady, Lady," adapted from Bolton and Wodehouse's successful stage comedy of the same name. This picture was shown at the Rialto theatre the week of December 19, 1920.

Realart's third vehicle for Miss Daniels was "She Couldn't Help It," based on Miriam Michelson's popular novel, "In the Bishop's Carriage," and presented at the Rialto theatre the week of February 20, 1921.

"Ducks and Drakes" is by Elmer Harris, who originally wrote it for the stage. Supporting Miss Daniels in the male roles are three actors who have each played leading parts in other Realart productions —Jack Holt, Edward Martindel and Wade Boteler. Mr. Martindel appeared with Miss Daniels in her first Realart picture, "You Never Can Tell;" Mr. Boteler was heavy in "She Couldn't Help It," while Jack Holt was seen opposite Mary Miles Minter in her Realart picture, "All Souls' Eve."

Others in the cast are Mayme Kelso, Maurice Newell and Elsie Andrean.

Premiere of Barrie Film

Paramount's "Sentimental Tommy" to Open in New York on B'way

NEW YORK is soon to see the John S. Robertson special production of "Sentimental Tommy," adapted from Sir James M. Barrie's world-known stories, "Sentimental Tommy" and "Tommy and Grizel." The production will open an indefinite engagement at the Criterion theatre, Sunday, March 27. This is the first special production Mr. Robertson has made for Paramount, Jesse L. Lasky having given him the privilege of directing it as a reward for his excellent work on "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and other productions for this company.

The production of "Sentimental Tommy" was begun September 18th and practically three months were consumed in its making.

Gareth Hughes, who is under a starring contract with Metro, and was loaned to Paramount for the exacting role of Tommy Sandys, is only 22 and has made a remarkable reputation for himself on both the stage and screen.

In the role of Grizel is the beautiful and talented May MacAvoy.

National Exchanges to Have Moranti Series

Drascene Productions, of Los Angeles, announce that they have a contract with the National Exchanges, Inc., for the release of the Moranti comedies. In the February 19th issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS it was stated that the Moranti comedies were to be released through Federated Exchanges, Inc.

Chatburn Enterprises Opens New Offices

T. W. Chatburn Enterprises, with main offices in Los Angeles, announces the opening of two additional exchanges. Harry W. Oviatt, former representative of Goldwyn Bray Productions and previously Coast Film Exchange manager, has been placed in charge of the San Francisco office. Walter H. Cree, former Western sales manager for General Film, later with Vitagraph at Denver as manager, has been placed in charge of Chatburn Omaha branch. L. H. Cobbs has been named as assistant manager and M. J. Cohen has taken charge of the publicity department.

Chicago Company Re-Enters Production

The International Photoplay Co., of Chicago, has reentered the production field, and announces the completion of three two-reel comedies featuring Art Bates and Lou Tops. They plan to put out a series of twenty comedies. They will be known as the "Dizzy Dumbell" comedies.

Tarzan's "East Lynne" Is Selling Rapidly

The Tarzan Film Co., which is releasing the six-reel Barker production of "East Lynn," announce that a number of territories have already been sold on this picture.

This picture, it is stated, was made in the Severn River Valley in Western England, where the scenes of Mrs. Henry Wood's drama are laid. In the cast are Blanche Forsythe, as Lady Isabel and Fred Paul as Richard Carlyle.

Other Features Follow "Hearts Aflame"

Pane Novak in "Hearts Aflame," the special six-reel production which marks the initial 1921 release of the Clark-Cornelius Corporation will in all likelihood be followed by a strong series of pictures at stated intervals of the same high standard as this, according to announcement from this company.

Those who have seen the picture claim that in many of its big scenes that relate to the early history of this country the picture compares very favorably to "The Last of the Mohicans." It is contended that "Hearts Aflame" is faithful in its depiction of early American history into which a story has been woven that by many is claimed not to be unlike the virile tales of Fenimore Cooper.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Novelties to Figure in M. P. D. A. Ball

When Sidney Olcott was appointed by Director Charles Miller, as chairman of a committee to devise ways and means for injecting novelties and surprises into the annual frolic of the Motion Picture Directors Association third supper dance, Hotel Astor, Saturday, April 2nd, it was not surprising to learn that in company with George L. Sargent and J. Searle Dawley, Mr. Olcott hit upon an idea. It is predicted that the "screen version" of it will top the evening and incidentally break all records for speed in taking, developing and projecting film, to date.

While the evening is in progress with Orlando's twenty-five piece orchestra, supplying music for the dancing, motion picture cameras will be put into action. Bona fide camera-men will grind at top speed and sufficient film will be dedicated to include all those present who venture within camera range. If one is averse to being photographed it will be well to remain in the background, for those camera-men are directed to "shoot" everybody, and turn a wicked crank. When the cameras stop, special messengers will dispatch the film to the Craftsman Laboratory, where it will be made ready for projection, brought back to the Astor, and there, on the Silver Sheet, it will mercilessly depict the party as it was a few hours previous, showing leading producers, directors, stars, players and participants of varied walks of life, in and out of the industry, indulging in a yearly frolic. Many people in private life, who will attend, and who have never before faced a motion picture camera, will appreciate the novelty, while those familiar with time-lapse identified with the film business, will be obliged to admit that for speed, the records are broken, the entire handling of the "production" to involve only a few hours.

New Kineto Review is "Down in Dixie"

"Down In Dixie" is the Kineto Review to be released April 4th, by the Kineto Company of America, Inc., through the National Exchanges, Inc.

It is described as a fascinating scenic, portraying artistically the beauty and charm of the old "Sunny South." Cumberland Gap with its flowing river and wooded hillside is seen; also the moss hung forests of the alluvial region.

The Kineto Review ends with enlivening scenes from the annual Fiddlers Frolic in which every fiddler is also a solo dancer of many parts.

Heads Franchise Activities

Phil Ryan in Charge of Building Up Ass'd Exhib. Franchise System

PHIL L. RYAN, former sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, has been placed in complete charge of the franchise activities of the Associated Exhibitors sales force throughout the United States as manager of franchises, and will begin immediately the upbuilding of the extensive system outlined in the reorganization plans of the company. Congratulatory expressions of good will and pledges of support for the new franchise plan have been coming in to the offices of the company from exhibitors in every part of the country, declares a statement from the Pathe headquarters. The franchise situation calls for specialization of a high order, it is felt, and Mr. Ryan is peculiarly well fitted for the task, as he has devoted his efforts for almost a year to the study and development of franchise plans and efforts.

"I believe the ideal we have been striving for, the creation of a just and fair franchise has been achieved," Mr. Ryan said in discussing the new plan. "We have had the benefit of splendid advice. Exhibitors' advice was sought and eagerly welcomed, and the efforts of Samuel Harding of Kansas City, now the President of Associated, and of Paul Gusdanovic of Cleveland, now Vice-President, are embodied in the franchise and are keenly appreciated.

"We have had the soundest advice not alone from exhibitors but from men of distinguished success in production and distribution. The widespread reputation of Arthur S. Kane, not alone for his success, but for his standing with exhibitors for integrity and fair dealing, is some assurance of the value of his advice in the formulation of the plan. The invaluable experience of Paul Brunet, president of the Pathe Exchange, and of Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges, was also felt to a large extent in the formulation of the plan.

"The backbone of the franchise comes from the expressed desires and necessities of exhibitors themselves. I am happy to continue in association with men whose vision made possible the Associated idea and to bend every effort toward the complete establishment of the Associated franchise plan."

Emmett J. Flynn Signed by William Fox

The Fox offices announce that Emmett J. Flynn, who directed the William Fox film version of Mark Twain's "Connecticut Yankee," now running to capacity business at the Selwyn Theatre, has been signed on a two year contract to direct productions for the Fox organization.

The Fox company has elaborate plans in view for Mr. Flynn, who returns next week to California, where he will start work immediately upon a new production for Fox release.

Big Hippodrome Set in "Queen of Sheba"

One of the features of the William Fox production, "Queen of Sheba," is the great hippodrome set that was built for the production. The location for the big set and its environs comprised 100 acres, and the cost of the set when completed approximated $60,000, declares William Fox.

Completely inclosing the race course is a wall eight feet high, in simulation of stone, like all the rest of the walls. Along this wall, forming a beautiful colonnade that can be seen from the hilltops for several miles around are 75 Assyrian pillars. Inside the course is a four-foot wall, also of stone and set with a row of 24 columns. All these pillars are lavishly festooned and draped, and topped with banners.

The race course is about 150 feet wide, furnishing room for ten chariots, each drawn by four horses, to race side by side. When the race scene was filmed eight cameras were used, several of them being placed on platforms 75 feet tall.

Beban Brings Chicago Tour to a Close

George Beban has brought his three weeks' tour of personal appearances in Chicago to a close. His picture, "One Man in a Million," was well received at the three houses where it was shown. The press criticisms were liberal in their praise of the production.

Rob Reel of the Chicago American said: "'One Man in a Million' at the Riviera, featuring George Beban, that excellent character actor, is a story of sacrifice, love and human understanding. Mr. Beban is well supported in 'One Man in a Million,' modestly asserting that the real star of the picture is George Beban, Jr."

Genevieve Harris, writing in the Chicago Post, said of the picture: "Its situation and sequences are as well worked out as are the characters. If all 'better pictures' were like 'One Man in a Million,' no one would go to the other kind.

Many Novelties in New Under-Sea Picture

In the latest under-sea story by J. Ernest Williamson, entitled, "Wet Gold," which will be released through Goldwyn, many novelties have been introduced. Due to the advance in photographic method, a far greater freedom has been vouchsafed the actor-divers in their work at the bottom of the sea.

To film this story, which is a romance of land and sea, Mr. Williamson built a submarine 150 feet long, which is used as a base of operations for all the work done on the bottom of the ocean.

Pathe News Has Plane Views of Vesuvius

After winning the reluctant consent of the Italian government, Dixio Alberini, a Pathe News cameraman with headquarters in Rome, undertook to "shoot" views of Vesuvius and close-ups of its crater from an aeroplane. The flight was started from Naples on a morning when the moderate volume of smoke from the crater permitted the taking of clear scenes of the famous burning mountain." The plane circled above the summit while the cameraman took "shots" from various angles, especially toward Naples and Pompeii. Then came repeated "Shots" of the crater itself, the plane circling lower and lower, while Alberini waited alert with his camera to take advantage of every gust of wind which would waft aside the smoke and reveal the deep-fissured walls of the crater. The results of this notable expedition are presented in the current issue, No. 23.

Dr. Crane Titles Vignola Picture

Dr. Frank Crane, internationally famous as an editorial writer and philosopher, whose works of wisdom have brought cheer and comfort to thousands, has been engaged by George B. Van Cleve, general manager of William Randolph Hearts's film interests, and will write sub-titles for "The Woman God Changed," famous story which has been dramatized for the screen and film under the direction of Robert G. Vignola.

The original story of "The Woman God Changed" was written by Donn Byrne, the scenario the work of Doty Hobart. Most of the scenes were taken in the Bahama Islands, and the carefully selected cast includes E. K. Lincoln, Seena Owen, Lillian Walker, Henry Sedley, H. Cooper Cliff, Paul Nicholson, Joseph Smiley, Brian Darley and Templer Saxe.

Calls "Little Clown" a "Lucky Picture"

A production involving the appearance of animals is an especially trying task, Luck is always a factor in the making of such pictures. Speaking of "The Little Clown," the Realart production, Director Thomas Heffron has the following to say:

"Pictures with animals are always largely a matter of luck because no matter how highly trained they are there is always the contingency of their failing at a critical moment.

"Everything broke right, however, for the innumerable animal scenes in this picture, and I can safely say we have secured some of the greatest material of this sort that has ever been recorded for the screen."

A real fox hunt involving twenty horses, a pack of hounds and a fox is one of the features of the picture. A monkey plays an amusing part. There are also said to be some striking circus scenes in the production. Mary Miles Minter is the star, and the cast includes Jack Mulhall, Helen Dunbar, Neely Edwards, Bert Leo, Winter Hall, Lura Anson and Lucien Littlefield.

Good Supporting Cast for Max Linder

In the opinion of Robertson-Cole officials, much of the success reported to be attending the Max Linder starring vehicle, "Seven Years Bad Luck," is due to the character of the supporting cast found in this five-reeler. Alta Allen, who plays opposite Mr. Linder, has had considerable experience both on the stage and on the screen. Thelma Percy is also seen in the supporting cast. Hugh Saxon plays one of the leading male roles. He has had an extensive stage career and has also appeared in vaudeville. Chance E. Ward is another player who has had a long screen career. He has also directed many comedies.

40 "Type" Players in 'Torchy" Comedy

More than forty different players have individual parts in "Crowning Torchy," tenth of the comedies made from the stories by Sewell Ford and starring Johnny Hines, which will be an early Educational release. This picture completes the first contract of Master Films, Inc., with Educational, but no time has been lost, and the first comedy under the new agreement for twelve pictures has been practically completed.

Hart and Ince Pictures Released on March 20th

ON March 20 Paramount released "O'Malley of the Mounted," starring William S. Hart, and "Beau Revel," a Thomas H. Ince special production. A statement from the Famous Players-Lasky home-office declares that "O'Malley of the Mounted" during its premiere at the Rivoli theatre, New York, topped all box-office records for Hart productions at that house by more than $5,000. Pre-release showings of this picture in other cities have registered the same success, it is stated. Mr. Hart wrote and scenarized the story, and Lambert Hillyer directed the production. Eva Novak heads the supporting cast.

"Beau Revel" was adapted from a story by Louis Joseph Vance; Luther Reed did the scenario. John Griffith Wray directed the production. The story is considered by many critics as among the very best novels written by Mr. Vance. It was first published as a serial in Munsey's Magazine in 1919.

Big Set and 450 Extras for "Experience"

The Long Island studio of the Famous Players-Lasky organization was recently the scene of unusual activity when the cabaret scene was filmed for George Fitzmaurice's picture version of the famous stage success, "Experience." In the "Dance of the Fools," the climactic scene of the picture, more than 450 dancers were shown on the floor of the huge cabaret set which taxed the capacity of the mammoth studio stage.

Frank McCormack, stage director of the original stage production of "Experience," who is assisting George Fitzmaurice in the direction of the picturization of the play for Paramount, has entered the cast of the picture for the short part of "Delusion."

Johnston-Macfarland Opens New Agency

Alfred Cheney Johnston and James Hood Macfarland have incorporated under the name of Johnston - Macfarland, Inc., and have opened New York offices. They will act as managers and representatives of leading actresses and actors and will also establish a publicity bureau. This new enterprise will not interfere with Mr. Johnston's photographic work as the business will be in charge of Mr. Macfarland. Other activities of this new corporation will include that of booking agents and play brokers.

Bursting Dam Scene in "Fine Feathers"

All the thrill and horror of the bursting of a great dam, with pent-up floods sweeping over the surrounding country, carrying everything before it in its destructive rush, is shown in "Fine Feathers," a Metro production of the stage play by Eugene Walter, soon to be released.

The exteriors for this dam and spillway were taken on one of the great dams showing the gigantic nature of the engineering work. Then from specially taken photographs Art Director M. P. Staulcup constructed a miniature dam. The carefully constructed model was mounted on a large base, with an outlet to carry off the water and two fire hoses trained on the back of the model. With the camera stationed close to the miniature, the water was turned on, and as the basin began to fill the camera registered the growing flood.

Alice Duer Miller to Write for Goldwyn

Alice Duer Miller, one of the latest additions to the roster of prominent authors under contract to write original stories for Goldwyn Pictures, left last week for the Goldwyn Studios at Culver City, Cal., with the first draft of a script on which she has been working for the past month. Mrs. Miller was accompanied by Maron Frances Lee, associate editor at the New York scenario department, who is writing the continuity for the story. Mrs. Lee will remain on the Coast as a member of the continuity staff at the studio.

"East Lynne" in Demand

Hodkinson Executive Says Total Bookings Will Mark New Record

"HUGO BALLIN'S production of 'East Lynne' will total a greater amount of bookings and within a shorter period of time than any picture ever released through our organization." This is the statement made by Sales Manager P. N. Brinch of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, after a careful study of first and second run bookings already closed on this production.

"Record prices are being paid for Hugo Ballin's modernized version of 'East Lynne,'" continued Mr. Brinch, "not only in the bigger cities but even in the smaller towns, where the name 'East Lynne' may even mean more to the average audience than in the bigger cities where this play has not been seen so often within recent years. This is doubtless due, in large measure, to the appreciation by the exhibitors everywhere of Mr. Hodkinson's firm determination to play square with them by refusing to release 'East Lynne' as a road-show and by booking it in our regular list of releases.

"The Ziegfeld theatre in Chicago, for example, which is ordinarily devoted to road shows will show our 'East Lynne' for two weeks commencing April tenth at an advanced admission. Other Chicago bookings already arranged include the well-known Parkside, Harper, Vendan and Julian theatres.

"Most of the important circuits in the film industry in our entire country have already booked this modernized classic. The B. F. Keith organization commenced a sixty-day showing of 'East Lynne' in its affiliated combination houses, such as the B. S. Moss theatres, in and around New York City on March twentieth. And, Mr. Moss has himself declared that in this production is 'the biggest box-office title offered to the exhibitor this year.' The Saenger chain in Louisiana and Mississippi—the Lynch circuit in Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and Florida—a number of Marcus Loew's theatres—the Poli houses in New England—the Allender chain throughout the Northwest—these are only selected representative circuits whose faith in our 'East Lynne' is amply demonstrated by their voluminous bookings. Also there is Foy's quartette of Neighborhood theatres in Dallas, Texas, which will feature 'East Lynne' day and date for a simultaneous three-day showing."

Good Cast in Cabanne Film

Experienced Cast in Robertson-Cole's "What's a Wife Worth?"

WILLIAM CHRISTY CABANE has assembled a carefully selected cast in his latest production for Robertson-Cole, "What's a Wife Worth?" The featured role is played by Ruth Renick who is a former stock company actress. Miss Renick played in the Bishop Stock Company in Oakland, Cal., and later went to Seattle as leading woman for the Wilks Stock Company. She next appeared in Los Angeles in the all-star revival of "Shenandoah" and later was seen in support of a number of leading actors.

Casson Ferguson is cast opposite Miss Renick. His first stage appearance was as a member of the Robert Mantell Company in Shakespearian repertoire. Later he was in opera in Paris, and still later appeared with Ethel Levy in comic opera in London. He was widely known in musical comedy in the United States.

Virginia Caldwell who is seen in the role of the vain, frivolous society girl whom the hero of "What's A Wife Worth?" takes as his second wife, is a Broadway beauty. It was not long ago that she was appearing as a featured member of the Ziegfeld Follies. Thence she went into screen acting.

Cora Drew who plays the role of the spinster aunt in "What's A Wife Worth?", supported Robert Downing in star roles. Later she was a newspaper writer, and then went back to the stage where she played many years. She became a member of one of the early motion picture companies and appeared in some of the greatest productions which have been made.

A prominent member of the "What's A Wife Worth?" cast is Alex Francis, a screen veteran who has appeared in dozens of the best pictures in recent years. He is an English actor who appeared abroad in musical stock, toured the world, came to America and went into pictures.

Fox Names April Releases

"Shame" Joint Product of Flynn and McConville Heads the List

FOX Film Corporation announces its April releases. The most important of these is a special production called "Shame," which is the joint product of Emmett J. Flynn and Bernard McConville. Flynn, who also directed the picture, will be remembered as the man who made such a creditahble job of staging the spectacular Fox production of Mark Twain's "Connecticut Yankee" for which McConville wrote the scenario.

The story of "Shame," is Oriental in character. The cast includes John Gilbert, Rosemary Theby, William V. Mong, George Siegman and a talented child actor, "Mickey" Moore.

Another April release is "His Greatest Sacrifice." J. Gordon Edwards directed the production, the screen version of which was made by Paul H. Sloane. The story has to do with the clash of artistic temperament between a successful author and his wife, who eventually becomes a great singer. The development of the story creates one of the most dramatic and fascinatnng of photoplays, declares William Fox. Fox will release also in April the latest Tom Mix production called "Hands Off." The story is from the pen of William McLeod Raine, and was directed by George E. Marshall.

The release of Shirley Mason's newest offering "The Lamplighter" is due in the month of showers. Maria Susanna Cummins is responsible for the story. Howard M. Mitchell directed "The Lamplighter." "The Tomboy" features the Fox comedienne, Eileen Percy, who enacts the part of a small town girl with big town ideas—aided and abetted by a select coterie of skilled farceurs. In the earlier stages of the story, Miss Percy, as a female Babe Ruth, keeps the village ball team delirious with happiness over her ability to swat the pill over the fence every time she comes to bat. Carl Harbaugh wrote and directed the picture.

Harold Goodwin's second starring vehicle for Fox, "Ishmael," filmed from Mrs. D. E. N. Southworth's story of the same name, is still another release for the coming month. Millarde Webb adapted the story and directed the production.

Morris Kohn Leaves Coast on Tour

MORRIS KOHN, president of Realart, has left Los Angeles, following a five-day inspection of the company's Hollywood property, and is now on his way East, with stop-overs planned at several cities en route.

While on the Coast, Mr. Kohn authorized improvements which will increase by 100 per cent the producing capacity of the West Coast studios. The present ten thousand foot open stage will be glassed in and a new open stage of 7,000 square feet, constructed. This will give Realart three modern and fully equipped stages with the proper scene docks and accessories.

Another item in the plan of improvements is the construction of a modern office building to house the scenario department, general offices, and executives now housed in temporary quarters.

Bigger Torchy Comedy Series

Larger Expenditures in New Series, Says C. C. Burr

FOLLOWING closely upon the recent announcement made by E. W. Hammons, president of the Educational Films Corporation, of his company's acquisition of the distributing rights for the second series of Torchy Comedies, starring Johnny Hines, comes an announcement from C. C. Burr, president of Master Films, Inc., producers of these comedies.

"In a recent statement appearing in the trade publications and attributed to Mr. Hammons, said Mr. Burr, the phrase is used, "The contract calls for the expenditure of larger sums on the production of these comedies than in the past." While this phrase is wholly correct as applied to Torchy Comedies, none the less, I believe that it is one deserving of something more than a cursory glance."

Continuing, Mr. Burr said, "Neither Mr. Hammons' statement nor mine is a mere play upon words nor can it be said that the decision arrived at is one either ill-conceived nor hastily made. The executives of Master Films have long planned just such a step, but not until recently have conditions made action possible.

"To spend money on a production may mean much—or little. In the 'Miracle Man' we have seen a relatively inexpensive production gross millions and that isn't an isolated case, either. On the contrary, a number of productions made at enormous cost, have failed to pay for themselves. We mean to spend our increased appropriation upon cast, mounting and staff. The Sewall Ford stories upon which our comedies are based, are owned by us which relieves us from further outlay in the matter of scripts.

"The new plans are already under way. A concrete example of this is to be found in the production now being filmed, entitled, 'Torchy's Promotion,' which is the first of the new series. For this picture we have built at a huge outlay, enormous sets, replicas of the dining room, grand ball room and lobby of one of New York's best known hotels. We could not afford to do this last year but we can and will do so this year or whenever the script requires it. We do not consider, even in comedy making, that this is extravagance—it isn't. It's a mighty good investment for us and for the exhibitor.

"Slowly but surely, during the past months we have carefully gathered about us an experienced and seasoned cast and staff. It is wholly adequate for any production but especially able for its particular mission. It is the realization of the institutional idea in making Torchy Comedies.

"Johnny Hines, the ideal and vitalized Torchy of Sewall Ford's stories, will continue in the leading role. Moreover, he has severed all stage connections and will now devote himself exclusively to the screen. Charles Hines, brother of the star, is directing. For this week he is pre-eminently fitted, having been long associated with dramatic plays.

"The associate director is Richard Thorpe, whose reputation as a painter of landscapes and as an actor is international. Raymond Schrock writes the scripts for the screen as suggested by Sewall Ford's Torchy stories. Most everyone is familiar with his accomplishments. He is one of the screens pioneer writers, his experience dating back to the old Kalem days.

"Dorothy Leeds, one of the Ziegfeld beauties, whose comeliness, charm of manner and histronic skill have endeared her to millions during her engagements with the Follies, Midnight Frolic, Floradora Sextette and 'Hitchy Koo,' is now playing opposite Mr. Hines, in the new series of Torchy Comedies.

"The camera work will be in the hands of Roy V. Vaughn, who has been intrusted heretofore, with some of the biggest productions ever filmed.

"The management of production is now wholly in the hands of 'Demmie' Lamson, an architect and interior decorator of achievement who has heretofore been acting only in consultation capacities. He is assisted by Harry Keiffer, who is master of properties.

"These are the outstanding accomplishments to date—at least, they are all that I may speak about at this time. A little later there will be provided, where needed, additional timber of the same excellent quality for 'The House That Torchy Built.' The structure is being built to endure. It was designed and built by these and a score of other artists and artisans whose handiwork is destined to live long in the annals of modern comedy making. Larger sums will be spent on our productions, it is true, but it will be in a manner efficient and productive—both for the exhibitor and ourselves."

Two More Cities Will Show "Over the Hill"

THE Fox production, "Over the Hill," which still is sailing along to capacity business at the Broadhurst Theatre, New York, where it is in the seventh month of continuous Broadway presentation, is to be shown in Washington at the Garrick Theatre, March 27, and in Baltimore at the Lyceum Theatre. Other cities will receive prints in the near future, it is announced by Fox Film.

"Outside the Law" Is Smashing Records

Universal Film's home-office reports that "Outside the Law," starring Priscilla Dean, is achieving great success in all sections of the country. H. T. Moore, manager of the Rialto theatre, Seattle, Wash., has wired:

"'Outside the Law' just closed the largest week's business ever done in our Rialto theatre."

Exceptional box-office returns have also been realized at the Royal theatre in St. Louis on this production, declares the statement from the Universal headquarters. The Palace theatre, in Buffalo, broke a long established rule and held "Outside the Law" over for a ten-day run after it had broken the house record for the first seven days' showing, Universal reports.

Busy Days at Lasky Studios

WITH the completion of a number of Paramount pictures and preparations being made for the immediate starting of others, production at the Lasky studio at Hollywood goes on apace. While it is a fact that the Winter has been one of the busiest in the history of the studio, it now looks as if Spring would usher in a still livelier period of activity, with the advance production schedule calling for its continuance far into next Fall.

George Melford has just completed the filming of "The Money Master," and is now busy cutting the adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's famous story. The British author collaborated with the Paramount producer on the preparation of the scenario and was with him on the set and on location daily throughout the making of the picture. Mr. Melford will next produce for Paramount, E. Phillips Oppenheim's "The Great Impersonation."

Penrhyn Stanlaws, after a year of intensive study, is preparing for the start of work March 28th, on the picture which will mark his debut as a director and also the debut of Betty Compson as a Paramount star. This will be "At the End of the World," scenarized by E. Bingham from Ernst Klein's European success. Miss Compson is now in Los Angeles making ready to take up her work at the Lasky studio.

Peter B. Kyno is at the Lasky studio collaborating on the adaptation of his famous Cappy Ricks stories as a starring vehicle for Thomas Meighan, Albert Shelby LeVino is writing the scenario. As soon as Tom Forman finishes the cutting and titling of "White and Unmarried," Meighan's last Paramount picture, he will go to New York to direct the star in the Kyno story.

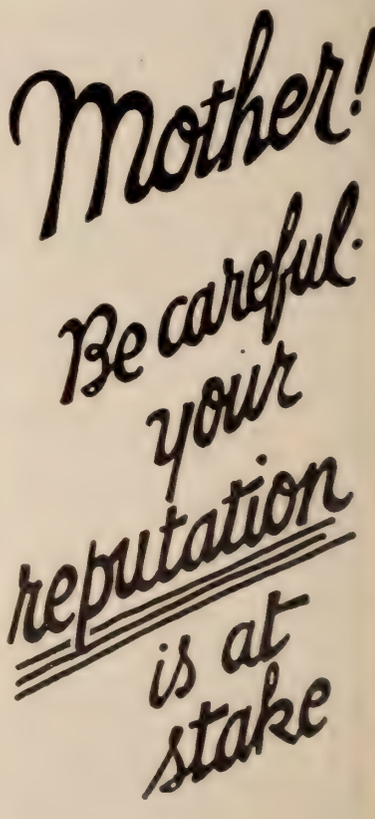
Jean Havez, nationally famous as a humorist and song writer has been signed to work exclusively on Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle's pictures in conjunction with the Lasky Studio Scenario Department. Mr. Havez was with the fat comedian in his two reel days and added many clever touches to the comedies. Mr. Arbuckle is returning from New York to start work March 21 on George Pattullo's story "Gasolene Gus." James Cruze will direct and Walter Woods has prepared the scenario.

Frank Woods, supervising director at the West Coast studio of Famous Players-Lasky announces that the permanent title of Wallace Reid's latest Paramount picture will be "Watch My Speed." This is a Byron Morgan story that was tentatively called "Watch My Smoke," and was directed by Frank Urson. Mr. Reid is now on a trip to Vancouver and other Northern cities and on his return to the Southland March 21 will start on "Tall Timbers," Dr. James A. B. Scherer's original story for the screen. Eugene B. Lewis wrote the scenario and Frank Urson will again direct.

Theodore Kosloff has been aiding Director Sam Wood in filming the Russian sequence of "The Great Moment," Elinor Glyn's story for Paramount, starring Gloria Swanson. Elaborate sets have been constructed at the Lasky studio and the famous Russian dancer and artist promises that the proper atmosphere will be faithfully preserved. Miss Swanson under Kosloff's tutelage does a Russian dance that is said to be remarkably beautiful.

William D. Taylor is nearing the completion of "Wealth," in which Ethel Clayton is starred for Paramount and which is an adaptation by Julia Crawford Ivers from Cosmo Hamilton's "The Almighty Dollar." Herbert Rawlinson plays opposite the beautiful star.

William DeMille is still busily engaged on "The Lost Romance," scenarized by Olga Printzlau from Edward Knoblock's first original story for Paramount.



Katherine MacDonald, whose next picture on the First National program will be "Trust Your Wife"

Katherine MacDonald Renews Contract

KATHERINE MACDONALD will remain under the management of B. P. Schulberg for an additional period of two years after the expiration of her present contract, according to an announcement from Mr. Schulberg's offices. The star, who but two years ago was practically an unknown player, will receive $600,000 as salary for the period, it is stated.

The contract has been under consideration for some time with Henry Herzbrun of New York and Loeb, Walker and Loeb of Los Angeles, as the attorneys representing Mr. Schulberg, and Miss MacDonald's interests looked after by Henry Wetherborn, an attorney of Los Angeles. The rise in popularity with the public on the part of Miss MacDonald through the productions starring her as distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was the deciding factor in the conclusion as to the salary she was to receive, declares a statement from First National headquarters.

Miss MacDonald's latest release is "My Lady's Latchkey" and "Trust Your Wife" will be released shortly. Under the new contract, a schedule providing for six releases a year will be adopted, it is announced.

Exploitation Expert Is Engaged by Universal

The exploitation department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has engaged Charles J. Giegerich, the instigator of many widely known publicity campaigns, to work in connection with the national exploitation campaign projected for "Reputation," the forthcoming Universal-Jewel picture starring Priscilla Dean.

It also is announced at the Universal home office that Lowell Cash, a well known publicity man, has been dispatched to exploit "Outside the Law" the present Priscilla Dean success, in the Ohio territory. Cash is following Joseph H. Mayer, who has gone to Baltimore for Universal to exploit "Outside the Law" for the New Theatre.

Goldwyn Features on the Way

AFTER a thorough canvass of available players in both New York and Los Angeles to act the leading feminine role, that of the mother, in "The Grim Comedian," Rita Weiman's first original scenario, Goldwyn chose Phoebe Hunt for the part. Miss Hunt is playing the leading feminine role in Miss Weiman's spoken drama, "The Acquittal," now showing in Los Angeles. The role of the mother is most important and it proved difficult to cast, but now Goldwyn is confident that the right actress for the part has been obtained. Frank Lloyd will direct the production.

Photography on "Look Before You Leap," the Thompson Buchanan comedy formerly called "The Bridal Path," was completed this week under the direction of E. Mason Hopper. The company has just returned from its third trip to Santa Barbara for exteriors.

Tom Moore and his bride, Rene Adoree, whom he courted, won and married while she was playing the part of his sister in the William Hurlbut comedy, "Made in Heaven," have returned from their honeymoon in Honolulu. On March 24th Moore is scheduled to begin work on his next photoplay, "Beating the Game," an original scenario by Charles Kenyon. Victor Schertzinger will direct.

Good progress is being made on next Reginald Barker Production, "The Old Nest," from Rupert Hughes' successful novel of the same name, despite the indisposition of the California sun. Mr. Barker has been taking scenes for the picture on a small town street constructed on the studio lot.

Wallace Worsley has got well under way with Gouverneur Morris' original photoplay, "Ace of Hearts." This is a strongly dramatic story and the combination of Lon Chaney, Leatrice Joy and John Bowers in the three leading roles gives promise of screen acting of the highest type.

Will Rogers is taking lessons in fencing in order to play the duel scene in Elmer L. Rice's original photoplay, "Doubling for Romeo," realistically. The Goldwyn studios here have taken on a very picturesque appearance because of the fifteenth century Italian costumes which are being used in the dream part of this comedy. Rogers is writing a song called "The Juliet Blues," which is to be interpolated in the picture. Rogers' latest photoplay, "An Unwilling Hero," was shown in preview at the Strand Theatre, in Pasadena, this week, and was enthusiastically received. The management of the theatre gave Rogers a handsome sterling silver loving cup in recognition of the excellent acting which he does in the comedy.

Gouverneur Morris, one of the Eminent Authors group, is blossoming out as a public speaker as well as a writer of original scenarios for Goldwyn. Last Wednesday night he spoke at three theatres in Pomona in opposition to the local agitation to close the motion picture houses on Sunday. His eloquence is said to have made a deep impression upon public sentiment.

Hodkinson in Big Export Deal

William M. Vogel to Take Care of All Foreign Sales

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has issued an announcement to the effect that an arrangement has been entered into whereby William M. Vogel, well known as an exporter of motion pictures, assumes the active management of the export activities of present and future Hodkinson releases with complete world rights exclusive of the United States and Canada.

Involved in this new deal are the output of such producers as Irvin V. Willat, Hugo Ballin, Benj. B. Hampton, J. L. Frothingham, Rockett Brothers, Dial Film Company, Irene Castle Productions, National Pictures Corporation, and productions of various other Hodkinson units.

This means that such stars as Enid Bennett, Irene Castle, Betty Blythe, Mabel Ballin, Bessie Barriscale, Claire Adams, Myrtle Stedman, Mitchell Lewis, Billie Rhodes, Roy Stewart, J. Warren Kerrigan, Edward Earle, Leatrice Joy, Kathlyn Williams, Marguerite de la Motte, and Joseph Dowing, are among the talent made available through Mr. Vogel in a variety of attractive stories. Among these stories may be mentioned "East Lynn," "Jane Eyre," "U. P. Trail," "Kentucky Colonel," "Partners of the Tide," "Keeping Up With Lizzie," "The Other Woman," "Down Home," "The Tiger's Coat," "The Truant Husband," "Pagan Love," "King Spruce," 'The Breaking Point," "Blue Bonnet," "The Dream Cheater," "The Broken Gate," "No. 99," "Green Flame," "The Coast of Opportunity," and many others.

The authors represented in the list of plays enumerated above include Irving Bacheller, Zane Grey, Achmed Abdullah, Mary Lerner Albert Payson Terhune, Page Phillips, Joseph C. Lincoln, Emerson Hough, F. N. Westcott, etc. Their direction was in the capable hands of Irvin V. Willat, William A. Seiter, Hugo Ballin, Paul Scardon, Edward Sloman, Ernest C. Warde, Roy Clements, Jack Conway, Thomas Heffron, Lloyd Ingraham and T. Hayes Hunter.

It is announced for the convenience of foreign rights buyers that the offices of Mr. William M. Vogel are located at the present time in the Longacre Building, 1476 Broadway, where they will remain until satisfactory arrangements for larger accommodations can be made.

"Middle of Story Vital," Says Vignola

THE middle of a story is at once the most important and the most difficult part, according to Robert G. Vignola, director of special productions for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, who is now directing Marion Davies in "Manhandling Ethel."

"It is of far greater importance to the film than either the beginning or the end and it is the most difficult part of the production to write or to make," said Mr. Vignola. "Almost any one can take a theme, give it an explosive opening and a pyrotechnic finish and let it go at that, but the middle of the story—that's another matter.

"Authors and directors must not forget that in one sense the motion picture is at a disadvantage. The novel has the advantage of being able to be put aside and taken up again later. The play has the advantage of being divided into acts with intermissions between to give the audience a chance to rest and think. But the motion picture has no such advantage. A five or six reel feature runs continuously for from an hour and a quarter to an hour and a half subjecting the mind and eyes to an unusual strain. It is another weakness of the screen that it has a tendency to lull one to sleep. To overcome this handicap, or in other words to keep the spectators awake, the middle of the story must be fully as interesting, if not more so, than the beginning because it has a more difficult row to hoe. That's where the writer's and director's respective abilities count.

"I venture to say that the biggest reason for a picture's failure is the fact that it sags in the middle. This fault destroys interest which is always, without exception, fatal. No matter how unusual the opening may be I am always skeptical until I get to the middle. My question is: 'How' are the third and fourth reels?

If authors paid more attention to the body of a story than to the beginning and the end they would have a much better story in the long run, one that would reflect credit upon them and upon the director."

Mermaid Contract Renewed for 3 Years

JACK WHITE and Lloyd Hamilton, who have been respectively supervising and starring in Mermaid comedies which have been made at the Astra studios in Glendale, Calif., for Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., are busy this week completing arrangements for the first of their pictures to be made in the East, as a result of the contract for three years which they have just signed with E. W. Hammons, president of Educational.

This contract calls for Hamilton to appear in six comedies a year and White to personally direct the same number with a comedian whose name has not yet been announced featured. White will also supervise the Hamilton pictures though another director will be in immediate charge. In addition to these pictures Jimmie Adams, who remains with Astra, will appear in eight two-reelers a year which will also be released under the Mermaid brand name.

Probably two and possibly more pictures will be made in New York.

"Scoops" for International

Scores "Beat" on Vesuvius Eruption and Moscow Meeting Views

INTERNATIONAL NEWS reel officials are jubilant over two news "beats" scored by that organization during the past week. Not only does the International News claim credit for sending out the first pictures of the latest eruption of Mount Vesuvius, Italy's famed volcano, several days ahead of any other news reel organization, but also for the release of exclusive pictures taken during the meeting of the noted Third Internationale in Moscow, Russia.

The "beat" on the eruption pictures, International explains, was possible because of the early distribution of International News No. 21, released through Universal in New York Tuesday, March 15, and shipped from New York to Universal exchanges in all parts of the country on the same day. This beat by several days similar pictures in rival news reels, states the home office and the pictures of Mt. Vesuvius in eruption were taken by Capt. Ariel Varges, International's leading foreign representative.

The pictures from Moscow arrived in this country by special International messenger. International officials assert that pictures dealing with Bolshevik activities are regarded as contraband by officials of many governments and have to be guarded in transit. The Internationale pictures were released in International News No. 22, released March 18.

Screen Supersedes Stage

Wins Two Productions Originally Destined for Stage Presentation

THAT the screen is pulling stronger with playwrights than the stage is apparent from the announcement that at least two productions, written originally for the stage, have been given screen presentation first. One of these is "Ducks and Drakes," written by Elmer Harris, who has invariably had his comedies produced on the stage before being screened, but who in this instance has reversed his usual method.

Asked why he had delayed the stage production by permitting the screen version to be made first, Mr. Harris explained:

"I found Miss Bebe Daniels, the Realart star, such a perfect realization of the type I intended 'Teddy,' the heroine of my comedy, to be that I lost no time in arranging to have her appear in the screen version of the play."

Another play which picture patrons will see before it is presented on the stage is "The Little Clown." It is an original comedy by Avery Hopwood, author of many plays, four of which are successfully and simultaneously running on Broadway this season.

Mr. Hopwood, who personally supervised the filming of his play, is enthusiastic over the great possibilities of the motion picture as a field for dramatists.

"I feel that many points are brought out in the photoplay that will be of value in producing the stage version," said Mr. Hopwood. "For in this offering I am reversing usual precedents, and film followers will see 'The Little Clown' months before it is appearing on Broadway."

Both "Ducks and Drakes" and "The Little Clown" are Realart productions and are released under the Star Franchise.

American Issues Press Book

"Payment Guaranteed" Possesses Fine Exploitation Possibilities

A CAMPAIGN book for "live wire" exhibitors is just off the press and offers those who are interested in "putting over" the American's latest special, "Payment Guaranteed," in a big way, a variety of useful and unique suggestions.

Enclosed with the campaign book for this "Flying A" feature, described by the producers as "a drama of romance and intrigue," is a six-page spread with cuts of the posters, lobby photographs and advertising cuts. The latter are insered in sample ads which are ready for the exhibitor's scissors after adding his name and playing dates.

One-sheets, two three-sheets, six-sheet and twenty-four sheet are all action posters, introducing the principal players in rich sets, indicating the emotion and stress of the plot and a dramatic climax. These posters are reproductions of the stills, actual scenes which appear on the screen, and not fanciful dreams of the artist. There is an abundance of excellent material in the film itself, and both exhibitors and the fans know by this time that an American production always more than lives up to its paper. More than this, there is not a publicity story in the book which cannot be used as it stands for publication in the newspapers, state the producers.

An accomplishment that disproves the theory that first run houses won't book independent pictures

---

First run Houses everywhere are anxious to book independent pictures that can make good and the big stars are beginning to see it more clearly every day. That's why more of the bigger stars are gradually drawing away from machine made pictures into producing independently where their talents and efforts will be rewarded with greater financial returns, and far greater publicity and exploitation. "Hush" is a product of specialists whose hands are not tied by red tape. The same is true of "STRAIGHT-FROM-PARIS," my latest production, an even finer picture than "Hush." I urge every exhibitor to review "STRAIGHT-FROM-PARIS" to satisfy themselves that Equity's independent productions are paving the way for bigger independent

M etro Week" Was Big Success

Reports Show Unprecedented Number of Bookings

ALTHOUGH full returns have not as yet come into the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation in New York regarding the extent of the bookings during Metro week, held this year for the first time and covering the period of February 27 to March 5, there is every indication that the company's original estimate of booking Metro attractions in 7,000 theatres was conservative Exhibitors in every part of the country, from the South Atlantic States to the Pacific Northwest, from Maine to Southern California, took advantage of the opportunity to show in their theatres for this one record-breaking week the screen productions presenting Viola Dana, Bert Lytell, Alice Lake, May Allison, Ina Claire, Buster Keaton, those all-star pictures which feature such prominent players as Gareth Hughes, House Peters and Marjorie Daw, and the Jack London stories reproduced in pictures. Demand, too, for Nazimova Productions, even those of some time ago, was heavy.

No better idea can be gained of the far-reaching extent of Metro bookings than a random selection and listing of the theatres in various parts of the country which showed certain Metro releases.

There follow a few taken from the veritable mountain of reports:

In Nashville, Tenn., Ina Claire in "Polly with a Past" was shown all week at the Strand. At the Vendome the Jack London story, "The Star Rover" and the big melodramatic attraction, "The Fatal Hour," shared the week, and additional to this Viola Dana in "Dangerous to Men" appeared the first half of the week at the Rialto.

Heralded by page after page of advertising and publicity display, following Metro attractions were seen in Atlanta, Ga.: Bert Lytell in "The Misleading Lady," Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Grand, with "The Greater Claim," starring Alice Lake, finishing out the week there. At the Criterion Viola Dana in F. Scott Fitzgerald's "The Offshore Pirate' ran the entire seven days, and "The Great Redeemer," written by H. H. Van Loan, produced under the supervision of Maurice Tourneur and featuring House Peters and Marjorie Daw, did likewise at the Tudor. Three Metro attractions—Alice Lake in "Body and Soul," Monday and Tuesday; William H. Crane and Buster Keaton in Winchell Smith's "The Saphead," Wednesday and Thursday, and May Allison in "Are All Men Alike?" Friday and Saturday—filled the week's bill at the Alamo No. 2. Another Viola Dana picture, "Blackmail," was seen Friday at the Savoy.

The Palm theatre, Rockford, Ill., presented Alice Lake in "The Greater Claim," Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, following with "Extravagance," May Allison's latest release, the next two days, and completing the week with "The Offshore Pirate," starring Viola Dana. In the same city the Family theatre played "The Great Redeemer" Sunday and Monday.

That the smaller communities took as heartily to the idea of Metro week as the better known cities is indicated by the appearance of Metro pictures all week in Junction City, Kan., at the Cozy theatre. With a limited public to draw from it was not possible to sustain long runs, but it was none the less profitable to give patrons the pleasure of Metro Classics. Appearing one day each came, in the order named, Jewel Carmen in "The Silver Lining"; Luther Reed's "Lure of Youth," featuring Gareth Hughes; Viola Dana in "The Offshore Pirate"; then a two-day run of Nazimova in "Billions," with the big melodrama, "Hearts Are Trumps," drawing splendid business the last day of the week. A Buster Keaton comedy, "Convict 13," also appeared on the bill of the Cozy during the week.

Presentations of a similar nature were held at the Reliance, one of the leading theatres of Orangeburg, S. C. Beginning the week with Alice Lake in "The Misfit Wife" and Buster Keaton's two-reeler, "Neighbors," the Reliance followed with one-day runs of "The Hope"; Bert Lytell in "The Misleading Lady," Nazimova in "The Heart of a Child," May Allison in "The Marriage of William Ashe," and the Jack London story of the sea, "The Mutiny of the Elsinore."

Three prominent theatres in Columbia, S. C., observed Metro week. At Lester's Rivoli Monday, Tuesand Wednesday, Ina Claire was seen in "Polly with a Past," and the following three days were given over to "The Offshore Pirate," starring Viola Dana. At the Ideal "The Misleading Lady," with Bert Lytell in the stellar role, played Monday and Tuesday; May Allison in "The Marriage of William Ashe" Wednesday and Thursday, and William H. Crane and Buster Keaton, co-stars in "The Saphead," Friday and Saturday. At the Broadway were Nazimova in "Madame Peacock" Monday and Tuesday, and Taylor Holmes in "Nothing but Lies" the following two days.

Hodkinson Units Compete

"Hodkinson Idea" to Encourage a Spirit of Friendly Competition

ONE of the sub-divisions of the "Hodkinson Ideas" is the building up of a spirit of friendly competition between the various producing units whose pictures are released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Mr. Hodkinson declares that in getting the producers and the directors to strive one against the other great results can be achieved.

Hugo Ballin has given W. W. Hodkinson "East Lynne" as his entrant in the race for the first months of 1921; Irvin V. Willat contributes "Partners of the Tide"; Benj. B. Hampton "A Certain Rich Man"; the Dial Film Company "The Light in the Clearing," directed by T. Hayes Hunter; the Rockett Brothers "Keeping Up With Lizzie." And now J. L. Frothingham has made his entry in the race, "The Other Woman," an Edward Sloman directed picture in which Jerome Patrick, Helen Jerome Eddy, Jane Novak, William Conklin, Kate Price and Master Frankie Lee are the featured players. Mr. Frothingham has declared that he is quite prepared to back his picture for entertainment value, for dramatic value and for box-office appeal against the best product of any other organization.

Rothapfel Books Bruce Scenic for Capitol

With the booking of "Water Trails," a Robert C. Bruce scenic released by Educational at the Capitol theatre for this week at what is said to be the highest price ever paid for a scenic picture on Broadway, there is another chapter written in one of the worth while developments of the motion picture business.

It was S. L. Rothapfel who showed the first picture that Bruce made for Educational. This was "When the Mountains Call," 2,700 feet in length and was used by Mr. Rothapfel in connection with his presentation of "Hypocrites," a bill which awakened Broadway to the possibilities of the motion picture.

Immediately after this Mr. Bruce made a number of single reel pictures for Educational and every one of these was booked by Mr. Rothapfel. Without exception he gave them special musical interpretations, setting a new standard for this class of film, and often giving them unusual presentations.

"Water Trails" was taken in Jamaica and shows the unusual tropical scenery of that country with its jungles, its peaceful rivers and its water falls.

Christie Two-Reeler at Ambassador

"The Reckless Sex," a Christie featuring Earl Rodney and Dorothy Devore, has the distinction of being the first two-reel comedy to be shown at the Ambassador theatre, Los Angeles, the special presentation theatre under the direction of S. Barret McCormick.

New Orleans Welcomes Ruth Roland

RUTH ROLAND, the Pathe serial star, stopped off at New Orleans, La., while on her way to the Coast, following a brief vacation in the East. The star was accorded an enthusiastic reception in the old Gulf city. In one afternoon and evening Miss Roland appeared at twelve of the leading picture theatres during the performance—Liberty, Queen, Escorial, Harlequin, Capitol, Variety, Carrolton, Washington, Napoleon, Strand, Ivy and Folly.

Her arrival at the Pathe headquarters was the scene of her first reception. She was later driven to the Saenger Amusement Company's headquarters where the Saenger employees and out-of-town exhibitors gave her a hearty greeting. She was photographed with President Julian Saenger and Vice-President Gueringer as contracts for her Pathe serial, "The Avenging Arrow," were signed. This contract, according to Pathe, is the first contract closed by Saenger for the use of chapter-picture over its entire circuit. Miss Roland was given an especially enthusiastic reception at the Strand theatre. Later she visited the Charity Hospital to distribute flowers to the sick children there. The incidents of her visit to the city were featured liberally in the local press.

Pioneer Now Releasing "The Mystery Mind"

Pioneer Film Corporation announces that its new serial, "The Mystery Mind," starring J. Robert Pauline, is now being distributed through its exchanges throughout the United States and Canada. Pioneer officials are of the opinion that a new record for serial bookings will be established with this chapter-picture. The Pioneer statement also informs of an "elaborate exploitation campaign," now under way for this production. One of the features of this campaign is reported to be the publication of the book version of the story which was written by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey.

Report Wide Bookings for "The Devil"

Associated Exhibitors, distributors of "The Devil," report exhibitor tendencies in widely separated parts of the country to arrange their bookings in a manner to provide for unlimited engagements for the George Arlisss feature. Following a recent trade showing at the Ziegfeld Theatre, Chicago, Barbee's Loop closed for a two weeks first run, and the key cities of Rock Island, Moline and Davenport were booked.

Final Spurt in "Brunet Month"

Pathe Sees Big Finish in Its Selling Competition

UNLIKE previous Pathe contests, the competing branch managers and their aides are not holding off for a grandstand finish, but have been flooding the home office with contracts that added a perceptible punch to "Brunet Month" during the third week of the competition.

There apparently is an earnest desire on the part of the various teams, to get their decks cleared for the last week of the contest, which all the Pathe home office officials expect to see record an unprecedented volume of business in every department.

Inasmuch as there are twenty-seven actual business days in March every branch manager will have an usual opportunity for recording a total of business he has never before attained in a single month. The spurt during the third week was so marked, as to make it safe to say that fully seventy per cent at least of the thirty-two Pathe branch offices throughout the country, will better their best previous performances in any four week period.

March marks the fourth anniversary of Paul Brunet as head of the great distributing organization—three as vice president and general manager, the last as president of Pathe Exchange, Inc. These have been years marked by a steady march forward. Never once has the organization taken a backward step. Each year has seen a big increase in the volume of Pathe's business, under the guidance of Mr. Brunet.

Even in these times, which are considered adverse in many quarters but which are optimistically regarded by the entire Pathe organization the progress of the Pathe rooster remains unimpeded.

A scene from "What Women Will Do," the Edward Jose production, scheduled for release by Pathe. The picture was made under the auspices of Associated Exhibitors

This is made emphatically apparent by the returns so far recorded this year, particularly during the current month, which has been set aside as "Brunet Month," in tribute to the Pathe president. It will be even more apparent when the full returns for March are registered, states Pathe.

It would hardly be policy, Pathe announces, to state the position of the leaders at this stage of the competition—in fact, it would be virtually impossible to do so, so rapidly have contracts been pouring into the home office. Yet this much is a certainty—two winners of the last Pathe contest are in a position to be upset this month, not because they have failed to show the progress that marked their efforts in the past, but because other branches are making even greater advances in their collections and new business. The last week may see the four winners in the various divisions last November, repeat their triumph. But at this point, it seems altogether improbable.

It is most interesting to note the returns being made by the Associated Exhibitors sales force, who are selling the entire Pathe list of features in all towns over 1,500. John E. Storey, sales manager of the Associated, indicates that he will have a report to make on feature sales at the end of March, that will be startling for its indication of general prosperity among exhibitors and the acknowledged merit of the Pathe and Associated feature product.

Plan Improved Booking System

Universal Auditors in Important Conference in Chicago

UNIVERSAL'S traveling auditors, in an important conference recently held in the Universal exchange in Chicago, perfected many plans to increase the efficiency of the Universal booking system and to give better service to the exhibitor, it is announced at the Universal home office.

The conference was held under the supervision of J. B. Ohrt, comptroller for Universal, and was attended by W. K. Lendon, auditor for the Eastern district of the United States, G. B. Howe of the Middle Western district, C. H. Griffith of the Far West, N. Shiren of the Northwestern district, and H. Henigson, traveling auditor for Universal's foreign branches. It lasted four days.

The booking system being developed by Universal is said to enable the booker in each exchange to advance his notification of playdate from three to six weeks, thus enabling all exhibitors to know, far in advance, just when they will play Universal pictures. Universal officials believe this will result in greater exploitation of Universal features.

Another of the important results of the new booking system as developed in the auditors' conference, is the weight given by Universal to personal relationship between the booker and the exhibitor. The revised booking system, it is asserted, gives each booker ample opportunity to discuss individual bookings with exhibitor patrons. This is necessary in many cases if complete satisfaction is to be given to the exhibitor, and complete accord between him and the film company to be established, it is the opinion of Universal exchange heads.

So efficacious is the new Universal booking system alleged to be, that it advanced billings and programs in one office from three days to three weeks within a few days, it is recounted.

Another important matter tackled by the traveling auditors, was the elimination of flickering in pictures caused by perforated numbers in the film. It was decided to do away with perforated numbers in Universal films. Instead, embossing machines, which impress numbers not apparent in projection, are being tentatively installed in the larger Universal exchanges. If they prove successful, the entire Universal exchange organization will be equipped with them, it is promised.

Steps also were taken at the conference of auditors, to perfect the keeping of a physical inventory of all film and film property in the Universal offices. Universal claims to have arrived at so complete an inventory that the exact whereabouts of every foot of film is on record. This, it is explained, enables the distributing department to supply sudden orders for rare prints, as well as to meet shifting changes in the wholesale booking of current favorites.

Pathe News Claims "Scoop"

IN every way, it is claimed, the most enterprising and cleanest picture, screen, and newspaper "beat" of recent record was scored by Pathe News with its exclusive pictures showing the allied advance into Germany. Within nine days of the entrance of the troops into Dusseldorf, the Pathe News negatives were landed in New York from the Olympic, having reached the Atlantic liner at Liverpool a bare hour before her sailing by fast train from London after two swift airplane flights. Not only were they in ample time for the regular Saturday News Reel at the New York theatres, but for reproduction in leading New York daily newspapers on Saturday morning, March 19.

Picture patrons who saw these views Saturday evening in Pathe News No. 23, had been prepared for the treat by sections of the same film reproduced in their morning papers. These views were displayed in William Randolph Hearst's American, in the World and in the Illustrated Daily News. No newspapers had pictures of the allied occupation of Germany from any other source.

Preparedness, careful and intelligent planning by Editor Emanuel Cohen, sent the programme through without a hitch. Staff Cameraman George Ercole had received his orders at Paris and was waiting and ready at Dusseldorf two days before the troops of occupation arrived on March 8, Tuesday. Ercole's cameras got busy and "ground" efficiently while a swift airplane waited ready to take the air.

Metro Special Selling Out

New Yorkers Crowd Lyric Daily to See Metro's "Four Horsemen"

CONFIRMATION of the popularity with the New York theatre-going public of Metro's mammoth picturization of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is contained in the heavy advance seat sale at the Lyric theatre, where Rex Ingram's production is being shown, and by the fact that for the past several nightly performances the house has been sold out long before the curtain rose and standing room only was obtainable at the box office.

The explanation of the picture's unusual and gripping appeal to the average individual can only be predicated on the score of its great emotional sweep that finds its reaction continually in outbursts of applause that punctuate the entire showing. Although theatre audiences vary greatly in their response to the stimuli of entertainment, the places in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" where applause and frequently cheers have been called forth, has been demonstrated night after night to be ever the same.

This appeal has been found reflected in the box office at the Lyric theatre. So heavy an advance sale of seats has been registered, as to render problematical just how far into the future the time will be before another production is housed within the theatre. Seats for all performances are completely exhausted, and night after night finds many people occupying standing room back of the orchestra. More notable than this, however, is the complete selling out of the top gallery, which in recent years became such a white elephant to theatre owners that many have been designed without them.

R-C Release Wins Praise

Frederick's Acting and Setting of Picture Receive Favorable Comment

IN a statement issued during the week from the Robertson-Cole home office, excerpts from the opinions rendered by the trade-press reviewers in connection with its new release, "The Mistress of Shenstone," are submitted. The production stars Pauline Frederick and is adapted from Florence L. Barclay's novel of the same title.

The charm of the romance and backgrounds of the picture appeals particularly to Laurence Reid, writing in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. He says that the title role is ideal for her and "the backgrounds of cliff and ocean and country estates provide a perfect atmosphere. The offering depends mostly on its romantic conflict. And this romance is so deftly shaded, so finely suggested by the star and Roy Stewart that the picture is lifted above the average."

The Moving Picture World is quoted as follows: "Miss Frederick's acting is intensely gripping and she has been provided with a role well suited to her strong emotional talents. At all times she appears to advantage. Opposite Miss Frederick plays Roy Stewart, who brings force and dramatic action to the role. He is the mainspring to Lady Myra's heart throbs. Others in the picture are well cast. The scenes, especially the exteriors, are up to the usual Robertson-Cole standards."

The Exhibitors' Trade Review is quoted as follows: "A picture that boasts such a star and such a well-balanced supporting cast could hardly fail to prove worth while seeing. 'The Mistress of Shenstone' has been so well produced and acted so cleverly that it makes a most satisfactory feature motion picture. The story holds the interest, the acting is exceptionally good, and the direction, production, etc., leaves little to be desired. The feature should meet with considerable success and seems bound to please the many admirers of Pauline Frederick."

Goldwyn Week in Buffalo

Goldwyn Headquarters Reports a Big Response on Part of Exhibs

BOOKINGS are pouring in from theatres, large and small, for the Goldwyn Week announced in the Buffalo territory, beginning April 10th, declares a statement received from the Goldwyn home office. Under the direction of Resident Manager George A. Hickey, the sales force at the Buffalo office is making a record in the number of solid weeks of Goldwyn Pictures, it is declared, including the fourth year product and some of the earlier productions that exhibitors missed when they were first released.

Estimating from the list of bookings reported three weeks in advance of showing, and the many theatres with which negotiations are now being carried on, there will be upwards of 100 houses booked for solid weeks of Goldwyn pictures before April 10, declares the Goldwyn statement.

The drive in the Buffalo territory has been given great impetus by the success of the early releases in Goldwyn's fourth year group. "Earthbound," "Madame X," "The Branding Iron," "The North Wind's Malice" and other productions that have been on the market for the past few months, have proven strong box-office attractions with up-state audiences. Some of these productions went so well at the first showing that they have been booked for return engagements to divide the week with other Goldwyn releases.

Many of the exhibitors who have signed for the full week are preparing to launch special advertising campaigns in local papers, making the announcement of a full week of Goldwyn pictures the feature of their appeal to the public. Also, a number of exhibitors are taking this occasion to launch a spring opening with houses freshened up after the winter season and a gala program throughout.

April 3rd Releases Are Announced by Pathe

Pathe has scheduled the following releases for April 3rd: "A Life in Jeopardy," the fourth episode of "The Avenging Arrow," starring Ruth Roland; "The Danger Ledge," the eleventh chapter of the serial, "Double Adventure," starring Charles Hutchison; "The Love Lesson," a new Rolin comedy, featuring Eddie Boland; and Pathe Review No. 97, in which Hy Mayer's Travelaugh, "Such is Life in New York 'Uptown'" is featured.

New Century Comedy for Early Release

"THE KID'S PAL," is approaching completion at the Hollywood plant of the Century Film Corporation, it is announced at the New York office of that company. The two-reeler stars Brownie, called the Wonder Dog of the Screen.

Julius Stern, president of the Century company, who arrived in Los Angeles several days ago from New York, has wired to the Century offices in the East that production at the Century plant has been increased to include six comedy units, including one featuring Harry Sweet, one featuring Brownie, two units working with the Century lions, one featuring the Century bathing girls and one other.

Rothacker Co. Finishes Welfare Picture

The Rothacker Industrial Division has just completed the production of a two-reeler, called "The Oasis," for the Chicago Hebrew Institute. Harry Brown directed. The picture describes how the Institute is proving an oasis for little wayfarers on the desert wastes of life, and also shows what is being done for the grown-ups. It is described as a dramatic piece "full of human interest." "The Oasis" will be given a wide non-theatrical circulation in Chicago. The Institute will loan the picture to organizations in other cities where it can be used for the promotion of welfare work.

British Rights Sold

David Mundell, of Metro Villa, Prestwich, Scotland, has purchased the rights for the United Kingdom on the seven two reel Midget Comedies and the two reel special "Cowboy Jazz," from the S. and E. Enterprises, of New York.

"Black Beauty" A Self-Seller

Vitagraph Film Wins Unusual Record in One Month

"BLACK BEAUTY," Vitagraph's special production based on the story by Anna Sewell, is proving a "self-seller," it is claimed, and although it is scarcely a month since it had its initial public performance, every key center over the length and breadth of the United States and Canada, with only four exceptions, has booked the special for early showings. Day and date bookings prevail in many large cities, New York, Boston and Cleveland showing the largest number of these scheduled for early runs. The claim is made by Vitagraph that this one month's sales result sets a record for the entire industry, and one that will be hard to equal.

In the case of more than two-thirds of the "Black Beauty" bookings, the Vitagraph exchanges have not sold the picture to exhibitors in their territory but the exhibitors have come in to the branch offices and bought it. It is stated that only in this way could the present total of bookings have been run up in the stated length of time, as the Vitagraph organization could not possibly have achieved such results with its present sales staff if it had not been met more than halfway by exhibitors in search of the picture.

All centers closed for "Black Beauty" are pinions of circulation for zones of varying sizes, and the demand for these follow-up towns in the circulation zones is said to be tremendous. In many cases the big city bookings are for two weeks or more, and a week's booking is more the rule than the exception. The demand for "Black Beauty" naturally has taxed Vitagraph's unusually large laboratories at the Brooklyn studios, and the force there has been working overtime to turn out the necessary prints.

Practically every exhibitor who has played "Black Beauty" is authority for the statement that it has attracted an entirely new clientele to their theatres; that in addition to their regular patrons, upon whom they can bank for any good picture, they are getting the additional potential patrons who have previously not been picture-goers.

Earle Williams in his forthcoming Vitagraph production, "The Silver Car." Kathryn Adams is his leading woman

During the engagement of "Black Beauty" at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre the management reported that in many cases Brooklyn school teachers brought entire classes of children to the showings, particularly during the quiet hours between the regular matinee and the first evening performances. Manager J. F. Clancey of the Capitol theatre, Hartford, stated that the picture smashed the attendance record of his theatre, and Manager Edwards of the Palace at New Haven also set new house records by packing in audiences of children at the matinees and playing to capacity adult audiences at night.

The humane societies in many cities have put their hearty efforts behind "Black Beauty" on account of its theme, and in Newark, Denver, Winnipeg and several other large cities, have canvassed their entire membership. They have been a factor in building up the record matinee audiences which exhibitors have never failed to report on this picture. In eleven cities women's clubs have made arrangements with theatres whereby special morning matinees at very special prices have been put on for children who could not possibly attend the regular matinees at the regular prices. Vitagraph has received a sheaf of commendatory letters forwarded from its various branch offices. These letters usually emanate from humane societies and from schools, although in a fair proportion of cases from sources not connected with either. The tenor of all the letters is that "Black Beauty" is a credit to the motion picture industry.

Bookings covering indefinite runs of "Black Beauty" in three different exchange centers of Vitagraph will be closed by Wednesday of the coming week. Two of these have been verbally closed, and an actual play-date has been settled upon for one—at the Lyceum theatre, Minneapolis, commencing Easter Sunday. Seattle will also be an indefinite run city.

"The First Born" Opens in Baltimore, Md.

Recently "The First Born," the Robertson-Cole release opened in Baltimore. The Sun of that city said: "Sessue Hayakawa is appearing this week at the New Theatre is a highly emotional, romantic and imaginative story of a youthful love. . . Hayakawa does a proficient stretch of acting."

Norman Clark, writing in the Baltimore News, said: "Sessue Hayakawa, as I have pointed out before, is an excellent screen actor. There is something about this little man from Japan which is impressive. He is short, slender, boyish-looking—but he has more dignity, more poise, more force than any of the six foot gentry of the cinema which I have seen. There is an Oriental charm about him which even the silent screen transports."

Rex Ingram Leaves to Start New Picture

After a six weeks' stay in New York, during which plans were outlined for producing another super-special Rex Ingram production for Metro Pictures Corporation to follow "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," now being shown at the Lyric theatre, Mr. Ingram is preparing to return to the Hollywood (Cal.) studios.

According to present arrangements, work on the new production, which will be a picture of the same magnitude as "The Four Horsemen," will start immediately following Mr. Ingram's arrival at the West Coast. In this new Rex Ingram production this director will supervise the continuity arrangement, casting and art settings, as it is planned to give the super-special a most elaborate presentation.

Miss Alice Terry, who has the leading feminine role in "The Four Horsemen," will be the heroine in the new super picture, Mr. Ingram announced, while John Seitz will do the camera work. Selection of the remaining principals in the cast will be made following Mr. Ingram's return to the West Coast.

"Without Limit" Makes New York Debut

"Without Limit," a Metro release of the George D. Baker production, for S-L Pictures of Calvin Johnston's story "Temple Dusk," as published in The Saturday Evening Post, will make its Broadway debut at the Capitol theatre the week commencing March 20.

The tremendous hit scored by this story in Boston, Cleveland, Philadelphia and other cities said to have convinced the Capitol theatre management that it would prove just as strong a popular favorite to the thousands of its patrons.

West Awaits Premiere of "Four Horsemen"

AWARE of the enthusiasm with which "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" was received in New York at its Lyric theatre premiere March 6, the motion picture colony in Los Angeles is awaiting with manifest impatience the opportunity to view on the screen this Rex Ingram production.

The announcement of the western premiere of the picture is therefore of special interest. It will take place at the new Mission theatre, Los Angeles, within a fortnight. The contract under which the Mission obtained the big production for an indefinite run was signed a few days ago by Harry David, manager of the house; Harry Lustig, Metro's West Coast district manager, and Ben F. Rosenberg, Metro's Los Angeles exchange manager.

Chester's Huge Studio on Coast Soon Ready

C. L. Chester's big studio, which stretches the 270 feet between Gower and Beachwood streets and contains the second largest stage in Hollywood, is said to be the most modern and most complete in the Western film metropolis. It is completed except for the finishing touches, and work will start on production shortly after the first of April.

In many ways the studio is setting the pace for film structures. The great stage, 100 by 200 feet, is unobstructed throughout its length —not one post blocks the way. Massive reinforced wooden trusses span the hundred foot space from wall to wall supporting the roof.

Some 51,000 feet of lumber is comprised in the stage floor, which is composed of 2-inch tongue and groove material, specially selected. Much careful planning went into the efficient arranging of the various units of the building. The entire stage is enclosed over all.

Mayer Finishes Work on New Production

Louis B. Mayer announces that "The Invisible Fear," starring Anita Stewart, has been completed under the direction of Edwin Carewe. This is the star's second picture since her return from New York last fall. The first, "Playthings of Destiny," also directed by Mr. Carewe, has been cut and titled under the latter's supervision, and it is expected that the negative will shortly be shipped to the Rothacker plant to be printed.

First National is now about to launch a Mayer release that critics have declared to be a "dramatic triumph without a peer." This is "Sowing the Wind," a picture expected to surpass the success of the original stage play by Sydney Grundy. It was directed by John M. Stahl, and stars Anita Stewart.

Hodkinson Denies Sale of "Charge It"

Following the publication of a story to the effect that Clara Kimball Young would be seen in a picturization of Irving Bacheller's story, "Charge It," the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has issued a statement in which it is pointed out that the "rights to all Irving Bacheller's books are controlled by W. W. Hodkinson." The statement further adds that the Hodkinson organization "flat-footedly deny that the rights to 'Charge It' have been disposed of."

A letter from D. L. Chambers, secretary of the Bobbs-Merrill Company, publishers, is quoted by W. W. Hodkinson as follows:

"Confirming our statement over the telephone we wish to say that we have made no arrangement with Clara Kimball Young for 'Charge It' or any other book by Irving Bacheller."

Lois Weber Picture Is "Too Wise Wives"

Paramount announces that "Too Wise Wives" is the title chosen for Lois Weber's fourth production for Paramount to be released at an early date.

The cast of "Too Wise Wives" includes Claire Windsor, Louis Calhern, Mona Lisa and Phillips Smalley. In this production Miss Weber displays many rare works of art which formerly rested in the Austrian State Museum of Art in Vienna, but which recently found their way to Italy and thence to America, following the sale of State masterpieces by the Austrian Government.

Hodkinson to Release "Rip Van Winkle"

W. W. Hodkinson announces that a screen version of Rip Van Winkle is to be included in the Hodkinson schedule of releases. The picture, it is stated, will follow closely "Joe" Jefferson's famous stage version, and in the leading role will be seen Thomas Jefferson, son of the renowned actor who created the original role on the stage. The direction is in the hands of Ward Lascelle. The production is now under way on the West Coast.

"Tale of Two Worlds" Favorably Received

One of the best audience pictures that has been shown at the Capitol theatre, New York, in a number of months, is the common verdict on the Goldwyn production of Bouverneur Morris' original story of San Francisco's Chinatown, "A Tale of Two Worlds," after it had been played to crowded houses for a week.

In reviewing the production the New York Sun said: "There's still plenty of vitality left in the movies, in spite of all the films which have been turned out like so many sausages, when they can produce such a picture as "A Tale of Two Worlds," which is the first story that Gouverneur Morris has planted on the screen for Goldwyn without first clapping it into print."

The Evening Journal is equally enthusiastic: "Here is one of the type of pictures one waits and waits for—a powerful story, told with simplicity, intelligence and a cast of uniform excellence, with photography of fine beauty."

Realart Releases Seen in Loew Theatre

When Loew's New York theatre announced the productions to be shown there during the week of March 21, two of the seven days were devoted to Realart pictures.

Tuesday's program included Justine Johnstone in her second picture for Realart, "The Plaything of Broadway," as the feature, while on Wednesday the Loew program carried "Out of the Chorus," with Alice Brady as the principal attraction.

The Loew circuit is a Realart Star Franchise holder.

Symphony Offices to Aid Music Program

The Symphony Amusement Offices of Chicago, have completed arrangements for supplying high-class entertainers to motion picture theatres and announces that it is prepared to book vocal soloists, duos, trios, quartettes, sextettes, lady singing orchestras, violin soloists, pianists, violin, harp, cello, string quartettes, accordionists and also furnish complete combinations for "Jazz Nites."

Young Starts Kipling Picture for Pathe

With sets all built from designs furnished by Rudyard Kipling in advance of his arrival, Director James Young last week started shooting the first scenes of "Without Benefit of Clergy" at the Brunton studios, Los Angeles. Randolph Lewis, the Pathe technical expert who worked with Kipling in England on the continuity, has so informed Paul Brunet of Pathe, who is personally deeply concerned with the filming of the initial Kipling attraction. Director Young's enthusiasm will have much to do with the early completion of the picture. Every detail will receive minute consideration.

For the leading female role of Ameera, fifteen of the most capable young picture actresses who had won favor with American audiences were in rivalry with Virginia Faire, the "Fame and Fortune" prize winner of three years ago, whose engagement has been announced. The part of John Holden, the young British engineer hero of the famous Kipling story, has not yet been filled.

Have you ever ?

Have you ever considered that the comedy may be a bigger asset to your program than the feature?

Have you ever thought that quality should be the true test of a feature and not length?

Have you ever had a feature "go dead" on your audience, and then seen the day saved by a Harold Lloyd comedy which made your patrons go into paroxysms of merriment?

Have you ever realized that after all the value to you of a picture comes right down to this, its entertainment value?

Consider the Harold Lloyd comedies from all these angles; read the glowing praise of the newspaper critics; read the reviews in the trade papers; and better still sit in your own house while your operator is showing one on the screen; just listen to the waves of laughter, the howls of delight; and then book all the Lloyds and thank Heaven you've got the chance!

Every Lloyd comedy should be the true feature of your program

Live Notes from the Studios

CONDUCTED BY LILLIAN R. GALE

ABOUT PLAYERS

Protesting against any accusation hat he has foresaken the screen, eslie Austen shows signs of be- oming a business man. While his ommendable work in the last pic- ire in which he played remains ked in the minds of those who ad- ire his ability as a screen actor, et that he is now playing opposite Madge Kennedy in "Cornered," pon the legitimate stage, and gets early mornings to attend to business interests" suggests that has temporarily set aside screen tivities.

The change came about in a ory-like way. With a number of riends, he was indulging in the nsummation of a cigarette. The d, which he wished to discard, re- ised to leave the holder. "Why oesn't some one invent a cigarette older that will eject the discard?" ked Austen. "Why don't you vent one?" was the encouraging sponse. And Austen, who is used playing heroes who do and dare ated: "I will"—meaning that he ould invent such a contrivance. he result was that he spent his are time in efforts, which brought uitful results, and one night he ppeared upon the stage with the trick" holder. The ease with hich it "ousted" the refused end, tracted attention of his audiences, he had occasion to use the inven- on on the stage. Finally he, started ceiving notes in strange handwrit- gs. They were requests for dup- cates of his invention, the inquiry to where to purchase them, etc. hereafter, a company was formed, d in addition to the ingenuity in- ested by the actor, he invested his reen and stage earned dollars, hich brought about the "Hadon older" Company, makers of the nvenient and ornamental cigar- te holder, invented by an actor ho was last seen in the screen ver- on of "Cousin Kate," opposite lice Joyce and directed by Mrs. idney Drew.

Following a protracted absence om New York, Tom Carrigan is gain among those present—Tom f stage and screen fame, who ored an individual success in the reen version of "Checkers" and ho is known to every screen fan erywhere. The reason for the tended absence dates back to a ntract signed by Mr. Carrigan ith the Broadwell Productions, arring the versatile actor in a se- es of fifteen two-reel "Nick Car- r" stories. It has not yet been nounced whether Mr. Carrigan ill remain an actor-detective, or cept one of the attractive offers nding, for his services.

Mary Anderson, recently engaged for the Morosco production, "The Half Breed"

James W. Morrison has a good word to say for coast activities. He was in or about Hollywood for twenty-five weeks, twenty-four of which he worked, in four different pictures. Among these was one in which he scored an individual success, "Black Beauty," "Love Without Question," "When We Were Twenty-One" and "Sowing the Wind" rank also among Mr. Morrison's recent successes.

Having recently concluded his work opposite Corinne Griffith in "What's Your Reputation Worth," Percy Marmont announces his engagement by Whitman Bennett for his next production. As yet unnamed, the picture is based on a well-knwon story and the cast is truly all-star, as evidenced by Marmont's engagement. Other productions in which this eminent leading man has recently appeared include "The Branded Woman," opposite Norma Talmadge, and "Dead Men Tell No Tales."

One of the principal players in Mary Pickford's "Through the Back Door," scheduled for United Artists release in early spring, is John Harron, brother of the late Robert Harron, whose memory will live indefinitely in the film world.

Young John is playing the part of Billy Boy, around which role is built the love interest of the story. There is said to be a striking resemblance between Johnnie Harron and his late popular brother, his work being stamped with that same appealing sympathy which was always the outstanding feature of Bobbie's work. The young brother is but eighteen, beginning his career as a photoplayer in his knee trouser days at the Griffith studio in Hollywood.

Vera Gordon was in Kansas City recently on three counts. The Liberty theatre featured her in "The North Wind's Malice," the Rex Beach-Goldwyn picture made by her shortly after "Humoresque;" the Apollo theatre had the first local showing of "The Greatest Love," Vera Gordon's first stellar vehicle and she appeared in person at the Orpheum theatre in "Lullaby," the sketch in which she is headlining on the Keith Circuit. In addition, several smaller local houses also took advantage of her presence in Kansas City to play return dates on "Humoresque," the picture which brought Vera Gordon into film celebrity.

Reginald Denny is one who enjoys saving a situation. He has done so often in screen plays, but longed to exercise it in real life. Opportunity offered. John S. Robertson was about to go "hunting" in the midst of a picture—a thing that is not done in the best directorial circles. Mr. Robertson had what he considered a legitimate excuse. He needed a leading man, a certain kind, one with ability for a part opposite Elsie Ferguson in "Footlights." He had failed in his quest, until Mr. Denny saved disaster, and instead of going "hunting" in the midst of production, he assigned Mr. Denny to the part to their mutual satisfaction.

Her work opposite Bert Lytell in "The Man Who," was of such high merit that the Metro executives have engaged Virginia Valli to play opposite the same star in at least his next two productions. Accordingly, Miss Valli leaves for the West this week, where the next two Bert Lytell pictures will be filmed, and where her stay will extend for at least three months.

Originally from Chicago, where she rose to be a leading woman at Essanay, Virginia Valli has since been seen in prominent roles in a number of productions made in the East. Most recently she has been seen in "The Plunger" opposite George Walsh, and "The Silver Lining" with Jewel Carmen. Her latest pictures, not yet released, include "The Better Way," with Hope Hampton and "Sentimental Tommy," in addition to "The Man Who."

In her engagement by Metro to play opposite Bert Lytell for at least three consecutive productions, Miss Valli is setting an enviable record with this popular star.

Jack Coogan, Sr., father of that other noted Coogan—little Jackie, "The Kid" in Chaplin's picture of that title—has been absorbed by the Fox forces in California. They do say that Coogan junior spends all his spare time "coaching" his parent.

Tom Carrigan, a ready-made "Nick Carter," who recently compppleted the 15th two-reel "detective film" for Broadwell productions

Gladys Valerie, who has been playing leading parts in a number of this season's screen successes, seems to have gained great popularity among the Japanese. This fact is evinced not only by the numbers of "fan" letters she receives from the kingdom of Nippon, but furthermore, one of their prominent motion picture publications, entitled, "Kinema Fun," has been dedicated to her, and the editor of another magazine called Movie Light, has requested Miss Valerie's photograph to adorn the cover of his paper.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

Production of super-features for Cosmopolitan productions is under full swing at the International. The big Harlem studio presents a scene of great activity with two pictures under way, and a third being made at the Metro studios.

Under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, Marion Davis is engaged in the making of "Enchantment." Adapted from the Cosmopolitan Magazine story "Manhandling Ethel" "Enchantment" presents Miss Davies in the role of a pampered society favorite, whose haughtiness is broken by her love and jealousy of a popular Shakespearean actor. Playing opposite Miss Davies is Forrest Stanley. Arthur Rankin has a prominent role, and other members of the cast are: Edith Shayne, Tom Lewis, Gilbert Rooney, Tom Brown and Emmet Foy. The scenic effects are all designed by Joseph Urban, and spell the last word in luxuriousness.

Tom Terriss, recently added to International personnel is well into the work of shooting "Boomerang Bill" with Lionel Barrymore in the title role. Jack Boyle, author of the "Boston Blackie" stories, is responsible for the original story. Besides Mr. Barrymore, those chosen for parts in the picture are, Marguerite Marsh, Frank Shannon, Matthew Betts, William Parks, Leslie King, Miriam Battista and Cora Williams.

Frances Marion is directing "Just Around the Corner" at the Metro studio. Begun under the title of "The Superman," this production is a consolidation by Miss Marion of several of Fannie Hurst's best stories. In her dual role of director and scenario writer, Miss Marion is nearing the completion of "Just Around the Corner," the cast of which comprises Sigrid Holmquist, Lewis Sargent, Margaret Sedden, Edward Phillips, Peggy Parr, Madame Rose Rosonova, Fred Thomson and William Nally.

Frank Borzage, who directed "Humoresque" and "Get Rich-Quick-Wallingford" for Cosmopolitan productions, has begun "shooting" on "Back Pay," the story of a country school teacher, who tired of the "deadliness" of a small town, goes to New York, and is caught in the whirl of a fast set of the Metropolis.

Twenty years ago, when Herbert Brenon was a call-boy, he went from dressing room to dressing room to let the players know when the act was on. Charles Richman was playing the lead in "The Great Ruby." Night after night Brenon would watch Richman from the wings, with hopes and ambitions.

Recently Mr. Brenon engaged Mr. Richman for the film version of Channing Pollock's play, "The Sign on the Door," which stars Norma Talmadge under the direction of Herbert Brenon, and while in the meantime, the handsome actor has added more and more to his laurels, and has made an enviable reputation for himself as an actor on both stage and screen, yet the call-boy has also come into his own but now calls via the directorial megaphone. A twentieth century edition of Grimm's Fairy Hales would have many a setting under the Cooper Hewitts.

Reid in Interesting Roles

Completes "Watch My Speed"; His Next Story by College President

OFFICIALS of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are of the opinion that the new Wallace Reid starring vehicle, "Watch My Speed," which was recently completed at the Hollywood studios, will surpass from the angle of the box-office anything that Reid has done up-to-date. The picture is based on a story by Byron Morgan, who is the author of "What's Your Hurry," "Roaring Road," and "Excuse My Dust."

"Watch My Speed," unlike the other stories written for Wallace Reid by Mr. Morgan, is an original, written in the Lasky studio direct for the screen. Although "Watch My Speed" is an automobile picture, it is said to be entirely different from anything Reid has yet starred in, and is full of thrilling situations and the type of clean, wholesome comedy which Mr. Morgan puts in all his stories.

The next production that Mr. Reid will undertake is to be titled "Tall Timbers." Work is to be started on this new picture in the near future at Hollywood. Unusual interest attaches to Reid's coming production because it is said to be the first photoplay to be written by a college president who resigned his educational position in order to write for the screen. James A. B. Scherer surprised the educational world recently when he abandoned the presidency of California Institute of Technology to join the writing staff of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Officials of the organization are highly enthusiastic over Dr. Scherer's story and are firm in their belief that it reaches a high-water mark in the new advanced epoch of motion pictures. "Tall Timbers" will be screened under the direction of Frank Urson, and many of the exterior scenes will be taken in the towering redwood forests of California.

Plan Big Residential House

Gore Bros., Ramish and Lesser to Build on Western Ave., Los Angeles

GORE BROS., Ramish and Sol Lesser, of Los Angeles, have just concluded negotiations with the Lilly Fletcher Co., large real estate holders of Western Avenue properties, for the erection of one of the handsomest houses in America on the property now open on Western Avenue between 3rd and 4th streets, on a site covering 110 x 150 square feet.

The theatre to be built on this property is to be the first in Los Angeles, which located in one of the fastest growing residential districts, is to be a cinema house conforming in every detail to the desires of residents of that district. It is the announced plan of the theatre owners to so construct this new house that its commodities may eclipse anything heretofore attempted in the building of residential picture theatres. The style of architecture is to be strictly modern, and plans are already drawn up by L. A. Smith, local architect, which will allow for the immediate beginning of construction.

Without in any way detracting from the importance of their downtown first run houses, Gore, Ramish & Lesser believe that this new theatre on Western Avenue will be the forerunner of a new era in the selection of theatre locations in Los Angeles. Over 500 loge chairs, similar in style and construction to the Kinema theatre loges, are to be one of the features of the new house. A magnificent orchestral organ has been provided for, and arrangements are being made to present feature pictures with the aid of a symphonic orchestra. The theatre building is to be augmented with a row of offices above. The moneys involved in the deal are in the neighborhood of $250,000, it is declared.

the Fox spectacle built on Mark Twain's famous satire "A Connecticut Yankee," traveled as fast as the best first-class train could speed, from Hollywood, California, to New York, to be present at the premier.

The Motion Picture Directors Association, New York Lodge, shows increasing signs of life by weekly meetings, instead of the first and third Tuesdays of the month, all because at the Hotel Astor on April 2nd, their Third Annual Ball will take place, and it has taken the cooperation and assistance of the entire membership to make the affair up to and surpassing the usual standard. There are a goodly number of new members, also, who have been put into the harness, and while it will be difficult to improve previous year's social functions, every man has proven his loyalty, by regular attendance, and April 2nd looks like a big night.

The Building Trades Council of Ottawa, Ontario, placed the new Capitol theatre, which is in course of erection at the Canadian capital, on the unfair list on March 11 because of a dispute with Montreal, which is building the big theatre. This firm engaged laborers at 45 cents per hour and carpenters at 65 cents per hour, it is claimed, these rates being considerably under the local agreement between unions and contractors. The Atlas company announced, however, that it was paying the workmen five cents per hour more than the Montreal scale, and that, being a Montreal company, it knew nothing of the Ottawa agreement. The company has threatened to stop work entirely unless the men are willing to accept the pay offered.

Following the meeting of the Building Trades Council on March 11, the announcement was made that the theatre would be unable to engage union stage hands, musicians and projectionists when it is completed unless the contractors arrange to sign an agreement with the Ottawa building trades locals. No work was done on the theatre all winter, but operations were resumed early in March. The hitch came when the contracting company offered wages different, it is claimed, to the current rates in Ottawa. The Capitol theatre is scheduled to open next September and is to be operated under the direction of the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation.

The Coleman Theatre Equipment Company, Toronto, has been merged with the Nitro Electric Company in a new organization which has been incorporated as the Electric and Theatre Equipment, Ltd., with headquarters and showrooms at 12 Queen Street East, Toronto.

The Canadian Government has been looking for a "film editor" to have charge of the exhibits and publicity bureau of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, in succession to Raymond S. Peck, a former exchange manager of Toronto and Montreal. Salary to start is $2,400 per year and the work consists of supervising the activities of industrial and scenic cameramen, edit the films and select future subjects. The personal qualifications include a university education or its equivalent, two years' experience in film editing, experience in newspaper publicity work, knowledge of industrial processes and ability to prepare scenic scenarios. Applications will be received by William Foran, Ottawa, up to April 15, 1921.

Several prominent moving picture stars have been visiting Canada for various reasons. Vancouver, B. C., was given a special treat on March 12, when Wallace Reid attended the opening of the grand, new Capitol theatre there. He was accompanied by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation, under whose direction the theatre has been built and will be conducted.

Montreal, Quebec, was also visited on the same date by George Walsh, the noted Fox celebrity, who went in for a rest and to attend a benefit performance for the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society. Zena Keefe was also present.

Mr. Walsh announced that he intended to bring a baseball team with him to Montreal during the coming summer. His latest visit was the third that he has made to the Canadian metropolis.

The premier showing in Canada of Griffith's "Way Down East," which took place at the Royal Alexandra theatre, Toronto, closed on Saturday, March 19, after a run of three weeks at $2 prices.

Universal's "Outside the Law" enjoyed a two weeks' engagement at the Maple Leaf theatre, Vancouver, B. C., closing March 12.

Carl McLean has made alterations to the Columbia theatre, St. Thomas, Ontario, as a result of which he has been able to increase the capacity of the theatre by 200 seats.

The Alberta Board of Moving Picture Censors has condemned First National's "Passion," according to a statement by Howard Douglas, chairman of the board. It is declared that the picture was rejected because it tended to incite inflammatory and revolutionary passions.

The final closing of the Strand theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, was marked by the holding of a "farewell dance and supper" by the employees of the theatre and many friends at St. Patrick's Hall, Ottawa, on Thursday evening, March 3, the house itself closing its doors on Saturday, March 5. Several hundred people were present at the function.

According to an official announcement by Harold Hitchinson, manager of the Ottawa Strand, the house was closed to make way for the completion and opening of the big new Capitol theatre next September.

The Committee on Municipal Law of the Ontario Legislature has thrown out the bill introduced at the present session of the Provincial Parliament by W. A. Crockett, Labor member for South Wentworth, which provided that an electrician be employed by every theatre in Ontario which had a seating capacity of 1,000 or more. The intention of this bill was to require all of the larger theatres to employ a qualified electrician to have sole charge of lighting arrangements during all performances and to be apart from projectionists or other employees already engaged.

SAN FRANCISCO

Nat Magner has opened an office on Film Row, 178 Golden Gate avenue, where he will be the sole distributor for the American Projectoscope, and also for Synchronized Scenario Music. The office is managed by Fred Wescher, who is well known in the film game locally. Magner says things look bright for him.

E. R. Williams, manager of the All Star Features Distributors exchange in San Francisco is having phenomenal success in booking the "Son of Tarzan" serial. For the first time in the history of the houses, the local New Fillmore and New Mission, have booked a serial and will show the fifteen episodes on a three-day run each. The T & D theatre, Sacramento, and nearly every key town in the territory has signed, declares Williams.

Miss J. Olsen, former booker, has returned to the Fox exchange as secretary to H. J. Sheehan, manager, after an absence of two years.

A peculiar situation developed recently in San Francisco in that four of the leading photoplay houses played pictures in their second week. This is the second time the Strand has played any picture more than one week, the first time for the Tivoli and almost the first time for the Rialto. Both the Strand, where the "Small Town Idol" played and the Tivoli, with "The Kid," drew tremendous crowds.

Announcement has been made that an orchestra of soloists will be made a permanent feature at the Frolic theatre, beginning the week of March 20. R. F. Abrahams, manager has gone to Universal City for a short stay. During his absence Joseph Enos, assistant manager, will be in charge.

The opening gun in a civic plan to boost San Francisco and advertise its possibilities to the outside world, was the Movie Stars' ball at the Civic Auditorium March 5. Well known motion picture stars and government officials graced the affair. The Allied Amusement Industries of California was in charge.

"Lying Lips" broke all box office records at the Strand theatre during its two weeks' stay there recently.

F. C. Burhans resigned as manager of the Vitagraph exchange March 5th and bought a controlling interest in the College theatre, Market street show house, where he has assumed active charge. With "Dead Men Tell No Tales" playing the week of February 27, Mr. Burhans has booked the following to follow: "Moneychangers," "Voice in the Dark," "Sage Hen," "Don't Neglect Your Wife." William A. Casey, formerly at the College, has accepted the assistant managership of the Hippodrome theatre, and Edward A. Smith, formerly manager of the Rialto and more lately at the College with Mr. Casey has been appointed general manager for the Gore Bros. and Lesser Bakersfield theatres.

CINCINNATI

William Bradley, operator for the Family theatre, was burned when films in the projection box took fire. The damage to the films may approximate $5,000. The audience left the theatre in orderly fashion to the tune of martial music, played on the organ by Miss Cora Irwin, after Manager D. A. Vincent went to the stage and requested them not to get excited.

A new theatre for negroes, which will also house a number of offices for colored professional men, will be built in the neighborhood of Fifth and John streets, by the Eagle Amusement Company, which was granted incorporation papers at Columbus today. The company is headed by T. Munday and Dr. E. B. Gray, and is capitalized at $50,000.

DETROIT

John H. Kunsky has purchased two more pictures on a states right basis, "Kazan" and "The Mask."

Fred D. Beardsley, formerly of the Soo, announces that he will shortly begin construction on a new theatre in Royal Oak, a suburb of Detroit. The house is to have 1,400 seats and the construction cost is estimated at $150,000.

Frank Mellon, who operates the Norwood and Gladwin Park theatres, has just leased the Duplex, at the Boulevard and Woodward Avenue.

All Detroit motion picture theatres are to close for three hours on the afternoon of Friday, March 25th, Good Friday.

One of the incidents in Brunet month at the Detroit Pathe exchange was a dinner dance given in the exchange headquarters by Manager George Sampson to the employees.

The Fairmount, a new Detroit theatre seating 400, at 10226 East Warren, will open April 1.

Detroit Motion Picture Projectionists' union will give a ball on April 14 at Arcadia ballroom for the benefit of its sick fund.

The Majestic is scheduled to return to a week-stand policy on Easter Sunday, the first attraction being Roscoe Arbuckle in "Brewster's Millions."

Jim Dean, formerly in Universal's shipping room, has been promoted to salesman, handling the western part of Michigan.

A special trade presentation to a capacity house was held at the Broadway Strand for "Lying Lips." The picture also is on view this week at the Madison theatre.

W. S. Butterfield announces that he will sell his interests with the Lipp and Cross enterprises in Battle Creek in order to devote more time to his own theatrical projects.

Harold Weiss has taken over the sales for Michigan for the Gardineer screen.

The New Regent theatre in Hastings, opened on Tuesday with "The Saphead."

CLEVELAND

The State Film Service formerly known to Ohio exhibitors as the National Film Service, through its manager, Mr. L. Levenson, announces the immediate release throughout the state of "Sacred Flame," a powerful six reel drama starring Emily Stevens. Mr. Levenson is confident that this is a picture which will help exhibitors recoup after their slack Lenten season. The State Film Service also is releasing "The Woman Above Reproach," with Florence Chase.

Charles J. Giegerish, one of Universal's special exploitation men, was in town last week looking over the possibilities for a big local campaign on "Foolish Wives," the latest Stroheim production, and on "Reputation," Priscilla Dean's current starring vehicle.

Joe Grossman surprised his friends by putting in a sudden appearance last Thursday. Grossman, one of Cleveland's pioneer exhibitors, sold his house, the Standard, took a trip around the world, and after looking over the land, decided to settle in Los Angeles. He came East just on pleasure, and expects to be back on the Coast again by the first of the month.

The Allen theatre of Cleveland, the first Allen house to be built in the States, will open April 1 with "The Greatest Love," a Select picture starring Vera Gordon. Confirmation of this was received this week by the local Select officials.

"The First Born." Robertson-Cole production, starring Sessue Hayakawa, will also be shown at the new Allen theatre, according to Al Lebensberger, manager of the Cleveland Robertson-Cole exchange. Among the other early attractions to be shown at the Allen is "Passion." It is said that "Passion" is booked to play a three weeks' engagement at the Allen.

Abe Gorrel has transferred his allegiance from the local Equity Pictures exchange to the local Robertson-Cole office, where he is city sales representative.

O. M. Grubb has sold his Victory theatre, Findlay, Ohio, to E. L. Marquet and J. W. Carder, both of Marysville. The owners will make extensive improvements in the house.

"The Kid" is playing in Akron this and next week at both the Waldorf and Empress theatres. The picture cannot be shown in Cleveland until certain legal complications affecting the Chaplin releases are cleared up. But that has not prevented many Clevelanders from seeing Chaplin's latest and best picture. Word has seeped through from disinterested sources that Cleveland film fans have been making up large parties to go to Akron to see "The Kid." In fact, it was the social stunt of the week to do this. When one knows that Akron is two hours' ride on) a suburban car of uncertain comforts, he can better realize what a hold the comedian has upon the public.

George W. Erdmann, district manager for Select Pictures Corporation, covering Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Buffalo and Detroit, is off on sick leave. Erdmann is suffering from infected glands.

Through the Loew office of Cleveland comes the announcement of a change of policies at both the Stillman and Euclid theatres. The Stillman which has maintained a policy of one new picture each week, will, in the future, show only big special productions, with indeterminate runs. On the other hand, the Euclid, which has heretofore been devoted solely to super productions, and long time runs, will inaugurate a bi-weekly change policy this week.

OGDEN, UTAH

Manager H. E. Skinner of the Alhambra theatre, announces that he has a number of strong attractions for the next few weeks. Among the pictures are Douglas Fairbanks in "The Nut;" Wallace Reid in "The Charm School;" Thomas Meighan in "Conrad in Quest of His Youth;" and Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in "The Life of the Party."

The Alhambra has been recently equipped with a new curtain of a mountain landscape done in oil. The curtain is a thing of beauty and was painted by John Williams, a western artist. The curtain adds much to the attractiveness of the theatre.

Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid," after a four days' run at the Orpheum theatre was brought back to the theatre by Manager Joseph Goss for an additional four days' showing. The attendance held up good for the return engagement. Many patrons pronounced the picture Chaplin's best.

Among some of the recent showings at the local picture houses which have been well received are: Constance Talmadge in "Dangerous Business," at the Orpheum; "The Jucklins," at the Alhambra; "Lying Lips," at the Ogden, and "While New York Sleeps," at the Utah. The managers of the different houses report good business on the pictures.

KANSAS CITY

The Doric theatre, one of the "Big Five" of Kansas City, owned by Samuel Harding, recently elected president of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., will again open its doors this week (February 27) after having been closed more than a month as a result of fire which resulted in $25,000 damages. "Prisoners of Love," a Goldwyn production featuring Betty Compson, will be the opening attraction.

Samuel Harding of Kansas City, owner of the Liberty and Doric theatres here, and who was recently elected president of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has just returned from a trip to New York.

SAN DIEGO

The Isis theatre re-opened on March 7th as a motion picture house, the first production being "Passion," featuring Pola Negri. This was followed by Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid." Dodge & Hayward, the lessees, have placed Jack Wahl in the position of house manager. The Isis has a symphony orchestra of twenty pieces.

At the Superba theatre the big feature, "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court," packed the house at every showing for a week, and the management decided to put the same picture on for a week at the Broadway, to meet a popular demand.

William Matthews, house manager of the Superba, has had added to his duties those of house manager of the Broadway, another of the Bush theatres.

The Teachers' and Parents' Picture Corporation has been formed here, with a capitalization of $150,000, to manufacture, purchase, sell, lease or exchange educational films. The directors are George A. Newell, Jr., G. Herbert Davis, Horace A. Kemp, John H. Bowlby, E. P. Allard, M. E. Bowlby and M. McAllister.

NORTHERN NEW YORK

Dan Buss, owner of the Star theatre, Tonawanda, N. Y., is in a Buffalo hospital, seriously ill.

M. S. Woods of Peterson & Woods, operators of the Wintergarden and Mozart theatres in Jamestown, was in Buffalo last week booking shows for the spring season.

Bob Wagner, manager of the Empire State Film company office in the Palace theatre building, Buffalo, will take care of the bookings for the new Star theatre in Dansville, N. Y.. Bob was formerly manager of the Opera House in Carthage, N. Y.

H. C. Wales, formerly manager of the General Film exchange in Albany, N. Y., and who is now at 807 Allison street, Washington, D. C., has written to W. A. V. Mack, Buffalo Pathe manager, that he is anxious to get back to the Empire state. Mr. Wales is well known in the Rochester district.

Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, had the members of Mystic Arts lodge, F. & A. M. as his guests on Wednesday evening, March 23. Arthur is a former master of this Masonic lodge.

George W. Scott, formerly resident manager of the Lyceum, Elmira, has been appointed advertising manager of the Middletown Herald.

Ira M. Mosher, president of the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association, is aiding in the preparation of a moving picture based on the industrial, commercial, financial, educational and civic life of Buffalo, which is being produced by Robert W. Elmes, editor of the Buffalo City Directory civic, educational and industrial section. The picture will be used in the schools to show pupils the many advantages of the community in which they live. This new method of teaching "Community Civics" is called "The Buffalo Plan."

Dan Savage has resigned as manager of the Buffalo office of the Empire State and Educational exchanges in the Palace theatre building. W. H. Wagner has succeeded him. J. H. Moran has been appointed manager of the Albany exchange.

George Hickey, Goldwyn manager in Buffalo, will leave May 3 for a six-week tour in California. This is Mr. Hickey's first vacation in eight years.

Sherman Webster has resigned as manager of the Buffalo Stoll Film office to accept the position of manager of the Buffalo office of Gardiner Pictures, Inc.

"Andy" Sharick, who is now general director of field exploitation and sales promotion for Selznick Pictures, was in Buffalo last week. He left Monday for Cleveland where he will represent the Selznick company at the opening of the new Allen theatre.

Thirty theatres in Buffalo have signed up for additional Pathe business since the first of March and the beginning of the Brunet drive, announces W. A. V. Mack, Buffalo manager.

George Blackmon, formerly with Universal and Dooley, has joined First National in Buffalo as salesman.

Dr. Slotkin, son of M. Slotkin of the Olympic, Buffalo, is interesting Buffalo film offices in a new exchange building in Franklin street.

E. Hochstin of the Albany Hodkinson office has been assigned to the Buffalo territory for a few weeks.

J. E. Kimberly, manager of the Buffalo Vitagraph office announces the following big houses having signed up for "Black Beauty," Strand, Victoria, Elmwood, Regent, Shea's North Park, Buffalo; Regent, Rochester; Eckel, Syracuse. The picture is breaking booking records, says Mr. Kimberly.

Clayton M. Sheehan, district manager for the Fox Film company, is in Buffalo jazzing up the boys for the fourth annual sales drive. Mr. Sheehan has just returned from a trip to Texas and California.

Frank L. Hudson, formerly with the Buffalo Realart office has been transferred to the Cincinnati exchange.

E. T. Gomersall, manager of the Buffalo Fox exchange, has been elected president of the Buffalo Exchange Managers' Association. Howard F. Brink, of Robertson-Cole is the new vice-president. Bob Murphy, of Pioneer is secretary and John M. Sitterly has been named treasurer for the ensuing year.

The General Theatres corporation, Harry Marsey, president, has acquired another house in Buffalo. The company has taken over the Central Park theatre at Fillmore avenue and Main street, formerly operated by Joseph A. Schuchert and Art Schmidt and which has been managed for the past seven years by Elmer C. Winegar, whose live wire methods brought the house into popularity in the North Buffalo section. Whether Mr. Winegar will continue as manager has not as yet been announced. The General Theatres corporation now controls the Allendale, Ellen Terry, Marlowe, Circle, Star and Central Park theatres in Buffalo.

The Premier theatre, also formerly operated by Mr. Schuchert and Mr. Schmidt on Main street in Buffalo's Central Park district, and also managed by Mr. Winegar for many years, has been sold to a William street merchant. The two deals bring to a close rumors in the air for many months that the two houses were for sale, had been sold, had been taken over by the Loew interests, the Shea interests, etc.

MADISON, WIS.

Parcel post shipment of motion picture films, with insurance by private companies, is being proposed by F. J. McWilliams, manager of the Grand theatre of Madison, Wisconsin.

Present express rates are approximately double the parcel post charges on films. Postal insurance of film shipments is unsatisfactory; first, because the amount of the insurance is too small; second, because the theatres must often ship exhibited films late at night, after the show is over and the post office closed. Obviously the films cannot be dropped in the post office and sent without insurance.

Wisconsin senators and assemblymen will be able to determine from personal inspections whether the present day motion pictures need censoring or not.

The Grand theatre, through the all-Madison entertainment committee, has supplied the solons with tickets good for all performances.

"The Kid" will open on March 27 for a week's run at the Grand theatre, Madison, Wisconsin. The next week "Passion" will run throughout the entire week.

Madison theatres have kept few attractions for a week or more, the usual run being three and four days. The two week runs in succession might be taken as indicative of a tendency toward longer runs for the smaller cities.

ALBANY

Co-operation between the theatre, the Mothers' Club and the newspapers of the city has resulted in junior movies being given at Albany, N. Y., this past winter to Saturday morning audiences of anywheres from 1,800 to 2,000 children. The last of these junior movies will be held on April 16. The series will number twelve. The children will be doubly benefited by the movies, first being given the opportunity of seeing some excellent pictures, while the proceeds will be devoted next summer to equipment for use on the playgrounds.

When the subject of junior movies was first broached in Albany F. F. Proctor, owned of Harmanus-Bleecker Hall, came forward with the proposition to donate the use of his theatre, with a seating capacity of over 2,000, each Saturday morning. Mrs. Frank Clark, of Syracuse, came to Albany to supervise the program. The Albany Mothers' Club entered into the spirit, while a dozen or more Girl Scouts volunteered their services as ushers. Leading women of the city all the way from Mrs. Nathan L. Miller, wife of the Governor, subscribed to boxes and brought large parties of children each Saturday.

The Albany Journal also came forward, running a coupon each night, which admits a boy or girl to the movies with the additional payment of five cents. Without the coupon the admission is ten cents. The whole thing has scored a wonderful success.

Motion pictures are being used in Albany, N. Y., in connection with six community entertainments, offering foreign born residents of that city an opportunity for a better understanding of American institutions and a wholesome respect for law and order. The films cover the field of civics, history, safety-first and health, with travelogues, current events and dramatic features furnishing an added interest. A ten-minute talk prefaces the pictures.

George E. Sherrer, Commissioner of Public Works in Syracuse, N. Y., has hit upon a happy combination of newsboys and motion-picture theatres in his efforts to provide the city with cleaner and more beautiful streets. Mr. Sherrer gave a motion-picture party at the Savoy theatre last Saturday to all the newsboys of Syracuse.

Summer stock is announced soon in two of the largest theatres in Albany, N. Y., which have been running pictures this past winter. On April 26 stock will replace pictures at Harmanus-Bleecker Hall, a semi-residential house with a seating capacity close to 2,500. The Colonial, a residential house, which went from stock to pictures in January, is now going back to stock on April 25.

There will be no more double features at Harmanus-Bleecker Hall in Albany, N. Y., beginning March 31, when Charlie Chaplin's "The Kid" is booked for three days. Following that will come "Midsummer Madness," "Forbidden Fruit" and "The Gilded Lily," each a three-day booking. The house has been running double features for many weeks at a top price of 40 cents at night.

NEW ORLEANS

BenTurpin is in town and having a big time. It's his old home and he was here just in time to help raise $27,000 for the families of three firemen killed on duty. He climbed an extension ladder in front of a big department store and otherwise made himself useful on the day the money was being raised by popular subscription and tagging pedestrians.

The Saenger Amusement company played "Milestones" last week at the Trianon theatre and on Wednesday admitted free all couples married 50 years or longer.

Alexander Pantages, western vaudeville magnate, was in New Orleans last week on business in connection with the erection next fall of a theatre to bear his name. While here he offered his cooperation in re-establishing French Opera here.

BALTIMORE

Realizing that hundreds of children who have been observing Lent by keeping away from amusements are awaiting just such an opportunity, H. S. Jefferson, manager of the Parkway theatre in Baltimore, has made preparations for a special Easter Monday morning show.

Mr. Jefferson has booked "The Pied Piper of Hamelin," "The Ride of Paul Revere," and "The Story of Plymouth Rock" as the attractions. He looks forward to an overflow attendance.

Hundreds of dollars were lost by motion picture theatres in Baltimore when the city was plunged in darkness Saturday night, March 19, by a cable break that is said to have been the longest in the history of the Consolidated Gas Electric Light and Power Company, which furnishes light.

In some sections 40 minutes passed before service was reinstated and meanwhile, especially in the residential section, the demands of moving picture patrons had been met either by refunds or tickets for future performances. Big houses in the heart of the city kept patrons seated by having orchestras work. A limited few that boast independent wires for just such emergencies were not affected by the accident. Their audiences had but a momentary flash of dimming lights.

Steam escaping into an underground conduit is reported to have been the cause of the break.

Press-Book Is Prepared for "East Lynne"

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has prepared an elaborate campaign book for the use of exhibitors in exploiting the Hugo Ballin special production, "East Lynne," which has been turned over to the Hodkinson organization for distribution. The press-book itself is a sixteen-page publition printed on heavy glazed stock attractively compiled and artistically finished from the typographical angle.

The opening pages relate some facts anent the fame and popularity of the story of "East Lynne" in its book and dramatic forms. Then follows an account of its photoplay version as produced by Hugo Ballin, particular emphasis being placed on the members of the cast appearing in the picture. Two pages or exploitation, special accessories available, a mail campaign, prologue and lobby suggestions and "catch lines" are also included in the book. A feature of the publication is the enclosure of three practical press-sheets which can be easily clipped and used in a tie-up with the local newspaper. These press-sheets include ad layouts, cuts and press notices.

"The Kid" Runs Six Weeks

Chaplin Production Chalks Up New Record for Hold Over Engagements

IN a statement just issued from the New York headquarters of Associated First National Pictures, the announcements are made that "The Kid" played for six consecutive weeks at the Randolph theatre, Chicago; that the picture is experiencing an unusually heavy demand in all sections of the country; and that more engagements lasting longer than one week have been recorded to the credit of "The Kid" than any feature attraction moving through regular distribution channels.

Fourteen such engagements have already been played by "The Kid," and the end is not yet.

The engagement of "The Kid" at the Randolph in Chicago was the longest, the picture playing there six consecutive weeks. On February 14th, the 'six reels of joy" opened at the Columbia in Pittsburgh, and is still playing there, breaking records, and, in the words of the house manager, T. H. Schrader, doing better business the fourth week than it did the first.

In Los Angeles, "The Kid" has settled down for an indefinite run at the Kinema, which S. Barrett McCormick is managing, after a preliminary week at the Ambassador.

In Kansas City, it played three consecutive weeks.

Two weeks' engagements were chalked up in New Orleans, Denver, San Francisco, Detroit, Indianapolis, Des Moines, Milwaukee and New York City.

Minneapolis held "The Kid" for ten days. John Loveridge at the Rialto theatre, Omaha, played it for nine days, holding it over three days beyond the original limit of one week.

At the T. and D. theatre in Oakland, Calif., "The Kid" went through the now familiar performance of breaking house records during the first week in March.

Two hundred and fifty prints of the picture are working night and day to supply the popular demand for the latest Chaplin production and even with this number of prints available, it is impossible to supply the exhibitors' demand for "The Kid" as early as they would like to have the picture.

Director of "The Outside Woman" Named

According to accounts first appearing in California papers and later supplemented by a statement from Realart's headquarters in New York City, the director of "The Outside Woman," which stars Wanda Hawley, is Penrhyn Stanlaws who has become prominent as an artist. The name of the director of "The Outside Woman" has been withheld to date, and there has been much theorizing as to his identity.

"Money Master" Changed to "The Wise Fool"

"The Wise Fool" is the title finally selected for George Melford's Paramount production adapted from Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Money Master," which Mr. Melford has just completed at the Lasky studio.

This is a French-Canadian story, teeming with thrills such as have abounded in all of Sir Gilbert Parker's novels, notably "The Right of Way" and "The Seats of the Mighty." The featured role is played by James Kirkwood.

For Canadian winter atmosphere Mr. Melford took the entire company to the snow-covered inland mountains of California where more than a month was spent in making exterior scenes with most picturesque natural backgrounds. Later on, the company went to Redondo Beach where a wreck scene was filmed.

Meighan Is Honored by Asheville, N. C., Club

Thomas Meighan, Paramount star, and Hon. Gilbert M. Hitchcock, United States Senator from Nebraska, were the guests of honor at last week's luncheon of the Kiwanis Club of Asheville, N. C., which city is now the location headquarters of Director R. William Neill and his company producing "The Conquest of Canaan," Mr. Meighan's new Paramount picture. Mr. Meighan was given a rousing welcome by the members of the club.

From the review on "Black Beauty" in March 12th issue of Exhibitors Herald.

Vitagraph has one of the prize pictures of the year in "Black Beauty."

The picture, both for the familiarity of its story and for its intrinsic artistic value, should sweep the exhibiting world not only in near months but for years to come.

Black Beauty" is a novelty in manner of presentation. Its titles tell the story in first person by the horse, Black Beauty, and they faithfully follow the book's wording. Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester have gracefully and effectively added enough to the story to make stronger its slight thread of romance, and have transformed it into charming screen entertainment by adding to rather than subtracting from its charm.

The film has all the required elements of screen appeal: comedy, suspense, drama and pictorial beauty. There is naturalness about the characters as the cast portrays them that makes them live as really to the beholder as one's intimate friends and associates.

It is vividly human and in its manner of presentation is stripped to the absolute artistic essentials. Every scene and every movement are made to count.

From the exhibitor's standpoint "Black Beauty" should be one of the greatest money-makers of the year. It should go over big in both the first-run and the neighborhood house.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to December 4, 1920.

PICTURE — BRAND — STAR — RELEASED — PLAN BOOK

ALL DOLLED UP (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....MAR. 12
"Pleasing offering with the star in an ideal role."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A very good picture, though we had only average business with it and it did not come up to my expectations as a box office attraction."

ALL SOULS EVE (REALART) MARY MILES MINTER.....MAR. 5
"Incredible plot, but has appealing moments."—M. P. News.

AMATEUR DEVIL, AN (PARAMOUNT) BRYANT WASHBURN...MAR. 12
"A decidedly mediocre comedy with Washburn."—M. P. News.

BARBARIAN, THE (PIONEER) MONROE SALISBURY.....FEB. 26
"Fine backgrounds but very little action."—M. P. News.

BARE KNUCKLES (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL.....MAR. 19
"Above the average thriller, only in exteriors."—M. P. News.

BARS OF IRON (STOLL FILM CORP.) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 19
"Just an ordinary production."—M. P. News.

BAIT, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) HOPE HAMPTON.....JAN. 15
"Rather hectic but fairly interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not a good picture and business was way off. Our patrons didn't know the star." "Fair picture to fair business."

BEAUTIFULLY TRIMMED (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS.....DEC. 11
"Mediocre picture on a hackneyed theme."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good crook picture."

BEAU REVEL (INCE-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 26
"Fairly interesting, though would be more convincing if developed humorously."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A wonderful picture which sure did go 'over the top.' Brought large box office receipts and much satisfaction from the audiences." "Fairly good picture with average business."

BIG PUNCH, THE (FOX) BUCK JONES.....FEB. 19
"Buck Jones as a minister; a dull picture."—M. P. News.

BILLIONS (NAZIMOVA-METRO) NAZIMOVA.....DEC. 11
"Very weak picture material in Nazimova's latest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Nazimova shows a decided improvement in this picture over 'Madame Peacock.' Well taken by big audiences for the entire week." "Picture proved a frost here. It is 'not much' and my audiences were below normal. Many thought it the poorest film Nazimova has ever played in." "Opened to big business, but didn't hold up so well." "Picture heartily criticized and Nazimova's very stagy and unnatural acting has killed her in this city." "A good picture. About the usual business." "Not up to Nazimova's standard. Star falling back. Did only a mediocre business with this one." "Not up to some of Nazimova's previous efforts, but pleasing."

BLACKBIRDS (REALART) JUSTINE JOHNSTONE.....DEC. 25
"Justine Johnstone is a welcome screen figure in crook melodrama."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the poorest features I've ever had the misfortune to play. Story was worked to death, and star did not live up to one-tenth of her press notices. My audience was much disappointed." "A mediocre picture. Star not particularly attractive, but played to good business for reasons unknown."

BLACK BEAUTY (VITAGRAPH) JEAN PAIGE.....JAN. 22
"Entertaining picture made from famous classic."—M. P. News.

BLIND WIVES (FOX) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 15
"Another episode picture of certain appeal."—P. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good melodrama that pleased lovers of this class of entertainment. Box-office returns better than usual." "Fairly good both as to pleasing the audiences and box-office returns."
Consensus—"Good picture, good puller."

BLUSHING BRIDE, THE (FOX) EILEEN PERCY.....MAR. 19
"Exceedingly weak; might have made a good Sunshine."—M. P. News.

BRANDED SOUL, THE (STOLL-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 19
"Redemption story carries little appeal and is badly overacted."—M. P. News.

BREAKING POINT, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) BESSIE BARRISCALE.....FEB. 5
"More than a vehicle—a well-sustained marital drama."—M. P. News.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS (PARAMOUNT) ROSCOE ARBUCKLE...FEB. 5
"What the public has been waiting for from Fatty."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Sure-fire winner. Pleased the audiences immensely. Box office returns much larger than usual." "Good comedy bringing the usual business." "This is a splendid picture and went over big with our audience. Played to large business for one week." "Capacity houses on opening Sunday in spite of heavy rain all afternoon and evening. A big winner with the public." "A great picture. It pleased my audiences, consequently the box office receipts were larger than usual." "'Fatty' went over in this picture in a surprising manner. Picture played to capacity for seven-day run." "Don't miss this one, a really big box office play."

BROKEN GATE, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) BESSIE BARRISCALE.....JAN. 1
"Sob sister story is highly theatrical."—M. P. News.

BUNTY PULLS THE STRINGS (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 15
"Fine production given famous stage comedy."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Dandy little story to this one. Pleased my patrons and kept me packing 'em in. Almost a record-breaker." "Too fragmentary to please majority of patrons. Artistically done, however." "A very good production, splendidly acted and mounted, but which did not seem to attract average business."

BURGLAR PROOF (PARAMOUNT) BRYANT WASHBURN.....FEB. 12
"Washburn's best one in a dog's age—a real comedy."—M. P. News.

BURIED TREASURE (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) MARION DAVIES.....FEB. 26
"Spectacular production, but story is unimpressive,"—M. P. News.

CHARM SCHOOL, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) WALLACE REID.....JAN. 8
"Wallace Reid has another winner here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitors Comment.—"Fine picture, pleasing, entertaining, and brought good business." "Wallace Reid went over big in this picture. Our patrons thought it was one of the best of this popular star's productions. Played to excellent business the week preceding New Year's." "We consider this one of the best box office attractions we have ever played. Did exceptional business during its run at this house and is an excellent picture." "Very good picture, full of entertaining points. Did good business." "One of the most pleasing pictures we have ever shown. Business was very good." "Good enough for a second week holdover. Business extra good both weeks. Best Wallace Reid picture ever seen." "Certainly good. Business fine all week. Audiences well pleased." "Very good picture which held down big business for a week." "Very good. Good business for entire week."

CHEATER REFORMED, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL.....JAN. 15
"William Russell has an entertaining crook picture here."—M. P. News.

CHICKENS (INCE-PARAMOUNT) DOUGLAS MACLEAN.....MAR. 26
"Forced comedy and hokum never ring the bell."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Brought average business. Fair picture."

CINDERELLA'S TWIN (METRO) VIOLA DANA.....JAN. 8
"Just misses being very commonplace."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This little star always draws well for me, and this was not as clever as 'The Chorus Girl's Romance,' business was almost as good. Consider it a good business-getter." "Fairly entertaining and patrons were pleased. Good business." "The old Cinderella story, strictly modernized and made fairly plausible. Business only fair."
Consensus—"Average picture, average puller."

COAST OF OPPORTUNITY, THE (BRUNTON-HODKINSON) J. WARREN KERRIGAN.....DEC. 11
"Picturesque story with Kerrigan in heroic role."—M. P. News.

COLORADO (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....FEB. 19
"Mayo's latest strong in action."—M. P. News.

CONCERT, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 5
"Another stage vehicle adaptation which flops."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Accurate photoplay of stage success. Moderately popular. Not enough action in it to make it a big success as a picture."

CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT, A (FOX) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 12
"Mark Twain modernized in an appealing picture."—M. P. News.

COUSIN KATE (VITAGRAPH) ALICE JOYCE.....FEB. 12
"Alice Joyce has strong personality in 'Cousin Kate.'"—M. P. News.

DANGEROUS BUSINESS (FIRST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE.....DEC. 11
"Rather frail but fairly amusing."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fine production which seemed to please and brought fine business." "Not as good as some of Miss Talmadge's previous vehicles, but satisfying." "A good picture and brought more than usual business.' "This sure did go over big and deserved it for it's an interesting picture throughout." "Picture brought fine business. Very entertaining." "This one went over big and the box-office showed large receipts. Just seemed to bring 'em in, and they were well pleased with it." "Went over well, as is always the case with a Talmadge picture in my house. Some of the older folks thought it went a little too far in some scenes, and others frankly characterized it as 'raw.' But it got the money, and that's the acid test, I suppose." "One of Constance Talmadge's best and went over big at this house. Did splendid business for week."

Projection Room Built of Glass on Mezzanine Foyer

ONE day a young man went into the amusement business. He had an idea that some day in the near future he would not only own his own theatre, but own one of the best equipped in the country. This man's dream has come true. His name is John Hamrick, but everybody calls him "Ham" or Hamrick, because no one adds "Mister" when he addresses a friend and since Hamrick has so many friends, almost everyone leaves off the M and R.

As he has been in the business of presenting amusement to the public for many years, when he dreamed of his own beautiful house, and has been directly interested in motion pictures theatres in Seattle for seven years, having been owner of the "Rex" and others, it is easy to see how and why he could develop such novel ideas. His ideas were always novel and always brought big business.

Getting back to the theatre again, the patrons find that it is safe from drafts, as the heating and ventilation system is so arranged that, even with all doors open, cold air cannot come into the house, as a constant outward draft is supplied. The building is of reinforced concrete construction, with cement floors and is said to be strictly fireproof. The exterior is finished in brick trimmed with caeon stone. A touch of color is given by the colored electric sign, illuminated colored glass windows and a marquise. While the cost of the new Seattle has not been given out, it is said by some who claim to know, that together with the 30-year lease, it is close to $350,000.

Mr. John Hamrick, owner and designer of the Blue Mouse theatre

As Mr. Hamrick has always believed in good music in a motion picture house, he picked an excellent twelve-man orchestra and had installed a special $50,000 Hope-Jones organ. Special concerts are given at the afternoon and evening performances.

From the first the dominating idea of John Hamrick has been to give the public an innovation—something distinctly different. That he has achieved this purpose is the consensus of opinion of that veritable army of designers and artisans who have combined forces to produce from Mr. Hamrick's conception the reality.

It is the interior—with which the theatre-going public has the most concern—that impresses all despite the fact that the entrance and the general exterior are extraordinarily attractive and inviting in appearance.

Italian renaissance may be said to be the theme of the interior, yet there is a very subtle mingling of the beautiful as exemplified by many nationalities and many climes. The proscenium of the oblong type, is embellished by a double relief done in old gold worked out in exquisite detail with apparently as much fidelity to the conceptions of renaissance artists as is to be found in the work of the best Italian architects of the renaissance period.

The cove ceilings relieve what would otherwise be squared lines of the dome while the great expanse and artistic way by a grill, which serves an important part in the ventilation of the building as well as contributing to the interior scheme. The ceiling is done in sky blue merging into light tinted clouds along the coves. This "bringing of the Master Artist Nature" into the interior of the theatre is further accentuated by the introduction of a sunset scene visible behind the parted drapes of the loges on either side.

Medallions in soft colors, with floral decorations interspersed are introduced effectively above and along the sides of the silk brocaded panels of the walls. Four cathedral-like windows, two on either side, are set with leaded glass panels, bringing from without the natural light amber tinted to blend harmoniously with the soft lighting of the interior.

Rose shades dominate the colorings of the walls, but there is enough ivory used to forestall any monotony or inconsistencies of decoration. A distinct innovation has been introduced in the "baskets of sunshine" which grace both sides of the auditorium near the lower line of the cove. Soft light seems to flow over the edges of these hanging baskets as the mist from some waterfall. In fact the whole interior lighting is arranged in such a way as to give a softly diffused light like that of Patrons are able to see the projectors working at the Blue Mouse. A wire glass partition separates the room from the Foyer

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

How Much Money Have You Invested in Your Theatre?

Are you getting a fair return on your investment now? How about the summer? Could you afford to have your attendance drop off 50%?

No exhibitor can afford to run his house at a loss during the summer months, not in these days when so much money must be laid aside for taxes, interest, expenses, etc

If there is any uncertainty in your mind as to what the coming hot weather has in store for you, let us relieve you of this worry.

By installing a TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM now you will have time to thoroughly advertise it before the warm weather sets in.

some dream-place. Subdued spotlights which play from the balcony on the big grill in the ceilings are another novelty in theatre lighting.

The rich hangings of blue and gold give that final touch of distinction and quiet refinement which seems unconsciously to impress a visitor to this newest of the Pacific Coast's newest picture houses.

In the lobby marble has been used unsparingly to add to the charm of the theatre. From either side of the two entrance ways graceful stairways wind upward to the balcony and the lounge and rest rooms. These stairways are finished in real marble. In contrast to the subdued lighting inside, the exterior is thrown into bold outline by a system of dazzling artificial light, from the tip of the gigantic "Blue Mouse" electric sign with its flashing letter to the basework of the entrance and ticket booth. Tiling of simple pattern has been used effectively in the entrance way.

Blue, with harmonious touches of gold, forms the general color scheme of the theatre. Here and there, with artistic touch, these basic colors have been relieved by a fine display of bright color, the whole lending an atmosphere of tranquil, restful, though inspiring environment. To witness the performance of such features as are announced for this theatre in such an environment is to afford patrons the ultimate in entertainment as it pertains to the silent drama.

The projection room equipment has been worked out and improved upon by Hamrick along the lines of the Capitol theatre of New York City, acknowledged to be the finest motion picture theatre in the world. The projection engineer in conjunction with the Precision Machine Company, builders of the Simplex projector. The booth equipment consists of two Capitol-model Simplex projectors, which are equipped with double motor controls, are controls which automatically adjust the light so the screen has an even illumination at all times. The film footage meters are also included, which enable the show to be accurately timed. A speed meter is attached to each machine with meters located in the booth, orchestra pit and manager's office. This device enables the show to be synchronized perfectly.

The front of the Blue Mouse theatre, Seattle, is constructed of marble, brick and stone

A special dissolving stereopticon machine allows beautiful stereopticon effects to be worked out. Also a specially designed stereopticon spot lamp permits any size or colored spot to be thrown in any part of the theatre. Eight rheostats have been designed to take care of the current requirements for this equipment. All rewinding of film is accomplished inside of a specially constructed rewind cabinet, which automatically shuts off the electric motor when the rewinding is finished.

Special "Keenolite" lenses have been ground for this theatre which show a greater definition and depth of picture than has been heretofore possible. This is a new product which is not on the market as yet, but was obtained in advance for this theatre opening.

One of the biggest and most important features is the minusa screen. This was built to the specifications of the theatre, with a color background that harmonizes with the color rays at the point of contact, thus eliminating all eye strain so that the picture looks the same from any seat in the house.

The seats were designed especially for the Blue Mouse theatre. The standards are of massive period design, finished in verdi gray hi-lighted in silver, and the seats are upholstered in a Spanish blue leather. The seat proper is 17 inches from front to rear and the upholstering material is three and one-half inches deep. The seats vary from 20 to 22 inches in width. All wooden parts are of eightply cross-grained veneer, finished in a dull French gray. One of the distinctive features is the cut-out back, insuring coolness in summer by allowing a better circulation of air. The loge chairs are finished in all gray, with gray velour upholstering.

The entire projection equipment has been carefully planned so that eye strain has been eliminated entirely.

The electrical installation in the Blue Mouse is the most complete in the Northwest, embracing all the latest features and improved apparatus. The main auditorium is lighted entirely with indirect fixtures of the large unit type. The flower gardens on each side of the stage are lighted by indirect fixtures with three colors. The stage is equipped with the latest type of stage lighting.

These installations are all controlled from the operator's booth with safety type external operating switches and all are controlled and operated by Cutler-Hammer simplicity type theatre dimmers, so that any section of the lighting may be dimmed and maintained at any given intensity. Any combination of colors or blending of any colors may be obtained from these dimmers which are also used in gradually raising and lowering the lights from full white auditorium to the desired effect it is wished to maintain throughout the pictures. No sudden glare of lighting is caused by the throwing on of all lights at one time. They may be raised gradually and lowered in the same way.

The aisles are all illuminated with late type aisle lighting fixtures so shaded that they in no way affect the pictures, at the same time keeping the aisles brightly lighted through the performance. The large drape curtain is operated by an electric curtain hoist which is also controlled from the operating booth.

The electrical apparatus and equipment in the picture booths is a distinct innovation in motion picture theatres, the operator having absolute control of all the apparatus in the room and of all the electrical apparatus throughout the building. As a method of safety to the public there are three separate and independent lighting services in this theatre fed by separate circuits of power so that any one of these circuits may fail but in no way effect the operating of the theatre.

There is once service controlling all equipment in the picture booth, one service controlling the lighting throughout the building and one service feeding and controlling only the exit and operating lights, so that, regardless of what may happen to the lighting equipment or apparatus in the booth, the exit lights and sufficient lighting throughout the building is available at all times.

The front of the theatre is illuminated by four powerful Davis flood lights, located on the top of the marquise. The marquise and main entrance are lighted with the latest type of marquise fixtures. A private telephone installation is in use throughout the theatre, the Magnovox antinoise instruments supplying this equipment.

One of the features that interests the general public is the ample parking around the theatre. Situated as it is just a step to the south of Pike Street on Fifth Avenue, Pike Street and Fifth Avenue as well as Union Street become available for parked autos.

These two cuts illustrate the difference in methods of ventilation between the "natural" system on the left and the Typhoon system on the right. In the former the air is represented as passing from the open doors and windows over the heads of the patrons to the outlet in the roof. In the latter case, the air is shown entering at the top and passing downward to every part of the theatre.

Good Ventilation Is an Investment

Probably the most important of the many different phases of theatre equipment discussed by exhibitors, at this time of the year, is ventilation. This is due to the fact that theatre owners everywhere realize the importance of a cool, well ventilated house during the summer months if they are to carry through the summer the large attendance that they have been getting during the winter months for the past two or three seasons.

Competition is keener today than ever before, and as a result the theatre that is prepared to furnish its patrons with every comfort is the one that is most likely to get the largest amount of business.

In the old days, when the majority of picture houses were small, very little thought was given to ventilation. At the same time, there were few laws compelling a theatre owner to supply a certain amount of fresh air per person in the audience. In those days, all the average exhibitor attempted was to set up a small ventilating fan either in the wall or ceiling, and depend upon it to take care of about ten times the work that it was capable of handling.

Even in some of the larger houses of the past, when ventilation was less talked about than today, exhaust fans were installed in the ceiling and the exhibitor trusted to luck in getting people into his theatre during the summer months.

The reader, by referring to the accompanying illustration can see approximately what took place with the old method of ventilation, the foul air being removed only within a short radius of the ventilator. The air in the balance of the theatre remaining practically stationary to be breathed over and over again by the patrons. The reason for this was that there was no movement to the air and nothing that would force this impure atmosphere up to the exhaust outlet. Today, however, with the more modern appliances, the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System, for example, the method has been practically reversed.

In the Typhoon system extremely large fans are used. These are installed in the roof of the theatre and blow air from high above the dust and dirt of the street directly into the theatre through openings in the ceiling, in huge quantities and at low velocity, without draught. The air passes over the audience and is forced out through the exit doors or other openings in the furthest end of the theatre. In this way every part of the house is made cool and thoroughly ventilated, a complete change of atmosphere taking place once every minute, or sixty times an hour.

The second cut reproduced herewith gives a fair idea of how the air is forced into a theatre through the ceiling under the Typhoon method, every part of the theatre being thoroughly ventilated.

Several states have enacted laws that compel theatre owners to supply from twenty to thirty cubic feet of air per seat per minute, while in other states the supply of air is based on the floor area of the theatre in square feet.

In the construction of the new houses of today one of the first things considered by the architect after the general plans have been laid out is the item of ventilation.

When the construction of a theatre does not permit of the installation of the Typhoon apparatus on the roof, it may be installed in the attic space, or, when this is not possible, it has been found practical to install the equipment in a room or other chamber above the stage, the fresh air being taken through windows or specially made openings constructed for the purpose. When it is impossible to install the apparatus on the roof, there is still another method available, that of making the installation on the outside wall of the building, fresh air in this instance being forced in through windows or other openings.

The System is reversible, and during the colder months may be run in the opposite direction for the purpose of ventilation alone.

Reports of New Theatres

Darlington, S. C., is going to have one of the best theatres in the territory when George Hendrickson gets through with spending several thousand dollars installing new equipment, beautifying and re-decorating the interior, building a stage for prologues, and worth-while road-shows, not to mention some special settings he is installing for unusual pictures.

The Brunswick theatre, at Norcross, Ga., about six miles above Camp Gordon, has been completed and bookings for it were made in Atlanta this week. Business prospects for the new house are good.

The Broadway, which is the new theatre being erected in Greensboro, N. C., by the Southern Amusement Co., is being rushed to completion. This house will house tabloids, and unusual pictures, taking the place of the Isis, which will be torn down, and a bank building erected in its place.

A fact of peculiar significance is that the Municipal Hall, at Danville, Va., has been turned into a community motion picture theatre, under the management of R. W. Gardner. Besides the regular motion picture entertainments, there are amateur theatricals, lyceum engagements, etc. The venture is proving a success, both financially and artistically.

John T. Hendry, formerly of Fort Myers, Fla., has gone to Perry, Fla., where he will have charge of the new Temple theatre.

The Lynch Enterprises have named M. D. Selph manager of the Imperial, Strand and Gadsden theatres at Gadsden, Ala.

W. A. Doster succeeds John L. Crove as manager of the Grand theatre at Montgomery. Mr. Doster is also in charge of the other Lynch houses in Montgomery, which are made up of the Strand, Plaza, and Colonial theatres. The Grand was a recent acquisition of this firm.

The church people of Trenton, Tenn., heartily endorsed Sunday movies for the benefit of the starving European children, and more than fifty dollars was collected by Manager C. W. Glass, of the local theatre, for the cause.

Allen to Remodel Delmar at Medina, N. Y.

The Allen Theatre Co. has purchased the Delmar theatre property and will remodel it into the finest type of theatre. The capacity of the house will be increased 1,000 seats. A modern vacuum system will be installed and new lobby frames placed in position.

No expense will be spared to give its patrons the best of projection as new machines are to be purchased. Every detail leading to the increased comfort of patrons will be considered.

Mr. Allen has for many years owned the Millard Fillmore theatre at East Aurora, said to be the most beautiful town theatre north of New oYrk.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

A Study of the Reflection Characteristics of Projection Screens

By Lloyd A. Jones and Milton F. Fillius

In the past a Screen has been a Screen and not much else. It has taken Messrs. Jones and Fillius in their paper printed below which was delivered originally before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to identify the absolute characteristics of motion picture screens. This paper is the most helpful that has come to our attention this year.

In Figure 4 are given the curves for some of the almost completely diffusing miscellaneous samples.

In Figure 5 are the curves relating to the screens manufactured by C. S. Wertsner and Son. It will be noted that among these are found examples of all three classes.

In Figure 6 are the curves relative to the screens manufactured by the Independent Movie Supply Company and here again we find examples of all three classes.

In Figure 7 are given the curves relative to the Minusa Cine Screens and to one of aluminum coated paper manufactured by W. G. Preddy, this latter is of the semi-diffusing type.

In Figure 8 are the curves for the Idealite screens manufactured by the Ludeke Screen Company. All of these fall in the semi-diffusing class.

In Figure 9 are the curves for the screens manufactured by the De Berri Screen Company, two of which are of the semi-diffusing type, while one is of the diffusing type.

In Figure 10 are the curves of the Argus Crystal Bead Screens, one of which is of the specular type and one of the semi-diffuse type. These screens are made by covering a surface of fabric with small glass beads. The reflection curves are peculiar in that the reflecting power at 5 deg. is but very little less than that at 0, giving a distribution curve much flatter near the normal than is usual with screens of that type.

In Figure 11 are the curves for samples Nos. 33, manufactured by H. C. Genter & Company; 34, by the Gold King Screen Company; and 35, manufactured by A. L. Raven. In this figure one screen of each class is represented.

Analysis of Results.

In order to facilitate the examination of the data, it will be well to separate them into their respective classes. After careful consideration of the characteristics of the screens and of the requirements of practical use, it was decided to define the range covered by these classes as follows:

Class A includes those screens which are adapted for use in theatres where the maximum angle of observation does not exceed 30 deg.; Class B includes the screens adapted for use where the maximum angle of observation does not exceed 50 deg., while the Class C screens should be used in all cases where the angle of observation is greater than 50 deg. The point should be again emphasized that these classifications are not rigid, but of an approximate character.

After careful consideration of the subject, it was decided that the value of the ratio of the reflecting power measured at normal observation to that measured at the maximum angle of observation in a particular installation would serve as the most logical criterion by which to select the most suitable screen for that particular case.

This value will then represent the ratio of the brightness of the screen as observed by a person in the center of the auditorium to that of the brightness as observed by a person occupying a seat at the side and near the front. By keeping this ratio below a certain limiting value, satisfactory brightness will be obtained for all observers. This factor alone, however, is not sufficient for the classifying of screens according to their relative merits. The highest average reflecting power within the required angle from the normal will necessitate the least energy expenditure in the projecting system to produce a given screen brightness.

Assuming cases in which the maximum angles of observation are 20 deg., 30 deg., 40 deg. and 50 deg. the values of the ratio of the reflecting power at normal observation to that at these various angles were computed for all screens and likewise values of mean reflecting

Perfectly Projected Pictures

¶ Gone and almost forgotten are those days when people claimed that moving pictures were injurious to the eyes.

¶ In the early stages of the development of the motion picture there may or may not have been reasons for such claims. But not so now.

¶ God has endowed great men with brains to invent those things which make it possible to flash on a screen in life-like manner scenes of every description and from every corner of the world.

¶ Always striving to please the theatregoers, The Rivoli, Toledo's Million Dollar Playhouse, has taken those steps necessary to project most perfectly the high class pictures which are known to be shown at that amusement palace.

¶ The finest screen on the market, known as the crystal bead, and also one of the largest in the country, together with a battery of three Power's Projectors, makes this perfect projection possible.

¶ No longer are film fans subjected to the unpleasantness of frequent breaks and stops in what were once known as "jumping pictures."

¶ They now enter the Shrine of the Silent Art and are Wafted Up into the Forgetfulness of the Outside World from the Time the Curtain Rises, "Living" with the Artists of Shadowland, Until the Theatre Lights Return Them to This Earth.

¶ And the Goddess of the Screen Smiles Her Satisfaction.

Extract from Mr. Wendt's Letter Addressed to NICHOLAS POWER CO., Incorporated

Never was there more truth in a bit of advertising. It goes without saying that we are proud of our projection, made possible by your projectors.

You may wonder why the ad. Well, there are some people—true, only a few, to whom Mary Pickford or Charlie Chaplin mean nothing. Stars and titles mean nothing, as they never heard of them. Perfectly projected pictures might make them patrons where other advertising would mean less.

Always a booster for Power's, I remain,

Very sincerely yours,

900 Watt Lamp Not So Good as 600 Watt

W. F., Ashland, Ohio, is using incandescent lamps but is having some peculiar trouble with them. He writes:

We have been using Mazda lamps for projection in a theatre in which I am interested. We are having trouble in getting sufficient light on the screen and would like some information.

We used 600 watt Mazda lamps with Argus outfit and regulators; our current was A. C. 60 cycles 110 volts. Motiograph machines with two blade shutters, quarter size lens and regular Argus condensers. Throw was 70 feet, picture 10 x 13 on aluminum metallic screen. This gave us a very good light and was satisfactory. Later we moved to another location and used the same outfit, the only change being an 83 foot throw and an 8 x 11 picture; this required a different focal length lens but we continued to use the quarter size.

We have had very poor light since our change and finally put in the 900 Mazda outfit and also changed our projection lens and used the ½ size; this gave us a fairly good light but the 900 watt lamps would not hold up, they either burned out in a few hours or turned white and 20 to 30 hours was their limit. This was too expensive and we have changed back to the 600 watt outfit. We have no trouble with these burning out but the light is very poor.

We have been told that in actual tests Mazda lamps gave 15% more light than the carbon arc under same conditions up to 100 foot throw. If this is true, can you tell us what the cause of the trouble is? Is the extra 13 feet in throw that we now have sufficient to cause this difference in light?

What do you think causes the 900 watt lamps to burn out as they did for us? Do you think that the Mazda lamp can be made to give a good satisfactory picture under the conditions which we have as stated above; if so, what changes would you suggest?

We have tested out the line of voltage and find that it varies considerably, running from 101 to 110 volts but 105 volts is about all that is delivered a greater part of the time. If this is causing our trouble how can it be remedied?

We will appreciate very much any information you can give us and will be pleased to hear from you at once.

If your light was satisfactory under the first conditions mentioned there is no reason why it should not have been equally so with the slightly longer throw but smaller picture. Your first lens was about 4¾" focal length. You could not get a No. 3 (half size) lens in that focal length but you could (as you did) in the second layout where your lens was about 7" focal length. The use of this latter sized lens in the No. 1 (quarter size) size meant that you were losing a great deal of the light passing through the film. The collecting area of the lens was too small and too distantly placed to pick up its proper quantity of light.

Other things being equal, when you exchanged your No. 1 lens for the No. 2, your screen should have been illuminated more brightly than in the case of your first theatre. This was not so, according to your letter, so that there must have been trouble in the adjustment of the lamp or of the control device.

There is no reason why the 900 watt lamp when rightly used should not last as long as the 600 watt. If they burnt out that was either a sign of poor construction or of poor current control, probably the latter. The first transformers for controlling the current value were not so efficient as those that have been produced of late, so that unless the projectionist kept his eye glued to the ammeter scale it was an easy thing for the current to rise above 20 amperes (in the case of the 600 watt) or 30 amperes (for the 900 watt). If for example the current was allowed to rise from 30 to 33 and to remain there for two reels the lift of the lamp would be cut down to around the 20 or 30 hours that you mentioned. The lamp companies seem to be doing their best to impress on the projectionist and the manager as well the absolute need for keeping the current at 30 amperes and no more. If your lamps burned out in a few hours use we would suggest that you have your supply house check up the ammeter on your machine and make sure that it is registering correctly.

Lamps turn white when there is a leakage of air into them from the outside. This means poor construction on the part of the manufacturer and is not your fault. Call the lamps to the attention of the agent from whom you purchased them and he will no doubt fix it up for you.

Some day some one will be able to explain clearly to every projectionist in the country that the "throw" has no effect in itself on the brilliancy of the picture. If the picture size changes without additional light from the arc or incandescent then there will be a loss in brilliancy. But for the same size picture at 100 feet or at 200 feet, providing the lens is collecting all the light from the condensers, there will be no difference in the picture brilliancy.

Some have claimed that the heat waves from a densely packed theatre will have an effect of deflecting some of the light rays; judge for yourself the soundness of this theory. Smoke, of course, will cut down the illumination but even this loss could hardly be estimated as it is so small.

When you changed theatres, you practically doubled the focal length of your lens. This means that you did not get the rear surface of your objective as near the film as previously and unless the remainder of your optical system was changed materially the divergence of the beam would be such that quite a bit of light was not collected and made use of on the screen.

Your question regarding the total quantity of light from the incandescent and the arc is a hard one to answer. Measurements taken at various theatres have shown such a wide limit to the light on to the screen that a definite figure cannot be given. The average illumination has been found to be around 5 foot candles. But within a space of a minute due to the wandering of the arc on the carbon tips this intensity may vary from as low as 2 foot candles to as high as 15 or more. But if the intensity is around 4 foot candles we should say that the arc and the incandescent are about equal.

You say "Under the same conditions." If you mean that there is 15% more light from the incandescent lamp at 30 volts and 30 amps. than from the 30 ampere arc we believe you are right but under conditions as usually met with in practice where the theatre is using 45 to 65 amperes d.c. it is probable that the screen intensities would not be far apart.

The incandescent lamp control equipments now being manufactured are designed to take care of at least 10 volts either side of normal and to protect the lamp meanwhile. You evidently have very poor regulation but it is not too bad to be taken care of by the transformer on your set.

Parthenon Projection Commented on

The new theatre of Herman Weingarten opened in the Ridgewood section of Brooklyn, N. Y., on Feb. 26th. This theatre which is located at the corner of Myrtle and Wyskoff Aves., was built at a total cost of $300,000 and will seat 1,600 persons. Provisions have been made for every need and convenience of the patrons. There ase spacious rest rooms, writing rooms, smoking rooms for the men, telephone booths and promenades.

The interior is decorated with high class paintings and the general decorations are in gold and old rose. The screen has been located in such a position that there is a perfect view of the seat from any part of the house.

The projection room was designed and equipped by the Howells Cine Equipment Co. It contains two Type S Simplex machines, a double arc 90 ampere Westinghouse motor generator set with new type Westinghouse ballast resistance, Peerless Arc Controls, Feaster Rewinds and Crescent Spotlight.

The panel board shown in one of the illustrations is an interesting example of the way a complicated system of control may be worked

In addition to the above installation, Joe Hornstein, manager of the Howells Cine Equipment Co., states that he has recently closed contracts for the projection equipment for four other theares in Brooklyn, the Sackman, Palace, Livonia and Glenwood.

The Important Part of the Laboratory in the Industry

Discussed by Tom Evans, Widely Known Laboratory Expert

Hypoing or Hypo

Hypo is a solution of hyposulphite of soda and water, with a preservative and hardener in to "clean up" or clear a developed negative or positive.

The hypo solution is used for the purpose of reducing the unexposed portions of silver in the negative or positive. To obtain the best results this solution should be made frequently so as to always keep a fresh bath in work. In some plants the hypo bath is allowed to stand so long that it becomes full of silver, which leaves smeary streaks all over the frame and plays the very mischief with the negative or positive.

Many people still make the mistake of using an excessive amount of hardening solution, generally used to harden the emulsion, or rather the gelatine, which is the basic portion of the emulsion. An excess of hardener has a tendency to make the film very brittle, thus weakening it and shortening its life. This excess will weaken the film in its weakest parts, viz.: the sprocket holes, with the result that when projected for a certain number of times it starts to break, then splits, and finally many feet of the ruined film are ripped out.

It is well to remember that a hypo solution that is not entirely fresh fails to properly clear up or clean the print, rendering it poor from a photographic point of view.

Washing

The purpose of washing each rack of negative or positive is to remove all hypo solution from the film. Effective washing can only be done in tanks of running water; the tanks fixed in such a way that the water runs in at the bottom, and with a strong enough pressure to wash from the bottom of the tanks upwards. This manner of washing will remove all traces of hypo. No such washings should be done in less than 15 minutes. Unfortunately there are too many washers imbued with the idea that to stick a rack of film into a wash tank, leave it there for a few minutes and then speed it on its way to the dry-room is all that is necessary for them to do. This careless and hasty method of washing film is bound to leave some hypo on it, which when finally dried shows a smeary streak. In time the streak sweats out of the emulsion, leaving a discoloration that picks up dirt very rapidly, and, further, has a dirty, blurred smudge on the rolls improperly washed. This is a form of crystallization which eventually will even cause the image to fade, as these crystallized spots will stain very badly. All water used for washing should be most thoroughly filtered.

Tinting

When a roll of film has been properly tinted the effect is pleasing to the eye. Tinting is an immersion in dye solution, which colors the gelatine giving an even color through its portions.

Irregular tinting seems to be a prevailing ill, for on the screens of the best theatres we see a great amount of "bleeding," as uneven tints are called. A part of the film is normal, another below normal, and still another very heavy.

A series of scenes of one degree of color, then the same scenes with another degree of color, either lighter or heavier, shows that the haphazard method of tinting has been employed. Guesswork will not fill the bill. To get good results each rack of film should be properly timed in the tinting solution, for in this manner alone proper immersion for tint desired may be obtained. Irregular tinting is also the result of improperly washed film after hypoing, for hypo weakens or destroys a dye bath.

The selection of tints and proper mixing are both very important factors.

Toning

Toning is the process of replacing, part or whole, the silver image of the film by a combination of chemicals, the clear portions or the highlights of the image remaining unaffected in a manner. The very essential part of properly mixing and handling the chemicals for a toning bath cannot be underestimated nor treated lightly, as a very slight amount of some foreign substance will throw the bath out of all proportion.

It is a fallacy to take a subject which calls for various tones, and time and develop the positive for a normal print just the same as an ordinary black and white. In order to get the best results, a positive to be toned for the respective tones should be time and developed to the correct density, as various toning baths will either reduce or intensify the resultant print.

Another essential factor is the absolute necessity of properly washing each rack free from hypo before toning, as the results from insufficient wash are most unsatisfactory. Sometimes the color will be irregular; a muddy or streaked image will be noticed, or, rather, a dirty-looking streaky scene; this is caused by unskilled manipulation of the film, poor handling of the bath and a general sloppy method at processing.

The laboratory that will keep a bath for a period longer than is necessary to obtain first-class results cheats itself as well as the producer. The producer does not get all that he is paying for, and the laboratory will ultimately lose patronage. Toning should be intrusted to

After the developing comes the important process of drying in which the huge revolving drums are used

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

the laboratory that knows how and has a conscience. To such no tones, nor combinations of tones with various tints, is difficult. To carefully and efficiently handle the various scenes and to give them just the proper, correct and artistic tones is indeed a labor of love.

Drying

Correct temperature in the dry-room is very essential to the durability of the film. Proper conditioning of the air is required. The air should be changed quite often, taking off all moisture, but not have it too dry, else the film dries too fast. Rapidly dried film causes brittleness, which weakens the texture of the stock. Drying should be done in from 35 to 45 minutes.

Some of the miserable work seen in some prints is directly traceable to an improperly conditioned dry-room, with unwashed floors, unclean drums, dust flying around and careless help. The well-appointed dry-room is kept spick and span at all times, with floor washed, mopped and washed again daily, drums washed and wiped regularly and frequently, and thorough exclusion of dust and dirt.

Assembling

In this branch laboratory work, poorly made splices will shorten the life of a reel of film. Careful splicing, insignificant though it may seem, does much for quality. A dirty, sloppy, smeared patch, or splice, is a blight, a thing not to be countenanced by any self-respecting superintendent of a plant.

This important department, wherein the plant's entire output is assembled for putting together the finished product, is generally in the hands of girls, who are adept at this kind of work, and who must be alert, clean and tidy. A good assembler does not even attempt to flirt with the shadow of carelessness. An innocent-looking broken splice will cause some worry to the theatre getting the reel, and probably lose to the producer a scene having some vital part of the story—a dramatic moment that often means much to the success of the picture.

Projection and Inspection

Each and every reel of film made in an up-to-date and conscientious laboratory is most thoroughly projected and inspected. This important work is done by highly trained and mentally alert film young men or women. The projectionist in a plant is considerably more than an ordinary operator. Like the inspector, he must be wholly conversant with the processing of film and be a judge of what constitutes quality work. Both the projectionist and the inspector should know the story of the picture upon which they sit in final judgment. They should be able to tell at a glance whether there is anything wrong with the continuity, and whether there is anything, however insignificant, missing or that is not exactly what it should be. The inspector makes a complete report on each and every reel; the defects, if any, are reprinted and the perfect print is then canned and made ready for shipment.

Changes in Cooper Hewitt Organization

Two changes have been effected recently in the district office organization of the Cooper Hewitt Electric Company, makers of Cooper Hewitt Lights.

The Philadelphia office force has been increased by the addition of two salesmen, and the force has moved into larger quarters in the Drexel Building.

The St. Louis district office has moved from the Central National Bank Building to the Title Guaranty Bank Building.

Kol Nidre (Bruch), for large, medium or small orchestra.

"The Desert Poem," by Felicien David (for a house with good orchestra situated near a store that is well stocked with unusual composition).

The film will be thoroughly acceptable, the atmosphere perfect with any of the above compositions, and there is no theatre but can find its music in this list.

However, it is my hope to indicate a more ambitious arrangement for those directors who have the time and the inclination to do the thoroughly unusual.

Thus, choosing any one of the above compositions as the atmosphere of this reel, it is possible to interpolate into the performance some bits that are very characteristic. (Play the principal composition, pausing for tthe interpolation and resuming the principal theme right to the end).

At title "He Had Neither Dressed His Feet"—run brief bit of any of the Yiddish folk-songs, such as "Oif'n Pripetschok," or "Der Mesinke," or "Samd un Stern."

Then, at the title, "So the Merchants and Sellers" insert brief bit of Zimbalist's "Hebrew Song and Dance."

At title, "Our Feet Are Standing Within Thy Gate"—run "The Song of Solomon" of Moussorgsky or "Elegie," of Massenet, or "Lamentation" of any kind in the minor mood.

At title, "Praise Waiteth for Thee, Oh, God," use the end of "Eili, Eili" (the climax of the music).

I should also like to hear the effect of chimes when the synagogue and temples appear.

. . . . Now, in the case of an audience essentially non-Jewish, I would recommend a change in the character of the music suggested.

Principal theme of the film—for the background all the time, use one of the following:

Cujus Animan from Rossini's Stabat Mater (for full orchestra or organ or piano), "The Palms" of Faure.

Handel's Largo (as violin and piano duet).

For special interpolations do as follows:

At title, "Lo, There Shall Come"—play a little of "Holy Night."

At title, "Let Them Bring" introduce from Messiah "Unto Us a Son Is Born."

At title, "For a Voice Is Wailing" introduce "Adeste Fideles."

Note.—Yiddish and Hebrew melodies are published by various houses in collections and for "Holy Night," etc., see Christmas catalogues.

In any event whether these present offerings are just right or not, I do not feel that my observation is unlogical.

The short-reel requires musical settings, and the makers of them should engage good musicians either to write original scores or highly intelligent musical indications or cue-sheets.

THE NEW MUSIC FORUM

I am happy to join. Herewith my check. Good luck.—Leonard Liebling, Editor Musical Courier.

I send you $2 to pay for dues. I am so glad this organization has been started. I am a singer.—Rubinstein Jones, Chicago.

Enclosed find $2, for which please enroll me as a member.—Fred Swarts, Musical Director, Cleveland, Ohio.

Am enclosing my check. Glad to join. I have done what you advised me in the January issue of the News. I went to Chicago and studied and am now in a little theatre getting real experience preparatory to taking a big job. Wishing you success in your wonderful undertaking.—J. D. Strawn, Midelburg Theatre, Logan, W. Va.

Enclosed find money order for one year's dues as a member. I read with great interest what The Billboard said about this, and I hope it will be a big success.—Prof. E. Barbay, Roanoke, Va.

I am immediately sending check covering dues for membership, for $10 to cover company for one year. You will perhaps be interested to learn that I have given instructions to give all the support possible through our columns to the new association, and you can count on the Billboard to do everything in its power to make the new movement a success.—I. M. McHenry, Editor Concert and Opera Department, The Billboard.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Your reply to my letter of inquiry regarding motion picture music received; also considerable information from the music houses to whom you referred. I appreciate this favor very much.

Today your special music supplement came. I have been intensely interested in the proceedings of this convention that has just closed, and am heartily in favor of its purposes. The idea of music scores for motion pictures particularly interests me. Such co-operation between film and music offers wonderful possibilities. I believe it will lift motion picture music to a higher plane than ever before.

With the opening of the new theatrical organ at the Auditorium here, I expect to feature one of the standard overtures at least once a week—as an organ prelude to the regular program. Where can I get outlines, analyses or stories relating to these overtures, such as "Poet and Peasant," "Semiramide" "Lustspiel," "Stradella," "Marriage of Tigaro," "William Tell," etc? My plan is to place these explanatory notes on the programs to stimulate the musical appreciation of the audiences.

I shall be very glad for any information you may give me.

WALLACE L. JOHNSON,

Holdrege, Neb.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Nothing too laudatory can be said of the musical conference of the Motion Picture News held at the Hotel Astor the latter part of January under your competent supervision. It has been my intention to write to you and express my pleasure at having been one of the pioneers in this initial musical gathering of the leading lights of the industry. Your letter of recent date is a reminder that this intention has lagged, chiefly because of pressing business matters and a slight indisposition.

There is no contradiction to the statement that music will play a big part in the motion picture art's triumphant progress onward. It is of invaluable assistance to a director oftentimes. And I firmly believe that the time will come when the director will supervise the actual preparation of a musical score to accompany his picture in its journeyings to the various theatres.

In the meantime our foremost exhibitors are doing their utmost to insure adequate presentation of photoplays by a suitable musical accompaniment, suitable to the forte of the pictures. Through your indefatigable efforts, the latent belief of every exhibitor—that a musical accompaniment in accord with the picture is absolutely essential—will be awakened. A new era will have dawned.

Music, besides insuring a picture's fair presentation, will also serve to arouse the people's interest in good music, not in the hideous player-pianos now in use in many of the smaller picture houses.

I trust you will always consider me a staunch co-operator in your work to link the motion picture industry closer together and to the people by means of music. Any further assistance I may be able to render you in this splendid work will be a pleasure.

With kindest personal regards,

ALBERT PARKER.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Last evening I took an hour off and read the special music supplement in honor of the first national conference of motion picture and musical interests. It impresses me as a comprehensive report which will convince those who were present and those who were not present that the conference was not a convention of mummies, but one of live interest and active work.

In all such cases he who has prepared a set speech has this great advantage over a participant who improvises some remarks—that his speech will be reported correctly, whereas the other man runs the risk of being not quoted correctly throughout. That will always happen in such cases, because even the best of reporters must condense things and is working under a stress. In my case the errors of the reporter are not serious. It goes without saying, of course, that I did not say that Schirmer has 1,000 branch stores. What I did say was that they had 12 branch stores, which is quite a difference, and your reporter is not the first to give me the office of Librarian in Congress instead of my real dues—namely, Chief of the Music Division of the Library of Congress. On the whole, your reporter condensed my remarks in a manner as to give at least the substance correctly.

I am sure that you look back with satisfaction on the conference, and you have every reason to be in that mood. Personally, I was glad to attend as often as I could, because I learned a lot of things that I did not know before.

G. SONNECK,
G. Schirmer, Inc.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I am happy to have your kind note and the special music supplement which is rich in splendid thoughts and suggestions on moving picture music. Many thanks for sending me this highly interesting paper.

Although my time is rather limited, I will endeavor to send you the desired comment in the near future. Meanwhile, let me most heartily congratulate you upon the splendid success of the conference. May it bear fruit in abundance. You have certainly started a splendid movement, not only for the good of those directly interested, but also for the public at large.

Thanking you again for your kindness,

J. D. EHRICHT,
North Tonawanda, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I have read the account of the conference and think it really a wonderful detailed report. The whole industry is indebted to you for your initiative in starting this thing going. The benefit to the industry from all points cannot be estimated, I believe, I wish I could have been there, but could not. However, your department of the News has certainly chronicled it in the best fashion imaginable.

HAROLD A. PRICE,
Greensburg, Pa.

Music Editor:

Owing to traveling, we have delayed answering your letter. We have thought a great deal about your musical conference, and we feel that the Motion Picture News is to be congratulated on this move on their part, which has been so ably carried forward by you. In our opinion, this is one of the most important movements that has been started since the inception of the motion picture industry. In closing, we wish to say that you are to be congratulated upon the wonderful work you have accomplished, and we trust that it may be carried forward with great success. If there is any assistance we can give you please do not hesitate to call on us.

Fears for Music's Debauching

Permit me to thank you for copy of the "Special Music Supplement," which has just come to hand. It is a faithful and valuable record of three memorable days, and bears such eloquent and splendid witness to your own initiative, tact and achievement that I may be excused from voicing my personal appreciation of a success so patent and unquestionable.

My presence at the conference needed no justification. I am identified with a music publishing house which has done notable pioneer work in issuing the book on "Musical Accompaniment of Moving Pictures," by Lang and West, and other material that goes far to show how keenly it desires the advancement of music in connection with the moving pictures. But I feel that this is not enough to explain my position and that I should say a little more about my reasons for attending your meetings.

I am not vitally concerned with sociological or philanthropic questions; I am not interested in "showmanship" or in the finding of new tricks and traps for the theatre organ; I am not even more than moderately bent upon the acquisition of riches, so that my attendance was not prompted by undue cupidity to share in the promises of a phenomenally lucrative business. I did not primarily come to your conference in order to learn what music could do for the pictures; I came to see what the pictures would do for music. And on that score I must confess my dire disappointment.

When it came to discussing purely musical matters I heard a number of things uttered which were evidently intended to be humorous and which deeply impressed me; I heard not a few thoughts proffered in all seriousness which roused my risibilities. But on the whole I was struck in the debates on musical topics (the only ones on which I would claim to speak with anything approaching authority)—I was struck, I say, with the unrelieved and turgid flow of common sense that poured from the lips of the speakers. There is nothing more formidable than common sense, and in large quantities it becomes obnoxious. Now, all the commonsense in the world has not yet produced one ounce of progress. It is the impractical man, the chided dreamers who are the real leaders of humanity. And the "handling" of dear, beloved music in connection with pictures was presented at the conference in such discouragingly practical ways that I have carried away from it a sense of alarm and apprehension which is responsible for my having the courage of thus unbosoming to you.

We were shown how, with baffling competence and skill, fat chunks can be taken from the glorious carcass of music, how they can be deftly carved, cooked up and served to suit almost any pictorial menu. That I was involuntarily led to compare the result of these adaptations to a novel cleverly composed of excerpts from Thackeray, Flaubert, Tolstoi, d'Annunzio and Ibanez, was probably due to my own perverse mentality. If I seem cynical or to be pandering to criticism I deserve rebuke. Carping criticism is sterile, and I should greatly like to give fertile and constructive counsel. In order to do this I venture to suggest that instead of spending so much time and money in trying to fit music to the pictures, some one, less practical, perhaps, but gifted with a more curious trend of mind, inquire into the possibilities of fitting pictures to music. After all, the majority of studio-made pictures is barren of the stuff with which our finest music teems; I mean poetry. Not until sex, crime and horseplay have conceded a larger part of the reel to poetry will music really "fit" the film. But it would seem that there are any number of musical compositions, of smaller and larger forms, predestined to be pictorially interpreted. The composers wrote them with dreams and pictures in their minds. Only in order to hold these dreams, to fix these pictures, the producer will have to secure the assistance, not of a dramatist and a director, but of a poet, of a person with poetic vision. Who knows but that poetry may become the most potent factor in redeeming the world today. The present interest in poetry is wide, and it is growing, especially here in America, where some of the best contemporary English verse is written, and where book publishers have made the startling discovery that poetry, good poetry, pays. Ask the Macmillan Company how many people are buying the poetic works of Edgar Lee Masters; let Houghton & Mifflin tell you how the imagery of Amy Lowell is selling in the book stalls. The ennobling and elevating influence of rare thought, finely expressed, is what the people, all the people, are likely to want ere long. Let then some one in the picture industry for once anticipate, and let it be a rehabilitation of music in connection with the pictures. For music may derive untold benefit from that connection. And here I come to the real reason for my interest in your brilliant campaign.

Music is at the threshold of great changes. Literature is always in the vanguard, then follow the graphic arts, at last comes music. It was so with Romanticism and Impressionism; it will be so with the next stage of artistic development. Now, music, ever since it became articulate, has been pressed into service by the stage. And whenever the stage remembered that it was time for reform music was the direct and permanent beneficiary from such reform. Without sweeping up clouds of historical dust, we need think only of Monteverde, Gluck and Wagner. With Strawinsky we have returned to the origin of all drama, the dance and pantomime, while music has rushed onward in bold and rapid flight. And now the pictures—what will they do for music? Does it seem so improbable that they should contribute, in a measure, to the creation of new types of music, iridiscent with a myriad fresh hues, of instruments, surpassingly pliant and subtly voiced, of composers and performers, capable of enchanting us with novel sorceries of sound?

But this will never happen so long as slices of tunes are superimposed on stretches of celluloid, or "special scores," are made to toss about musical motives and moods in order to follow the whims of the directing genius behind the camera. The moving pictures of the future will, of course, be as different from present shows, as will the music of day after tomorrow be from ours. A beginning in the right direction should be made with a poetically devised pictorial interpretation of entire musical compositions, classic as well as modern. Then you will be giving the people real music, and poetry into the bargain. Banish sensation and awaken the senses; shut out gimcrackery, and open wide the portals of imagination.

Yes, I must naively own, the hope of catching a faint glimpse of what pictures will do for the evolution of music—that was the secret reason for my presence at your conference. Although my hope was not fulfilled, I am not unduly disturbed. Such things take time. Music can well afford to take a great deal of it, while I have been already too presumptuous in taking so much of yours.

Believe me, my dear Mr. Isaacson, with cordial greetings, yours very sincerely, CARL ENGEL.

Barton Organ in Toledo Proves Popular

From L. H. Mason

The Barton Organ installed in the New World Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, is creating much favorable comment among exhibitors. This is the first Barton Organ to be located in the City of Toledo, and the beautiful tone quality of the instrument has established the World Theatre as prominent among the Ohio houses in a musical way.

The massive appearance of the console fully corresponds with the beautiful surroundings and impressive appearance of the World which is probably the finest and most beautifully appointed neighborhood theatre in the State of Ohio. The Barton Organ is installed at the left of the procenium arch and behind an especially constructed swell fold. The installation was handled with the architects by Mr. Barton, inventor of the Barton Organ, so that every detail of acoustics was an executed organ installation is apparent in the World Theatre for the musical rendition is far above the ordinary in motion picture pictures.

The instrument is built with an instrumentation of a complete symphony orchestra, even containing the oriental musical tones of a Corangula, an instrument which is used in only the largest of the country's symphony orchestras and a tone not familiar to the ordinary theatre goer.

Perhaps the greatest comment has been caused by the seemingly unlimited tonal effects which are handled from the Divided Manual which is a new invention and being used only on the Barton Organs. With this improvement each time the instrument is heard, it apparently is a different organ as the musical sounds vary at the will of the operator in endless variety. Without doubt the new possibilities presented by the Barton Divided Manual are a wonderful improvement in theatre organs.

The instrument is fitted with a complete outlay of Harps, Xylophones, Chimes, Bells, Bass Drum, Snare Drum, Storm, Crash and other effects. Mr. Fleischman, the proud owner of the World Theatre, spared no expense or money to make the new project the finest possible and the Barton Organ merits its place in such a wonderful theatre.

Theatres Use Synchronized Music Scores

A large number of leading theatres in Chicago and surrounding territory used the Synchronized Scenario Music scores, distributed in Illinois and Indiana by the Bushmint Company, of Chicago, in the presentation of "The Kid," and musical directors and organists were greatly pleased at the arrangement of the score and the way the cueing worked out, it is reported.

It is generally considered much more difficult to give an adequate musical setting to a comedy than to a dramatic feature and for this reason "The Kid" was a real test of the Synchronized Scenario Music Company's ability to furnish a satisfactory score, and the results of this practical test are said to have been most pleasing.

Arthur Kahn, director of music of the Covent Garden Theatre, who used the score on "The Kid," said, "I want to say that it is the best score that I have ever seen on any picture, am highly in favor of the service, and am anxiously awaiting for the next score and wish it would come soon as it relieves me of a great deal of worry and time trying to set a picture."

Paul Fairchild, of West End Theatre, said, "Something I have been looking for for a long time. It will be the salvation of many an orchestra."

Director Lustig, of the Michigan Theatre orchestra, said: "Without doubt the best thing that ever happened to any theatre that employs musicians. Great."

Among the big circuits and theatres which have already contracted through the Bushmint Company for Synchronized Scenario Music Company's service, are Lubliner & Trinz Theatres, Chicago; Ruben's Princess Theatre, Joliet; Harry Grampp's Theatres at Rockford and Galesburg; Hoyburn Theatre, Evanston; Quinby's Theatres, Fort Wayne, Indiana; Kedzie Annex, Chicago, and a long list of others.

Power's Camera Club Has Theatre Party

The Cameragraph Club with a membership taken chiefly from the shop heads of the Nicholas Power Company factory will hold its annual theatre party on March 26th. The club members and their wives will see "Happy Days" at the Hippodrome and afterwards adjourn to Shanley's for dinner. The Cameragraph Club was organized in 1914 by the shop foreman and assistants of the Power's plant and has given a number of very successful entertainments. The club is looking forward to the coming event with particular pleasure as it marks the return of Louis Merkin, president of the club and works manager of the Nicholas Power Company. Mr. Merkin was taken seriously sick shortly after returning home from the ball of Local 306 and the following day was taken to Mt. Sinai Hospital. It was found that Mr. Merkin had appendicitis and he was immediately operated upon. Mr. Merkin returned to work this week in splendid health and the Cameragraph Club is glad that it can hold its theatre party and celebrate Mr. Merkin's return at the same time. The officers of the Cameragraph Club are: Louis Merkin, President; Raymond Dengle, Vice-president; William Ellwood, Secretary and Treasurer; Ferdinand Elsbeck, Sergeant-at-Arms; Charles Wickerscheimer and Max Bauer, Entertainment Committee. Further details of the dinner will be given in the next issue of the NEWS.

Readers Applaud Bradford's Special News Cue Sheets

Last week's notice that James C. Bradford had concluded to place some of his pre-release cue-sheets for publication exclusively in the News was the cause of much rejoicing in many theatres, where the reputation of Bradford is a "houseword." Mr. Bradford is, though a very young man (still in his forties), of long experience. I can remember him when I was a little member of the orchestra of which he was assistant director and general executive. Then I played viola and he played piano and organ, and there were nearly a hundred in our organization.

From time to time I will have the privilege of presenting Bradford's cue-sheets on pre-releases. This, of course, does not change in any way the existing cue-sheet arrangement of our good friend Winkler, whose connection with the News is essential to the proper conducting of this music department.

Last week the Bradford cue-sheets were for "The Nut" and "The Swimmin'-Hole." Herewith we publish Bradford's indications on "East Lynne" and "What's a Wife Worth."

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Putting Nature Next"
(Chester-Outing-Educational)

HERE'S a rattling good one reeler on the Filipino his habits and a few of the principal things he does in order to gain his livelihood.

The reel is very compact and certainly covers a deal of ground from its opening views, which show the natives in their home surroundings climbing the palm trees and cutting the branches, which they make into hats and dresses for the women.

When the native woman feels the want of a new dress, she betakes herself to the back yard or the woods and in a very short time cuts the desired tree, which is conveyed to the proper place, where with the means of a native device the tissues are drawn through until the fiber suits her purpose. It takes some time to perform these operations and the scenes which show the process are interesting to say the least.

When the head of the family needs a new hat all he has to do is to take his axe and depart into the woods, select his favorite branch, climb to its resting place, and after a little chopping, his hat is in the first stages of the making. It is the women, however, who do the weaving and after a few weeks the hat begins to take its shape and after a few more the wonderful head covering is completed.

The town of Cebu is also shown with its market place where the populace gather to dispose of their wares. For interest a good cock fight is introduced together with many other incidentals, which are sure to attract the eye of the spectator.

The closing scenes show the native boy searching for clam shells upon the beach, which when gathered are cut into squares and used as window glass. There is a disadvantage to this sort of window, however, for although one on the outside cannot peer into the home of a resident, the resident himself cannot peer out. But the women do not seem to object to this sort of treatment as many of the views show. The reel is a good one from an interesting and educational point of view.

FRANK LEONARD.

"The White Horseman"
(Universal—Art Accord—First Episode of Serial)

WE only saw the first episode of this serial and as a result cannot pass judgment as to the remaining seventeen. However, if the other episodes contain as much mystery and are filled with as much action and Art Accord does his usual stunts it should give good satisfaction.

Judging from the first chapter the story should be filled with the mystery element and of the kind that is bound to keep an audience thinking.

Wayne Allen, a young Westerner, is willed a section of apparently worthless land. This land is occupied by squatters, two twin brothers.

One of the men finds a bracelet of ancient workmanship on which is a line of picture writing which when translated leads the two brothers to the base of some mysterious mountains where they discover a system of underground mine workings evidently the property of some now extinct race of Indians. The bracelet also proves to be a key that opens a cliff and exposes the entrance to the mines.

And right here let us say that the mountain set is made and arranged so that at a signal the two sides open up or draw away from each other—a clever piece of work.

After many scenes in the tunnels of the mountains, a chest of blue opals is discovered by one of the twins. As they are passing along the face of a cliff Sam, unable to dissuade his brother from declaring the truth to the owner of the ranch, shoves him from the cliff and leaves him for dead.

From here on the tempo develops fast and furious with Accord doing plenty of hard riding and nipping in the bud the work of the "White Spiders," a gang of cut-throats who live in the hills near by, and who are trying to secure the whereabouts of the cave in which the jewels are hidden. For they have previously captured Sam Ramsey and secured the jewels in his possession.

As we said above, we only saw the first episode of this serial. It looks good to us.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Society Snobs"
(Conway Tearle—Selznick)

CONWAY TEARLE came near scoring a double triumph in this production, for he is author and leading player in one of the best Selznicks we've seen.

The story, which is up to date in every sense, starts off with a bang and continues so up to the last reel, when it slows up and ends rather abruptly. And it is this ending which prevents Tearle from scoring with both barrels.

In the opening reels and in fact throughout the picture, the star is sure of himself in every scene and gives a thoroughly convincing performance.

His role is that of a waiter at the Ritz, who has become infatuated with a beautiful society girl. In the opening scenes his forlorn look, as he gazes hopelessly across the dining room at the one he loves, is really touching. And then when opportunity comes and he meets the girl, he retains his poise, never over-acting.

The meeting is brought about in a rather novel way. A former lover is thrown down because he is not loved by the girl and is unknown socially. In revenge he seeks the waiter whom he has observed watching the society bud, induces him to pose as a nobleman, against his will, and secures the introduction.

From here on the story runs along smoothly, the couple falling in love with the usual result—marriage.

A strong scene occurs, when on the wedding night the groom refuses to enter his bride's chamber, confesses his guilt and returns with her to the family. Although her folks are obdurate, the young bride follows her husband, the finish showing the usual close-up.

The production is well directed by Hobart Henley and has a splendid cast including Martha Mansfield, who is delightful in the leading feminine role, Huntley Gordon, Ida Darling, George Stuart and Kathryn Parry.—FRANK LEONARD.

"A Crazy Idea"
(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—One Half Reel—Fox)

THIS is simply another Mutt and Jeff cartoon which will give fair amusement and no more. Mutt and Jeff are playing ball and get in trouble with the police, or rather a policeman. Some good chase scenes follow. When captured, things look bad for Jeff until Mutt conceives the idea of telling the officer that the little fellow is crazy, and that he (Mutt) is his keeper. The scheme seems in danger of failing lamentably when the cop insists upon seeing to it that the little fellow is safely placed inside of the asylum. Jeff is apparently doomed to a straight-jacket existence, but it develops that the policeman himself is an escaped lunatic, and the pair collect the reward of one thousand dollars for his recapture.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Burglars Bold"
(Vanity Fair Comedy-Pathe)

"BURGLARS BOLD" is a very fair attempt to exploit the Vanity Fair Girls in a new way. This time the girls are very much "het up" because of a burglar scare and when the principal comedian, Eddie Boland, takes it into his head to impersonate a burglar and chase the fair ones about the house there is plenty of action but that is all.

When Eddie corners the beauties and takes their valuables, the action stops but is quickly beating again when one of the girls decides to play burglar herself.

The star has quite a few scenes with the young lady which ends in both being hit on the head with pieces of bric-a-brac.

There isn't very much to this comedy. It will amuse, however, if one cares to view the pretty girls in the latest lingerie.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Goat"

(Buster Keaton Comedy—Metro—Two Reels)

BUSTER KEATON is making a noise that can be heard from New York to Frisco with his comedies. This slapstick comedian has entered the select circle because his offerings are unusually rich in humor. Whether Buster or someone else is responsible for the rich display of gags, all of which are more or less original, cannot be told, but whoever he is—well, he is putting Buster over. There is study back of these comedies. Such a clever bag of tricks could not be thought up on the spur of the moment. It strikes us that Buster looks over some rival attractions and says to himself— "I can improve on that stuff." And he does it.

"The Goat" is nothing but gags—but what a display! Back of it all is the grand chase—an old idea by the way, but the star keeps it moving so fast and provides so much laughter that one has no time to realize that the premise is antique. He wears that baggy suit and a sour expression—an expression that can be called nothing else but "dumb-bell," and tumbles and runs and throws himself about with the utmost abandon. He keeps moving. And so do the gags. They come fast and furious and funny. Each one seems to outdo the other in offering the spectator a good time. It is a comedy so richly supplied with hokum and tricks that titles are almost eliminated. Which goes to show that it just about hits the top-mark.

The richest gag of all shows Buster evading his foil by "butting into" a sculptor's party. A group of artists are about to look over a masterpiece. The screen is lifted and there sits the comedian as big as life a-top Man o' War, the title of the statue. The funny part of it is the fact that the clay is still soft and the horse gradually sinks to the base under Buster's weight. This bit will be appreciated in loud guffaws in any theatre. It comes with such a sudden surprise. This is only a sample of the original effort expended here. Keaton deserves electric light display along with the feature attraction. He is liable to walk away with the honors. Certainly he offers twenty minutes of great fun in "The Goat."—LAURENCE REID.

"Blue Sunday"

(Lyons and Moran—Universal)

UNIVERSAL never produced a better two reeler than this one, which fairly sparkles with incident and comedy situations.

And it isn't the stars who are responsible for all the hilarity, but the story or idea which attempts to point out what would happen if the blue laws came into effect.

The author has given Lyons and Moran plenty to do as the two wiseacres who invent all sorts of schemes to fool the police, only to end up in the stocks as a penalty for their misbehavior.

The opening scenes show Moran in his home sneeking about and endeavoring with the aid of mechanical devices to spend a quiet Sunday. The telephone is hidden in an unsuspecting place and when the young husband wants a drink he unfastens the electric light bulbs, presses a button and out comes the delightful fluid.

The situations here are very humorous, but are not any funnier than the appearance of the set which is draped in black and this includes the clock, the pictures on the walls, etc., etc. When the scenes shift to Lyons, we see the young "feller" with a smile on his face opening what at first appears to be the Bible. When the cover is thrown back, we discover that the young man has a sweet tooth and that the "bible" is a receptacle for ice cream, which he eats with a knowing wink.

From here on the comedy situations are too numerous to mention, one in particular, the police leaving the station house in a long file, wearing black ministerial hats and marching in prayer formation, being exceedingly funny.

Although "the play's the thing," Lyons and Moran come in for their share of the applause and are past masters in the art of "sneeking about."

Don't be afraid to book this one, for it is one of the best comedies of the year.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Wedding Blues"

(Christie Comedy—Educational)

THE matrimonial farces which are being offered under the Christie banner may be called the most entertaining in the comedy field. This may be due to experimenting upon the part of the sponsors until they have achieved something well night perfect. Certainly the Christie people have been presenting these studies of honeymoons and courtship long enough to be able to give them the right touches. The pieces invariably revolve around a quartette of honeymooners or sweethearts, the mix-up providing the conflict or humor or what you want to call it. "Wedding Blues" sparkles with considerable high lights of a most amusing order. There are no lapses. No padding is visible, because what takes place could really happen, if one excuses certain exaggerations, incorporated to emphasize the humor.

At the Rivoli, New York, the comedy kept the crowded house in a good deal of an uproar. The plot revolves around a personable daughter of proud and wealthy parents who wants to elope with the man of her choice. To engineer the scheme, a mutual friend is called in and father mistrusts that he is the fellow who would steal his daughter. The schemer has his troubles in another direction too. His fiance places a wrong conclusion on the elopement. Neal Burns, as the mutual friend, gives the spectator a good time when he tries ways and means to get the daughter out of her own house. He is ejected by a quartette of lackeys who are drilled in deportment, but he comes up smiling and succeeds. Eventually father discovers that the real lover of the girl is the very man he has wanted for a son-in-law.

Most of the fun is derived from the party being given at the girl's home. It keeps moving with good incident and the titles are pithy and to the point. Christie has spent some money to keep the comedy in its proper groove. There is very little effort at slapstick. Indeed it is an offering which carries sufficient humor in itself without having to rely upon broad touches. Assisting Mr. Burns are Earl Rodney, Helen Darling and Vera Steadman. All are endowed with enough pep and color to make a courtship or honeymoon a slice of adventure. Length 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"You Find It Everywhere"

(Outlook-David P. Howells—States Right)

IT IS a very elastic title which covers this five-reel feature adapted from Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson's magazine story, "The Gibson Upright." It can be applied here to cover the romantic note or emphasize the age-old conflict of capital versus labor. It is our opinion that the original title is more expressive of the contents of the story which revolves around the conduct of a piano factory. A self-made father has built up his plant by sheer pluck and energy and when he dies he leaves the property mostly to his son, although some faithful employers are listed as stockholders. The continuity is quite ragged in places although the idea is easy to follow.

The action develops a counter plot which revolves around the romantic conflict. The son has fallen in love with his secretary who is pledged to marry one of the workmen. And she is constantly in distress whether to accept the latter's selfish love or give up her heart to her employer. There are a number of sub-counterplots which keep the situations from being compact. One of them shows a scheming dowager determined to marry her daughter to the hero. The scenes in which they are presented are absolutely worthless as far as advancing the action is concerned and most of them are quite ridiculous. Finally goaded to desperation the young manufacturer offers to retire from the factory and give his complaining stockholders a chance to prove that they know more about conducting the business. They make a sorry mess of it in scenes which tend to become ridiculous because of the introduction of the ignorant wives of the equally ignorant stockholders.

There is a bid for the dramatic which offers an interesting climax when the plant is in danger of being blown to pieces with some dissatisfied workmen. In the end love triumphs and all is well. The picture carries great possibilities were some of its extraneous scenes eliminated. A little cutting and editing, here and there, will make this a first class feature. Certainly it is well fortified with good acting although several of the players suffer from over-direction. The atmosphere is real and the action despite some irrelevant scenes is productive of a good measure of suspense. The exhibitor who books it can attract his customers by exploiting the names of the authors and the principle members of the cast. Certainly one must commend the effort to make it realistic. Length 5 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Lone Indian"

(Post-Scenic—One Reel)

THERE is a tribal custom with the Indians who dwell in the upper reaches of Quebec which entitles them to send their young braves into the wilderness, where, thrown into contact with nature and its vast silences, they may learn how to develop their personalities in a manner befitting hardy and courageous warriors. This custom only applies to those who lack a certain ruggedness or inability to cope with nature and its elements. It is a quaint custom—one which has a touch of poetry attached to it and presented upon the screen with marvelously beautiful scenery, it is nothing short of inspiring.

The young buck is sent into the wilderness with only a gun, a canoe and his own thoughts to provide company. He cannot return until he has thoroughly mastered woodcraft, the knack of protecting himself and developed the art of being a brave. This captivating idea certainly gets over with some of the most enchanting backgrounds ever caught by a cameraman. The photography is excellently tinted. The green woodlands, the silvery waters as the moonlight silhouettes the lone Indian in his canoe, the canyons, the mountains, the fir trees—these spell a grandeur which is magnificent. The silences are impressive. The lonely figure has communion with nature. He hunts, fishes, and paddles his canoe with no companionship aside from the vistas of the big outdoors. "The Ione Indian" is certainly a tone poem.—LAURENCE REID.

"THREE SEVENS"
(Vitagraph)

Unusual Plot Carries Quite a Punch

IT has been some time since Antonio Moreno appeared in a feature picture, but his reappearance in a five-reeler is occasion to say that he has his eye upon the unusual story. "Three Sevens" may be melodramatic and therefore improbable in theme and impossible in execution, but there is no denying that it will make people sit up and take notice. Perley Poore Sheehan has conceived a theme here which has considerable "uplift" quality about it. He has attempted to solve in a melodramatic way the utopian scheme of regenerating the criminal classes by inoculating them with a sense of honor. And he has measured his dramatic ingredients against the notes of pathos, sentiment and romance in such a compact manner that the story holds the interest despite the incredible theme and characterization.

There is no planting of the figures or preachy or descriptive titling for the introduction. Instead the picture starts with a bang and keeps up a constant popping of fireworks until near the conclusion when one may admit the force has spent itself. Moreno has come back to the feature with a serial outlook. Which is to say that he acts with enthusiasm and injects a deal of dynamic energy. He is railroaded to prison on circumstantial evidence, the outcome of a murder charge. During his incarceration he conceives a plan to place his fellow convicts on a plane of honor. Which he does by effecting a general jail delivery. It is a thrilling scene and smacks of the genuine thing. The guards are overpowered and are compelled to exchange uniforms, and the convicts are hustled into the assembly room where each undergoes a trial before Moreno as the judge and a jury of "trusties."

It is really novel if a bit improbable. There are five hardened criminals who do not deserve freedom, but who take it. And this is occasion to introduce the romantic element. The heroine is the daughter of the new warden who believes in an honor system, and she induces the hero to urge the men to return so that they may abide by her father's utopian scheme. The melodramatic note continues when Moreno starts in pursuit of the vicious criminals whom he rounds up in thrilling fashion. That the picture is obvious never enters the spectator's mind so fraught with action and incident are the various scenes. "Three Sevens" provides a good moral and really has something to say aside from its entertaining points. The details, the atmosphere, the acting—these are complete and make the picture appear more convincing than its plot warrants. Bull Montana and Edward Brady make a picturesque pair of crooks. The extras are great types. "Three Sevens" gets away from the usual angle of crook plays and if it carried no virtue other than its originality, that quality is enough to provide a novelty to picturegoers fed up with regulation stuff.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Antonio Moreno in the role of a daring and dashing hero of a thrilling melodrama will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. The picture is entitled "Three Sevens," and is adapted from Perley Poore Sheehan's vital story of the same name. It is a tale of terrific struggles against a bitter fate and involves the leading character in a maze of circumstantial evidence. It is a most unusual picture this "Three Sevens," a picture replete with thrills, a strong love interest, a vital breath of humanity, adventure, and crisp melodrama.

It tells the story of a youth unjustly imprisoned, with fate playing against him. He was convicted and sentenced to serve twenty years in prison, where he became No. 777. Escaping, he brought about a general jail delivery of nearly all the convicts—including five hardened and dangerous criminals, whom he had not intended to turn loose. Inspired by his love for a brave and beautiful young woman, he resolves to devote his life to recapturing the five outlaws and effecting an agitation leading toward prison unlift. The picture is strong in every scene and is well acted and staged. Included in the cast are Emmett King, Jean Calhoun, Edward Brady, De Witt Jennings and Beatrice Burnham.

PROGRAM READER

Circumstantial evidence caused the arrest of Daniel Craig for murder. He became known as "Three Sevens," or No. 777. He contrived a general scheme for a general jail delivery, but he held court within the prison walls to determine which of the convicts were fit to freedom. By a twist of circumstances a number of hardened criminals were released. So it devolved upon Craig to devote his life to recapturing them. How he did it—how he found a Utopia eventually which gave the convicts a sense of honor—how he found romance and regeneration is told in "Three Sevens," a picture which is certain to create a sensation because of its unusual theme. "Three Sevens" will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— with Antonio Moreno as the star. He is supported by a competent cast. The picture is adapted from Perley Poore Sheehan's fascinating story.

CATCH LINES

Have you ever been the victim of circumstantial evidence? Do you believe in circumstantial evidence? See Antonio Moreno in "Three Sevens," the most unusual picture of the year.

Did you ever hear of a romance inside prison walls? Is harsh and brutal treatment the best means of dealing with convicts? These questions are answered in "Three Sevens."

"THE SMART SEX"
(Universal)

Rather Frail But Pleases in a Mild Fashion

THE latest attraction in the Eva Novak gallery of pictures may be said to furnish mild entertainment. Being of the program variety there has been no expenditure of money to put it over. The star has a pleasing personality which conquers the spectator because she is natural and possesses some charm. These graces more than offset an emotional display which Miss Novak is wise enough to keep from expressing. She sort of lives up to the title, even though it is valueless here in indicating any superiority of her sex over the other in terms of quick intelligence. The star is smartly costumed, however, and by attracting attention to her wardrobe, the director has erred in making his characterization consistent.

The heroine is a stranded trouper who, when she puts on an act on amateur night in a college town, is so favorably received by the undergraduate gentry in general and a conspicuous collegian in particular, that she is able, thenceforth, to keep the wolf from the door. This is done by the youth inviting her to work for a farmer who lives in close proximity to his home. The story is practically plotless and relies on a series of mild incidents which score because exaggeration does not enter into them. When the action indicates that it might flop through its paucity of punch, the author or director has recourse to a bit of melodrama. The hero takes up his abode at the farm after an argument with his father and when the latter seeks an explanation the youth announces his engagement. The big scene is a reception at the rich father's home which shows the hero completely reconciled.

It will surpise some how the heoine is able to bedeck herself in the latest modes on a servant salary—unless they draw the conclusion that she salvaged her wardrobe trunk from her trouping experience. The director makes a bid for suspense by involving the entire household and several servants in a jewel theft. First one then the other is suspected, but all are absolved from blame when the real culprit is caught—a rank outsider. The interest is held because the action keeps moving from one incident to another. Miss Novak holds a scene with some farm atmosphere. A pet goose comes in for some shots. And other incidents are brought forth by concentrating upon the hero and his family. It is a picture without continuity. Yet it doesn't need any. Having no thread of plot it depends entirely on its incident. "The Smart Sex" may be frail but its snappy title and its personable star should attract the picturegoer. He will be pleased if he accepts it lightly.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The story of a show girl who leaves a stranded troupe with her trick goose and steps into a series of serio-comic adventures which lead to a dramatic climax out of which she finds love and happiness is offered in "The Smart Sex," the latest Universal feature starring Eva Novak. The picture will be presented at the ———— on ———— of ———— week. Miss Novak has appeared in a number of interesting photoplays, two of which, namely, "The Torrent" and "Society Secrets," have established a following for her. The star possesses an attractive personality which conquers the spectator. With a knowledge of dramatic situation, and possessing a charm of manner, she is able to fascinate the picturegoer.

"The Smart Sex" enables her to appear as a modern, resourceful girl, who is able to cast aside misfortune because of her belief in human nature and happiness. When the show is stranded, Miss Novak as the heroine walks the railroad ties to a neighboring town. In order to obtain money she takes part in an amateur benefit and wins the coveted prize. Her act is so novel that she wins the good graces of a youth who is instrumental in finding her employment on a farm near his father's estate. In the course of time she wins over his parents and becomes the bride of the youth. The picture is rich in human touches and quaint humor and is ably acted.

PROGRAM READER

Do you belong to the smart sex? Is the feminine sex and smart sex? If so, is it because of a woman's quick intuition, her keen perceptions, her desire to appear well dressed, her aim to outshine her rivals in appeal? It doesn't take any imagination to realize that Eva Novak belongs to the smart sex. She is smart in attire—smart in the keen intelligence which lights up her expression—smart in her mannerisms. Miss Novak is refreshingly smart. The popular Universal star comes to the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Smart Sex," a picture of a maid, a man, and a trained goose. It is a picture which deals out plenty of humorous adventure, a pleasant romance and absorbing drama. Come and be royally entertained.

EASY ROAD, THE (PARAMOUNT) THOMAS MEIGHAN.....FEB. 26
"Rather mild for Thomas Meighan."—M. P. News.

EDUCATION OF ELIZABETH, THE (PARAMOUNT) BILLIE BURKE .....FEB. 26
"Billie Burke has real opportunities in polite comedy."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Women came to see Billie and the gowns. Did better than expected, as she has not done well at all of late." "A fair picture. Nothing extraordinary. Average business." "One of the star's best, but it only drew fair business."
Consensus—"Average picture, average puller."

EMPIRE OF DIAMONDS, THE (PERRET-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST) .....DEC. 25
"A splendid production given mystery story."—M. P. News.

EXTRAVAGANCE (METRO) MAY ALLISON.....MAR. 5
"Interest dulled by a too lengthy picture."—M. P. News.

FIGHTING STRANGER, THE (CANYON PICTURES-STATE RIGHTS) FRANKLYN FARNUM.....JAN. 29
"Selig produces another thriller, with Franklyn Farnum."—M. P. News.

FIRE CAT, THE UNIVERSAL) EDITH ROBERTS.....FEB. 12
"Edith Roberts scores in Carmenesque role."—M. P. News.

FIRST BORN, THE (HAWORTH-ROBERTSON-COLE) SESSUE HAYAKAWA .....FEB. 12
"A title, heart interest and Hayakawa's acting should attract them."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"By far the best picture that Sessue Hayakawa has ever made. It is a true conception of Oriental life."

FLAME, THE (STOLL FILM-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 5
"A good production with foreign setting."—M. P. News.

FLAME OF YOUTH, THE (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON.....DEC. 18
"A pleasing, simple romance with Shirley Mason."—M. P. News.

FLYING PAT (NEW ART-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) DOROTHY GISH .....JAN. 1
"Fairly pleasing offering with Dorothy Gish."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fair picture. Business very good." "Just average box-office results, though the picture is quite good."

FORBIDDEN FRUIT (DE MILLE-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST..FEB. 5
"De Mille scores another ten strike; a great audience picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Elaborately produced and entertaining production that went over for a two week run to capacity business." "Fine picture that drew enormous crowds during opening week of this theatre." "They were terribly disappointed with this. Did not think it lived up to 'Something to Think About' and 'Why Change Your Wife?'" "Broke the attendance record. Greatly talked about. Continued for a second week." "This picture drew well and brought excellent business." "Held over a second week to excellent crowd. Pleased everyone who saw it." "DeMille's pictures always draw immense crowds. This was proved interesting, but not startling. Patrons like the atmosphere of affluence which permeates these pictures. Constantly large attendance." "This one packed the house every performance. A very fine entertaining picture and patrons seemed well pleased." "A fairly good picture with business about as usual." "Drew a capacity house all week. Considered one of the best attractions that has been produced in months." "Very good. The people came the first day in response to wide advertising and they told their neighbors it was a good picture." "A very good picture. Handicapped by strong opposition."

FOUR HORSEMEN, THE (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....MAR. 5
"Marvelous production reaches the heights of picture art."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Packed them in on this one. People curious to see it. Great box office attraction."

FRISKY MRS. JOHNSON, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) BILLIE BURKE .....JAN. 8
"Play seems old-fashioned as picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Typical Burke picture, very pleasing, fair business due to holidays." "Just plain trash—it's a pity a good star and real money are expended on such drivel." "Average business. No new angles throughout the entire five reels. Photography and direction good, cast fair, but story weak from being overworked." "Had poor business with this one for entire week." "Very trashy and silly. Audience hardly enthused. Business only fair."

FRONTIER OF THE STARS, THE (PARAMOUNT) THOMAS MEIGHAN.....JAN. 22
"Interesting story of a crook's redemption."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture which brought more than usual business." "Very entertaining feature which the popularity of Thomas Meighan with our patrons helps to put over in good shape. Did excellent business." "Thomas Meighan always draws well for me and this picture was no exception. Business was fair and comments on the picture showed interest, though not the enthusiastic applause of the other pictures which I have played with this star." "Meighan is a great favorite here and will always pack a house. This vehicle is satisfactory, but a startling winner." "Picture pleased generally and drew well. Business fine." "Not up to Meighan's standard. His own work excellent, but support poor and not worthy of him. Business good, for Meighan is a great drawing card for me." "This one went over big and continued so during run. Audiences well pleased with the story." "Thomas Meighan always sure box office winner at this house and this picture, clean and wholesome throughout, was enjoyed by every one."

GILDED LILY, THE (PARAMOUNT) MAE MURRAY.....MAR. 19
"Mae Murray's latest is a winner."—M. P. News.

GIRL OF MY HEART (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON.....DEC. 18
"Star fails to enliven very dull story."—M. P. News.

GIRL WITH THE JAZZ HEART, THE (GOLDWYN) MADGE KENNEDY .....JAN. 8
"Madge Kennedy plays two roles exceptionally well."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This was a corker. I think it the best thing Madge Kennedy has yet done. They all liked it, and I played to capacity houses all week." "Nothing great about this but title is catchy and Madge Kennedy has a following. Result—good houses." "Madge Kennedy has considerable drawing power here. Her picture is not strong but our people liked it."

GODLESS MEN (BARKER-GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 12
"Unpleasant story depending on acting and unusual twist to story."—M. P. News.

GOD'S GOOD MAN (STOLL FILM CORP.) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 26
"A poor production from all angles."—M. P. News.

GREAT ADVENTURE, THE (BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE.....JAN. 22
"More interesting via the printed page."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not as good as some Barrymore pictures but enjoyed and full houses resulted." "A treat for those who like a good time. House was in a chuckle all the time. Good business. Steady all week."
Consensus—"Good picture, average puller."

GREATER CLAIM, THE (METRO) ALICE LAKE.....FEB. 19
"Alice Lake scores in ordinary story."—M. P. News
Exhibitor Comment—"Average production. Business good for the first three days."

GUILE OF WOMEN, THE (GOLDWYN) WILL ROGERS.....MAR. 12
"Rogers, good story and clever titles make this fine entertainment."—M. P. News.

HEARTS ARE TRUMPS (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 11
"A complex melodrama very well produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"There is nothing startling about this production. Ranks about average."

HEARTS UP (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....JAN. 1
"Harry Carey has satisfying offering here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This picture is a good bet. Audiences seemed very much pleased with it and business was fine."

"A different picture here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the season's finest pictures, in my estimation—and my opinion backed up by the fact that it played to capacity business in a house seating twenty-seven hundred. Consider it an excellent production from every angle." "A good picture but did not draw well at my house." "Splendid production. Well liked by audience. Did capacity business during its entire run." "Excellent. The patrons of this theatre filled the house at each performance every day for the entire week." "Broke all records for two years as the poorest drawing card. One million per cent. overrated and 1,000,000 per cent oversold picture. Otherwise a good picture with none of the muchly promised Hearst free advertising, even an extra $700 advertising appropriation could not put it over." "Thoroughly nice picture. Ought to go with most any kind of an audience."

HER FIRST ELOPEMENT (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....JAN. 29
"Inconsequential and too vapid for feature length."—M. P. News.

HER HUSBAND'S FRIEND (INCE-PARAMOUNT) ENID BENNETT.JAN. 29
"Rather hectic in spots, but keeps the interest."—M. P. News.

HER BELOVED VILLAIN (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....DEC. 18
"French farce adaptation that falls short in American requirements."—M.P. News.
Exhbitor Comment—"A good picture to average business three days."

HIS OWN LAW (J. PARKER READ-GOLDWYN) HOBART BOSWORTH .....FEB. 12
"Trite story makes poor screen material."—M. P. News.

HOLD YOUR HORSES (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE).....FEB. 5
"Comedy titles and good incident make this fine entertainment.—M. P. News.

HUNDREDTH CHANCE, THE (STOLL-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST...JAN. 8
"Familiar story is well picturized."—M. P. News.

HUSH (GARSON-EQUITY) CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG.....JAN. 29
"Interesting picture on a familiar theme."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big picture, box office receipts increasing each day." "Somewhat different to the usual Young pictures, but pleased about fifty-fifty. Consider it her best, but my patrons didn't agree with me. She was not as pretty as usual, but far more interesting." "Very fine picture which should go over well wherever Clara Kimball Young is liked. Bad weather cut down our attendance below average during week's run." "We thought picture up to Clara Kimball Young's standard but played to poor business for week which we attribute to bad weather."

"THE GARDEN OF RESURRECTION"
(Stoll)

Poor Direction Makes This One Mediocre

THERE doesn't appear to be the slightest semblance of direction in this latest Stoll release. Whatever the original story contained in the shape of entertainment has not been caught in the picture version. It does not stand on very firm ground if one may take it at its face value. Yet there is indication of a good idea gone wrong. Guy Newall, who can act in a very capable manner, has certainly failed as a director. And the responsibility is his for turning out a picture which only stands a chance on double feature day. His groupings are bad and he has erred in a technical way throughout. But technicalities aside, it is his effort to add a punch which destroys the dramatic framework.

The idea is practically colorless and generates very little action until the concluding reels. Newall plays a sympathetic figure who indulges in inferiority complexes. He worships a memory of a faint romance, but condemns himself so much throughout the story that the pathos invites bathos. The heroine reenters his life conveniently but dismisses him. At this point the picture carries a dramatic touch which, were it developed properly, would have spelled first rate entertainment. The romancer returns home to brood but destroys the spectator's sympathy by his childish conduct. He throws himself on the floor, hugs his dog, or crushes a flower or stares in a saddened manner at the camera. When he is about to do something rash the heroine enters his home, attired in a most bedraggled fashion. The title writer makes her ridiculous by having her exclaim—"I need some money; I must pay for my room." She has been the victim of a mock marriage. Here is where Newall seems to be at a loss as how to develop the sequence.

The picture falters because of its anti-climax. The hero seems to be afraid of servant gossip for he tells his landlady—"I don't know what your morals are, but the lady upstairs is my wife." This is a sample of the titling—titling which robs more than one incident of its logic or charm or color. It strikes us that it is none of the servant's business how the master conducts himself. The director contributes some faulty detail here which is entirely out of place. Between the walking around and posing in front of the camera in the first few reels and the bid for melodramatic play in the latter reels, the picture has a difficult time being consistent and convincing. The heroine has her child and when it dies she goes out of his life. Which is occasion for some more self-pity until the final clinch brings forth the happy ending. The redeeming feature is the atmosphere which is supplied by some picturesque exteriors. Yet the English fog makes some of them valueless in point of appeal.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Scenario by Guy Newall.
Directed by Guy Newall.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A photoplay of romance and disillusionment is "The Garden of Resurrection," adapted and directed by Guy Newall from E. Temple Thurston's compelling story of the same name. The picture will be presented at the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with a cast that includes Mr. Newall, Ivy Duke and Douglas Munro. The story revolves around Bellairs, who considers himself the ugliest and loneliest man in the world. He holds a happy memory of a girl who ushered in a moment of romance. Wondering if he will ever see her again, he overhears a conversation in a restaurant in which he learns that she is living in close proximity as the wife of the man who is doing the talking.

Bellairs believes that a twist of fate has brought them together and he immediately seeks her out in order to renew his romance. But Clarissa repulses him and, deeply chagrined, he returns home to brood over his pathetic loneliness. Eventually she learns that Bellairs is right and joins him. She is an outcast and utterly penniless, a condition due to placing trust in her supposed husband. In reality she is the victim of a mock marriage. When a child is born Bellairs declares to his friends that Clarissa is his wife and his generosity is sufficient to effect a reconciliation. The picture is marked for its fine atmosphere which is brought out in picturesque backgrounds.

SUGGESTIONS

This Stoll attraction is based on a well known novel. So play up the author's name. It may be that many of your patrons are familiar with the book. You can print excerpts of the pages for advertising and you can also link up with your bookdealer for a sale on the book. The title is attractive. It can be utilized in an exploitation scheme. Tell that the picture abounds with dramatic scenes and situations and that it is enacted against a wealth of picturesque backgrounds. Play up that it is a human document of a figure who considered himself the loneliest and ugliest figure on earth. If you played "The Lure of Crooning Water" your patrons will remember the work of Guy Newall and Ivy Duke. Tell that these celebrated players appear in the production. We would advise that you run another feature to give the program a balance.

"PARTNERS OF THE TIDE"
(Willat-Hodkinson)

Entertaining Sea Picture Here

IF there is one thing which Irvin Willat can do better than most of his contemporaries it is his ability to stage a sea picture in a thoroughly realistic manner. The director responsible for "Behind the Door," and "Below the Surface," has come through with a satisfying offering in the adaptation of Joseph C. Lincoln's story, "Partners of the Tide." Taking up with such a tale from experience gained with identical subjects he has demonstrated that he is perfectly at home. The idea itself is of a familiar pattern. A foreword says that liberties have been taken with the original text. This is permissible with Lincoln since his stories have to do principally with detail, description and atmosphere. Therefore Willat realizing that action must be dominant has added this element as well as supplying good incident and thrills.

After a rather weak start in which he plants his characters, the director swings into his melodramatic sequences which revolve around the conflict of the good people versus the vicious. It is a quaint touch to have an old "granny" type as the goddess of the machine. She is poverty stricken and is desirous of sinking her deceased husband's schooner to gain the insurance. Her granddaughter provides the romantic conflict. The hero has grown up before our eyes and becomes a deep-sea diver. Naturally, being virtuous he is employed by the insurance company to investigate the reason for the sinking, and his rival for the love stakes is a member of the villainous party. The big thrill comes when both put on their diving apparatus and disappear beneath the surface.

The method which Willat employs to bring excitement need not enter into discussion here. The main thing is he accomplishes his purpose. The two divers are investigating the wreck at the bottom of the harbor when the villain causes his rival to be imprisoned in such a fashion that his air line is useless. The former comes to the surface with a perfect alibi. The victim, however, is rescued by the skipper of the vessel. The picture sags a trifle when scenes are flashed ashore, but another thrill is interjected when the villain causes his rival's boat to catch afire. There is some more timely rescue incident—an explosion and what not—which combined may be said to furnish a complete hour of adventure. The feature does not soar when the romantic phase is introduced and the interior action is really conventional. But the diving episodes, the perfect atmosphere (a strong point with Willat) provide full compensation. There is not much opportunity for acting. It is mostly a picture in which the action dominates. One watches the detail rather than the interpretation. The author's name, the title, and the sea atmosphere certainly offer great exploitation possibilities.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Partners of the Tide," Irvin Willat's newest production, comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast of competent players. This is an adaptation of Joseph C. Lincoln's powerfully compelling story of the same name—a story of the deep—a story of the rock-bound coast of New England—a field of literature in which the author is adept at visualizing. It is a picture which carries a full quota of thrills—such as a completely rigged schooner—all sails set—goes crashing on the rocks; the burning of another vessel at sea, and some startlingly realistic deep-sea diving manoeuvres.

These are just three of the gripping incidents that make the production a memorable one. It tells the story of the love of a man for a maid, plus two conscienceless plotters and many an enthralling rescue. It is a picture sprinkled with tears, laughter, thrills, pathos, romance, sentiment, and other dramatic ingredients. Those who have seen it say that it is a fitting successor to "Down Home," "Behind the Door" and "Below the Surface," the other Willat productions.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ———— theatre are assured of a genuine pictorial treat in "Partners of the Tide," which comes to the ———— next ————. You remember "Behind the Door" and "Below the Surface?" Well, "Partners of the Tide" is of the same high calibre—a picture which is marked for its marvelous atmosphere. It is a realistic picture of the deep—a story of sailor-folk—a story of full rigged schooners and deep-sea divers. It is the kind of a picture which Willat can do just a little finer than other directors. There are thrills galore. And a beautiful romance. The story throbs with action and suspense and is acted by an adequate cast. Don't forget this picture; you will feel disappointed if you don't attend and your friends tell you it's a wonder.

CATCH LINES

See "Partners of the Tide," a picture of a hundred thrills; a picture of deep sea divers. A picture of romance and drama of the bleak New England coast.

IF ONLY JIM (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....MAR. 5
"Carey's latest is amusing and entertaining."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Great business with this one. Capacity houses. great deal of word-of-mouth advertising."

INSIDE OF THE CUP, THE (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 22
"Conventional melodrama effectively staged."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Going over very well indeed. Good picture." "Playing to excellent business through second week." "Seemed to take with my patrons and we had good business." "Went over very nicely and the box-office showed business somewhat above the usual." "Every seat in the house was taken at two performances for an entire week. people stood in line for hours waiting for a chance to see this picture. A heavy snowstorm one night when the production was running did not keep the people away. The most notable success of the season." "Almost too strong a dose of morals. Medium business on opening and only fair all week." "A good dramatic picture, full of action, which seemed to please." "Picture went over big and packed them in. Held it for second week." "Fine picture but one that appeals most strongly to the thinking class. Held up comfortably for two weeks." "Did a capacity business. A prereview given for the benefit of ministers caused widespread comment, which added to its power of attraction." "Good story, well done. Pleased the masses. We had a satisfactory two week run." "A good picture with which we had more than usual business." "Plot a little difficult to follow but on the whole picture was above the average and we played to good business during week it showed here."

IT ISN'T BEING DONE THIS SEASON (VITAGRAPH) CORINNE GRIFFITH .....FEB. 26
"Inadequate story, but a veritable fashion show."—M. P. News.

JUCKLINS, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST DEC. 25
"Rural story rich in detail and atmosphere."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pleased those who saw it, but the title not well known enough at this date, with result that it carried no popular appeal." "This feature was well liked by our patrons and went over big for four days." "Very good story. The picture follows the original narrative well and it drew the 'better class' audiences." "Good picture, pulling fairly well." "Had poor business with this, though it seemed to be a good picture." "Great! Monte Blue is just beginning to establish himself, and his following grows with each picture. Business excellent during run." "Rather good, but the name is its worst enemy. Did not draw at all." "Fair picture. The title is poor. Average box office value." "A poor picture, with business below average." "A fair picture with business about as usual."

JUST OUT OF COLLEGE (GOLDWYN) JACK PICKFORD.....FEB. 19
"Slender in plot but rather amusing at times."—M. P. News.

KAZAN (SELIG-HAMILTON-STATE RIGHTS) SPECIAL CAST....FEB. 19
"Another Curwood story makes interesting picture."—M. P. News.

KENTUCKIANS, THE (PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 12

Exhibitor Comment—"Did neither draw nor satisfied. That director missed more good chances than a cat has fleas."—M. P. News.

KID, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLIE CHAPLIN.....JAN. 29
"Long heralded Chaplin six-reeler lives up to expectations."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Wonderful picture and greatest box-office attraction we have ever run. Broke house records first and second weeks of its engagement and crowds are continuing to come in great numbers on third week." "Broke all records for week run. Carried over for 2nd week." "Smashes all records in the history of this theatre." "Broke all house records first week and was held over for second week." "Played twelve shows a day to excellent business. Consider it a knockout. Immense." "Good second week. Picture caused a world of comment." "This picture went over big. Had two weeks' run." "Wonderfully entertaining. Sure did go over big. Packed houses each performance." "May be ranked as one of Chaplin's best. It continues to hold out crowds at every performance." "Kept crowds standing out on the sidewalk for a week. Now on second big week." "Wonderful business from morning till night. Great picture." "A great attraction. Going big on second week of showing." "One of Chaplin's best pictures. Drew big crowds throughout the entire two weeks." "It was a storming success for two weeks, drawing 42,000 persons the first week and slightly less than that number the second week. A knockout. Booked for third week." "The record breaker for the season. Held over for a third week by a house that seldom departs from the week run custom." "Went over big on second week. May hold over for another week." "Second week to big business. Wonderful as an attraction."

KILLER, THE (HAMPTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 29
"Thrilling story given splendid production."—M. P. News.

LITTLE FOOL, THE (C. E. SHURTLEFF-METRO) SPECIAL CAST.MAR. 26
"Should prove interesting entertainment."—M. P. News.

LOVE (J. PARKER READ, JR.-ASSO. PRODUCERS) LOUISE GLAUM .....DEC. 11
"Louise Glaum scores in familiar picture, sumptuously mounted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The title's enough to bring all the women. It's thrilling and surprising, but never offensive. Good business at two simultaneous first-run houses." "Fair picture; did average business three days." Just fair. Didn't do anything remarkable, just cleared expenses. As a picture it's awful; as a box-office attraction it just manages to get by." "Failed to draw after big advertising campaign. Louise Glaum's name is not a box-office getter." "A fairly good box office attraction. The plot is nothing new, but the scenery and settings make the picture worth while." "Good picture which brought more than usual business." "Elaborately mounted sex story that held up fairly good for seven day run."

LOVE, HONOR AND BEHAVE (FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST .....MAR. 26
"Excellent slapstick feature with good action and incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A splendid drawing card. Played to a packed house all week. The picture is an excellent diversion from the more serious presentations."

LOVE LIGHT, THE (UNITED ARTISTS) MARY PICKFORD.....JAN. 22
"Production overshadows the star who is not any too well cast."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The star brought the people to see it and they were not disappointed." "Splendid picture and business. Mary Pickford really pleased everyone. Never heard a complaint. Capacity all week." "Very good production and well liked. Business was good." "Fell down badly second week. Didn't seem to satisfy. For total showing went over from average to poor." "Mary Pickford interesting if one would forget the story which utterly failed to measure up to the standard expected. Held for the entire week to our regret." "Drew well for about three days and then fell off considerably. Even Mary's large following in this city did not all turn out to see it. Newspaper reviewers characterized it as 'poor' and it was dubbed as 'rotten' by many of little Mary's adorers." "Picture fairly interesting but disappointed some of the fans. Business only fair." "Moved here from another theatre of this city. A good picture but business was not up to standard. It looks as if the star is going back."

"Interesting exposition of eternal triangle."—M. P. News.

LURE OF YOUTH (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 22
"Acting is better than the story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This picture not up to average. The plot is weak."

LYING LIPS (INCE-ASSO. PRODUCERS) SPECIAL CAST.....FEB. 19
"Spectacular but false in idea and characterization."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good drawing title but the production did not justify the name. Average picture." "A splendid picture with well sustained suspense and beautiful photography and settings. Will make thousands of new friends for Florence Vidor and please the admirers of House Peters. Did record business for one week and we are holding it over for second week." "A real picture and a splendid entertainment. People went out of their way to comment favorably on it." "Consider this one of the biggest productions of the season. Corking story, unexcelled cast, magnificently mounted, sure to please. Sorry I didn't have double my seating capacity." "Has proved so popular that it has been held over for the fourth week. This is something never before done in this city. Played to over 60,000 in three weeks' run." "Completed a four weeks' run here, in which it drew over 80,000 people. This is one of the greatest records in the history of the city." "Drew a good house for a week, but the picture does not justify its advance advertising. An average picture."

MAD MARRIAGE, THE (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS.....FEB. 12
"Carmel Myers is appealing in Greenwich Village formula."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pretty good picture and we had somewhat more business than usual."

MAMMA'S AFFAIR (FORST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE .....FEB. 5
"Constance Talmadge has serious moments here; picture fairly interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Delighted our people. Box office kept busy."

MAN WHO HAD EVERYTHING, THE (GOLDWYN) JACK PICKFORD .....JAN. 22
"Story and generally good production will get it by."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Terrible. Business was fairly good but that was because the picture played the last part of the week and not because of interest in picture. Pickford unpopular in this territory."

MAN-WOMAN-MARRIAGE (HOLUBAR-FIRST NATIONAL) DOROTHY PHILLIPS.....FEB. 12
"Propaganda and spectacular melodrama are blended here."—M. P. News.

MARK OF ZORRO, THE (UNITED ARTISTS) DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS .....DEC. 11
"Fairbanks puts over another surefire attraction."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big box-office attraction on account of star's popularity. Very good picture." "Great picture. Drew packed houses. Well received and well liked." "Best picture Douglas Fairbanks ever made. We have had such big business during its two weeks run that we are holding it over for a third week." "Very good picture to fine business." "This picture makes a hit with the men. The women do not seem as enthusiastic. Drawing big matinees. Will hold over for another week.'" "Sure did go over well. And the picture is worth it. Had crowded houses during run." "Brought out all the Douglas Fairbanks admirers and then some. It went over big and in the estimation of most people who saw it, it is the best thing Doug has ever done." "One of the best Fairbanks pictures in a long time. Drew capacity houses during its two week's run." "Sure did go over great. Packed houses each performance. Box office receipts very satisfying." "Great picture. Away and the best Fairbanks has ever offered. Packed houses all the time, both because of popularity of star, and because of merit of production."
Consensus—"Excellent picture, big puller."

MAGNIFICENT BRUTE, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....MAR. 26
"A good Western with plenty of action."—M. P. News.

MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE, THE (METRO).....MAR. 5
"Star enlivens story of British politics."—M. P. News.

MIDSUMMER MADNESS (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST .....DEC. 18
"Perfectly constructed picture stamps De Mille as master director."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Holding up fairly well in third week." "This one brought only average business for one week." "Fair picture with business about as usual." "Played to average crowds all week at one theatre. At another the crowds were sufficiently large to justify our booking it for another week." "Found this to be a good entertainer and business was slightly above average during run." "A pleasing picture but it did not draw. Had poor business during run." "Average production and business was about as usual." "Did fair business but had a flock of objections from the long hairs, who perhaps did not see it." "Found this to be an average picture with fair business. Some censorship comment on same." "Very well produced picture, but it brought too much advance criticism and for that reason I don't favor too many of these kind of plays. Let's clean up the screen a bit ourselves. We want pictures with universal box office appeal."

"KNOW YOUR MEN"
(Fox)

Heavily Emotional, But Should Please Star's Admirers

AUDIENCES who are used to a Pearl White of Alaska, or a Pearl White of the wild and wooly West, will be somewhat surprised to find their favorite in a very conventional role in a domestic drama. "Know Your Men" is an emotional story, interesting, but not this star's best piece of work, and not an outstanding production. The plot material is soaked pretty deeply in sentiment, but Director Giblyn seems not content with this, and he makes every scene as heavy as possible. Three times, we believe, the star faints dead away on the floor, under the strain of the misfortune which falls upon her. There are also numerous close-ups of Miss White, with eyes tear-dimmed most of the time.

While the picture is perfectly clean in its scenes, the moral effect left is not for the best, for the reason that the most attractive male character in the play, most capably enacted by Wilfred Lytell, proves, to the surprise of an audience, a roue of the worst type. The story deals with an unsophisticated young girl, whose father fails financially and dies. Her fiance deserts her, and she marries, chiefly out of gratitude, the man who has befriended her and aided her father. Interest sags slightly as the action skips three years, but a few human touches showing the humble American home life, supply the lapse. The first fiance returns and the old love is reawakened. Her husband sends her forth from his house, and it is while waiting for her divorce that she discovers the black side of her fiance's character. So she turns again to her husband and her baby. It is not exactly a triumph of true love, but rather a case of making the best of things.

Harry Browne is an excellent type of the rugged, self-made American, but his make-up, after the lapse of three years is not cleverly done. Lytell will prove a real delight to the feminine half of an audience, and is altogether too likeable to be a heavy. The star herself is highly attractive, and if the sophisticated find the emotion laid on too thickly, her many admirers may like it. There is a cute baby to add a little sugar to the picture. There is little chance of this picture failing to please the Pearl White admirers, but beyond this its prospects are doubtful.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Pearl White, one of the recognized favorites of the American screen public, plays the stellar role in "Know Your Men," the William Fox production which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This is the popular star's latest feature and one which may be classed among her best.

"Know Your Men" affords the star a role which differs from those which she has played in the past. It is a story of an unsophisticated girl who does not know men. She is disappointed when her fiance does not aid her when financial ruin descends upon her family, and, disheartened and discouraged, she marries a man whom she does not love, but who has been faithful and helpful in times of stress.

Playing opposite the star is Wilfred Lytell, a brother of the star, Bert Lytell, who does probably the best work of his career. Others in the cast include C. Downing Clarke, Harry C. Browne and Estar Banks, who gives a wonderful interpretation of a loving mother.

The scenes of "Know Your Men" are laid in a suburb of New York, and some of the scenes are most elaborate and pretentious. There are many gripping scenes in the production and the suspense is never for one moment allowed to fall. The feature will be shown for ———— days at the ———— theatre.

PROGRAM READER

Few, if any, star in picturedom have won for themselves such a high place in the public's favor and held it for such a long time, as Pearl White, who for years was in the very front ranks of all serial actresses, and who is now being starred in a series of features by William Fox. Her latest production, "Know Your Men," will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————.

"Know Your Men" is a society drama, religiously clean, but thoroughly gripping in its action and suspense. It tells the story of the deep love of a girl's heart, and her disappointment when her ideals are shattered. The scenes are laid in a suburb of New York and many exquisite shots of great scenic beauty are included in the picture. Wilfred Lytell, as accomplished on the screen as his brother Bert Lytell, plays opposite the star in a thoroughly capable manner. The story was adapted to the screen by Paul Sloane and the direction was in the hands of Charles Giblyn.

"Know Your Men" will remain at the ———— for ———— days.

SUGGESTIONS

You are practically certain of drawing a goodly crowd by the proper and consistant mention of Pearl White's name. She is a star who has maintained a higher average of popularity for a greater number of years than most actresses. You can bill this as a role different from the usual type of Pearl White parts. It is strictly a society and domestic picture rather than the Western or Alaskan type in which she has appeared in the past. The title has teaser possibilities of the best sort. Wilfred Lytell's name should be used in your copy. He is a capable actor and will please by his work in this picture.

CATCH LINES

The newest Pearl White feature is "Know Your Men," and it will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. A gripping domestic drama well calculated to entertain.

"OUT OF THE CHORUS"
(Realart)

Well Below the Average in Entertainment Values

THEY haven't been coming very good for Alice Brady of late and "Out of the Chorus," her newest release, is about the poorest of the lot. The author has touched upon a tried and true formula for his idea here without once catching the psychology of the characterization. The picture just skims the frothy surface without once realizing any human note. The triumvirate of chorus girl heroine, scion of wealthy family, and cattish mother-in-law are brought forth here with all the false touches intact. One knows just how it will develop to its hopelessly conventional finish. It is well that one can anticipate the action for the sequences are so hap-hazardly put together that the picture resembles a Chinese puzzle.

The plot in a nutshell has to do with a chorus girl who marries into an aristocratic family and has to combat the haughty snobbishness of a mother-in-law as well as her petty plottings to disillusion her son, before the heroine is able to prove that her character is spotless. The incidents are not joined together with any semblance of continuity. There is a scene of back-stage life, and the next finds the characters moving around in society atmosphere. The picture is nothing but a series of sets through which the players are guided about like so many puppets. There is a bid for a bit of triangle play with a villain who doesn't seem to have a single motive for his conduct—unless he is used as the god in the aristocratic dowager's evil machine. The title writer hasn't brought out the sympathetic bid for the heroine since her language is the regulation patter of the dressing room. There is a bit of firearms which once used indicate some drama. But here again the bad cutting destroys any logic the scenes might contain.

The one novel note in this time-worn plot is the introduction of the grand jury instead of the usual panel of twelve men. The husband is vindicated in a hap-hazard manner through the instrumentality of his chorine bride. And mother-in-law steps off her high pedestal. There are so many directorial errors, that if the original story contained any substance it has been destroyed. Miss Brady struggles bravely but her efforts are fruitless. She is poorly lighted. In fact the lighting is extremely mediocre in a majority of the scenes. Charles Gerard as the villain acts with his usual poise and restraint. But he seems to have no motive for his conduct. The rest of the cast provide atmosphere and nothing else.—Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A new Alice Brady picture entitled "Out of the Chorus," will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. In this picture the star enacts the part of a chorus girl who steps into matrimony with the scion of an aristocratic family. This adventure provoked the parents to such a degree that they placed obstacles in her path to disillusion her. Florence Maddis, the ex-chorus girl, is led to believe that her husband is unfaithful—which is all a part of the scheme to make her feel unworthy. Eventually young Van Beekman is goaded to the danger point. He becomes involved in a murder of which he is innocent in order to prove his wife unfaithful. But she remains steadfast in her devotion and is really instrumental in bringing him freedom.

The picture takes one back-stage—into the mysterious world of the footlights. It also takes the spectator to the inner circles of society. Miss Brady has an effective part here—a part which enables her to show her histrionic talent at its highest attainment. Prominent in the company are Charles Gerard and Vernon Steel. The picture is a romantic drama of theatrical life in the metropolis.

PROGRAM READER

Alice Brady, the popular and talented Realart star, will come to the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest attraction entitled, "Out of the Chorus." This is a picture which takes the spectator behind the footlights and enables him to catch a close-up of that fascinating life of the stage. Miss Brady is a member of the chorus who marries a wealthy youth. The ceremony displeases his parents and the chorus girl is forced———— How she rises to the occasion—how she proves to the snobbish parents that all is not dross behind the footlights—how she wins back the love of her husband—how she saves him from———— This is all told in the fascinating picture which Miss Brady makes attractive by her emotional talent.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up Alice Brady and tell something of her screen and theatrical career. Play up the title. Tell that this is a picture of life behind the footlights. Tell that this is a story which is always appealing. People not identified with the stage are always curious to know how life goes on back stage. Tell them that this is a picture which gets over through its charm and atmosphere. Play it up as a fascinating picture which carries romance, sentiment, drama and fine atmosphere. Play up members of the cast. You can put on a good musical act for a prologue. And play up the title.

CATCH LINES

She was a member of the chorus who married into society. What happened? Was she disillusioned? See Alice Brady in "Out of the Chorus."

"THE LOVE SPECIAL"
(Paramount)

Acceptable Entertainment Provided by Good Humor and a Quota of Thrills

PARAMOUNT has given Wallace Reid an acceptable offering in "The Love Special," adapted from Frank Spearman's railroad story, "The Daughter of a Magnate." It is totally unlike some of the star's recent productions since it does not rely entirely upon romance and interiors, but like "The Valley of the Giants," depends a great deal on its exteriors and thrills. Yet the exciting moments are easily dominated by the humorous touches. In all likelihood Frank Spearman treated his story with emphasis placed upon its suspensive values. The sponsors for the adaptation have doubtless aided their own version since it is not so much a picture with a plot as it is a picture of sequences which rely upon humorous incident and an assortment of thrills.

Reid has turned from the steering gear of a motor car to the throttle of a locomotive in this photoplay. In this respect "The Love Special" is similar to the memorable automobile stories. He plays the part of chief engineer of the road and his duties take him to the big outdoors. The high lights of the picture enter when he runs afoul of the president of the road. It is very pleasing comedy here with Theodore Roberts providing most of the fun in his inimitible way. The star is called upon to act as guide for the big mogul and his suite of which his daughter is a member. And some great incident is furnished in the stop-over privileges. The romance enters when the daughter responds to the rough and ready engineer and the melodrama intrudes when a stockholder tries to discount the hero's ingratiating personality. A pleasing incident occurs when Reid and Snitz Edwards, who holds title to the property through which the road has gained an option, hold up the guests in a mountain inn.

The director hasn't paid much attention to Agnes Ayres' wardrobe, since she is allowed to bedeck herself in a Fifth Avenue manner, with the proper costume for every occasion. Again it isn't likely that Reid could pull a locomotive lever with such little expenditure of strength. But these are minor flaws which have nothing to do with the entertainment values. The director might have been less conventional with his big thrill and added more suspense. The two trains could have been slated to come together with a "head-on" and stopped short with a snow bank. The railroad atmosphere sort of falters here. Some will recognize the studio snow. There is a bit of miniature work with the blizzard and locomotive detail, that is first rate. The director has staged the picture against charming backgrounds and there is a note of reality in much of the action. In all "The Love Special" keeps pretty close to the star's average.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is admittedly one of the most entertaining pictures in which the popular Wallace Reid ever appeared will be presented at the ———— theatre next ————. The title of this production is "The Love Special," adapted from one of Frank H. Spearman's railroad stories, "The Daughter of a Magnate." It is said to be a fine, red-blooded story with plenty of mountain railroad atmosphere, a charming romance, and a few well staged thrills to lend spice to the offering. Mr. Reid is well supported by Agnes Ayres, Theodore Roberts, Lloyd Whitlock, Sylvia Ashton and Clarence Burton.

The story revolves around Jim Glover, a construction engineer on a mountain railroad division, who gets involved in romantic complications with the daughter of the president of the road. Jim wins her despite the schemes of Harrison, a director of the road, who also loves the girl. "The Love Special" is one of the most thoroughly outdoor stories with which the star has yet been provided as the basis for a picture. It is the same type of story as "The Valley of the Giants," in which Mr. Reid starred and which proved one of his most popular attractions. The picture is adapted by Eugene B. Lewis and directed by Frank Urson.

PROGRAM READER

Wallace Reid, the popular, good-looking star of Paramount pictures, is coming to the ———— theatre in "The Love Special." It is said that he appears at his best in this adaptation of Frank Spearman's story, "The Daughter of a Magnate." It is a picture which carries a delightful romance between the young construction engineer and the daughter of the new president of the road. The production is packed with outdoor scenes, which give the star ample opportunity to display his courage. One of the big features is a wild ride by the star and his leading woman in a locomotive over the mountain roads. In the supporting cast are Agnes Ayres, Theodore Roberts, Lloyd Whitlock, Sylvia Ashton and Clarence Burton. Watch for further announcements.

SUGGESTIONS

There is no necessity of "bally-hoo-ing" Wallace Reid like some unknown star. He has a big following—in fact is one of the most popular stars on the screen. But you can tell them that "The Love Special" is of the same high calibre as "Always Audacious." You can tell them that it carries a big thrill—that it offers the star an outdoor part similar to that which he enacted in "The Valley of the Giants.' Perhaps your crowd is familiar with the original story. Play up Frank

"JIM THE PENMAN"
(Whitman Bennett-First National)

Grimly Realistic But Artistic Picture From Famous Stage Play

GRIMLY realistic and absolutely logical and consistent is the screen version of the famous old crook melodrama, "Jim the Penman." There is no maudlin sentiment, no overnight reform, no attempt to a "live happy ever after" ending and in consequence the result is a picture that may not please universally, if, since we have been compelled to admit, a considerable portion of picture audiences insist on entertainment rather than acting, pleasing sugar coated romances rather than strongly dramatic plots and stories that come out happily rather than logically.

Lionel Barrymore in the role of the forger who began his life of crime for love of a woman and continued using his genius for copying signatures to amass a fortune, and win a wife who did not love him, is as consistent as is the plot of the story. He gives a remarkable performance marred only from an audience standpoint in that in making his characterization ring true he extracts little sympathy for himself as the hero. "Jim the Penman" of the picture doesn't reform. He takes all of his associates in crime out in a yacht, locks the cabin door and then with the whole crowd trapped in the cabin, smashes a hole in the hull that sends the craft and its passengers to Davy Jones' locker.

This last sequence is an addition to the original, but it contains the best drama of the picture and it is unfortunate that this unhappy but perfectly logical ending will not be relished by the average fan. Telling the story of "Jim the Penman" has taken a lot of titles that slows up the action of the production somewhat, but there is a compensation in the fact that practically a perfect continuity has been evolved.

This is a picture for the discriminating. Those who find the average feature obvious and conventional should hail it for what it really is, an achievement. The production adds to Mr. Barrymore's fame as a great artist and to Whitman Bennett's reputation for giving the screen worthwhile plots done in a consistent, artistic manner.—Length, 6100 feet.—*J. PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The famous old melodrama which thrilled and entertained so many a generation ago, "Jim the Penman," has been adapted to the photoplay with Lionel Barrymore in the leading role and will be the attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement, beginning ————.

The role offered Mr. Barrymore, that of the country bank clerk, who through circumstances was forced to use his genius for duplicating the signatures of other people, in forgeries that netted a gang of crooks millions, is one that gives him unlimited opportunities for acting and in the star's support is a talented cast of well known players including Doris Rankin, in private life Mrs. Barrymore, Andres Randolf, Gladys Leslie and others of equal prominence.

The play which has been famous so many years has proven excellent picture material, its strongly dramatic plot making a firm foundation and the manner in which it has been developed by director Kenneth Webb adds to the feature's value.

As a box office attraction nothing more could be desired. The name of the play and the fame of the star combine in making "Jim the Penman" a most unusual feature.

PROGRAM READER

"Jim the Penman," with Lionel Barrymore, famous star of the speaking stage and popular favorite of the screen, is the attraction booked for the ———— for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

This famous old stage success by Sir James L. Young with its perfect plot and strongly dramatic situations has made Mr. Barrymore an admirable starring vehicle.

He plays the role of Jim Ralston, a bank clerk, with a genius for imitating signatures, who unwittingly and with all the best of intentions in the beginning is forced to become a forger, his crimes earning for him the title of "Jim the Penman" from both the police and the gang of crooks.

In support of the star is a strong cast of players including Doris Rankin, in private life Mrs. Barrymore, Anders Randolf, Gladys Leslie and other well known screen personages. The picture was directed by Kenneth L. Webb and is a First National attraction.

The story of "Jim the Penman" is as familiar as that of "Way Down East." The play has been a classic melodrama for half a century and now that it finds its way to the screen, the excellence of its plot and the dramatic story is once again demonstrated. In the title role Mr. Barrymore is provided with probably his best screen vehicle to date. The role of Jim gives him a chance to demonstrate what is often said on Broadway, "that Lionel is the best actor of the family."

SUGGESTIONS

In billing "Jim the Penman" we would lay emphasis on the play from which the picture has been adapted, telling something of its history, how long it has lived, etc., and get over the idea that the plot is well out of the ordinary. If Mr. Barrymore has become popular with your patrons you can call attention to his former pictures especially "The Copperhead." Bill the offering seriously at all times. For a prologue you could not do better than to stage a part of the original play, a script of which is obtainable from any company selling amateur plays.

Adolph Zukor presents . . . . . SIR JAMES M. BARRIE'S

"Sentimental Tommy"

with GARETH HUGHES, MABEL TALIAFERRO and MAY McAVOY

ALL of Barrie's charm and understanding of human nature have been captured in the screen version of his two fiction masterpieces, "Sentimental Tommy" and "Tommy and Grizel." The story that has made millions laugh and weep is there before you in all its tender reality. The picture will break records everywhere.

POOR little Grizel, an outcast because her mother was the "Painted Lady," Tommy, the most lovable boy in fiction, the grim old doctor and all the other kindly, humorous and pathetic characters are interpreted by a notable cast. Another signal achievement of the man who made "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

a dramatic comedy to be released through The United Artists Corporation to the motion picture exhibitors throughout the country—

THAT IS, TO THOSE THAT WANT IT.

It is Mr. Griffith's first production since "Way Down East,"— requiring more sets and almost as much time as that production.

It will be first shown in the CENTRAL THEATRE, Broadway, NEW YORK, THURSDAY, APRIL 7, AT PRICES FROM 50 cents to $2.00.

Without regard to how great a success this New York showing may be after this exploitation in New York and one or two other cities, this picture will be delivered to the United Artists Corporation on April 25.

Mr. Griffith has never entertained any other idea than to fulfill as satisfactorily as was in his power his contract to produce this picture for the exhibitors.

of LIGHTING—CONTROL

Only the MAJOR allows any number of lighting changes to be set up in advance without disturbing those in operation.

A unit, a combination of units, or the whole board can be controlled from any part of the theatre.

Fire and injury risks are reduced to the minimum—the MAJOR is a dead-front board with added provisions for safety.

The unit elements composing the MAJOR Board occupy a minimum of floor space—a small pilot board on the stage-floor operates the main board in the basement or other out-of-the-way place. Heavy feeders are kept off the stage.

The newest and finest theatres in the country use MAJOR Boards—for example, The Capitol, St. Paul; The People's, The Illinois, and the Tivoli, in Chicago; Keith's New Palace, Cincinnati; The David Garrick, Cleveland; The New State Theatre, Minn.

FROM THE WEST

Adapted from
The Torch Bearer

With the action both East and West this William Russell production offers an exceptional opportunity to give the fans action—and that's what they want now.

Charlotte Burton, who needs no introduction—Harvey Clark, who has made thousands of friends during his many years in "Flying A" features (play up Clark, he has a following)—Dick LaReno, who appeared in Behold My Wife—in fact the cast is "ALL STAR."

This feature has suspense, romance, action. It is a film classic that has stood the test of time and is infinitely better than many new productions now offered.

THE VIRTUOUS OUTCAST

Adapted from Faith

Here is the best feature Mary Miles Minter ever made—bar none!

First, the star! Next, a story that just fits her. And the cast! They are all stars — Clarence Burton, who appeared in Behold My Wife — Gertrude LeBrandt—John Gough, who was in Six Feet Four—Perry Banks — Margaret Shelby—Lizette Thorne!

This feature will bring tears to the eyes and a sob to the throat of everyone who sees it. It scores a hit in any house, with any audience.

THE MAN FROM MEDICINE HAT

Adapted from
The Manager of the B and A

If they like thrills, action, suspense—they've got 'em here! The thrills, action, and suspense that made J. P. McGowan a successful director, and he's put 'em in this one — featuring Helen Holmes.

A runaway box car narrowly missing a collision with the Limited—a fight in the railroad yards — a hospital fire and thrilling rescue — a street fight — a whole town on fire—the forest ablaze—a rescue train rushing through the falling, blazing trees—it's all one big thriller.

Helen Holmes, Leo D. Maloney, Paul C. Hurst, William N. Chapman, William Brunton—every one at the top notch, in a rapid-fire feature that makes you hold your breath.

QUICK ACTION

Adapted from In Bad

An Action Comedy Drama Western with William Russell, supported by three stars. Bull Montana as a "box-fighter"—Francella Billington as the "sweetheart"—Harvey Clark as the "Papa-in-Law."

Crammed full of action, starting in the East and going straight West. There isn't a dull moment in the whole feature. There's a laugh every few minutes. And suspense right along. You're held right to the screen to the very last close-up. A dandy scrap between Russell and Bull Montana—an escape from the police—and Western action all over the hills of Arizona. Every exhibitor who plays this will mop-up!

How I Presented "A Tale of Two Worlds"

By S. L. ROTHAFEL

"A Tale of Two Worlds" did remarkable business at the Capitol Theatre. There is a short episode in the early part of the picture laid in Pekin during the Boxer Rebellion. As soon as this was finished and before the title announced that the action had been switched to America, I "faded out" the screen, revealing a stage setting of a balcony in Chinatown. A girl singer, costumed like Leatrice Joy as "Sui Sen" in the picture, then sang the Chinese lullaby from "East is West." The setting was in the centre of the stage masked by a scrim decorated with long Chinese banners, and the singer was flooded by mellow lights. The interlude was applauded at each showing.

PENRHYN STANLAWS—DIRECTOR

Who gives to the screen in his two first Realart productions, starring Wanda Hawley, "THE OUTSIDE WOMAN" and "THE HOUSE THAT JAZZ BUILT," those elements which are the natural heritage of his former profession—elements which make these two pictures stand out as something distinctly new and refreshing and daring:

Complete freedom from the shackles of stereotyped tradition in screen expression;
Masterful control and adroit development of comedy situations;
Admirable restraint in dramatic moments;
Faultless artistry in his conception of scenes and settings;
Genius for design which leaves the Stanlaws stamp of exquisite taste upon every costume in the pictures—from the fairy-like creations of Wanda Hawley to those worn by the least important of the extras; and finally,
Convincing humanness which transforms a strip of celluloid into life itself, and makes an audience part of the story which is being told.

"THE HOUSE THAT JAZZ BUILT"

A picture which ideally blends humor and pathos in portraying the near-shipwreck of two young people to whom success came too suddenly.

While its rapid movement and delightful humor establish it at once as a comedy, this story, adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story, "Sweetie Peach," by Sophie Kerr, contains also several situations of dramatic power and appeal, which make of it a thoroughly human chronicle of married life.

Clean, crisp and absorbing—just the sort of a production, a combination such as Wanda Hawley - Penrhyn Stanlaws - Sophie Kerr would guarantee!

William Fox announces his forthcoming production

MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS

A production, gigantic in scope, portraying the life of Mary Stuart, one of the most remarkable and romantic figures in history.

For two years William Fox has been quietly working on this production, tapping all the vast resources of his powerful organization to make the photoplay presentation the greatest ever screened.

J. Gordon Edwards, who directed the Fox magnificent production, "Queen of Sheba," is directing "Mary Queen of Scots." He, and a company of Fox players, are embarking immediately for Europe; the concluding scenes of this gigantic historical drama will be made in France, Scotland and England, where the ill-fated queen lived her romance, made her fight and enjoyed her brief triumph.

No single historical work has been followed in writing this scenario; no published romance or drama has been used as the basis for this story. The Fox production of "Mary Queen of Scots" is founded on material of unchallengeable authenticity, a corps of literary experts, under the direction of Mr. Fox, having spent two full years in sifting from the archives of history the great dramatic romance of the woman whose beauty swayed the destinies of nations.

Los Angeles Banks and the Industry

A DEFINITE and serious movement is on with the Los Angeles banks to enter the picture business.

Some producer financing has already been done by these banks. The present plans however contemplate a financial alliance of considerable and regular proportions.

We are told that four different groups are investigating the problem.

One of the objects sought is to bring distribution headquarters to Los Angeles. We do not know of the practicability of such a plan; but some sound arguments in theory are advanced in favor of it.

There should always be, with any product, a close contact with and sympathy between the making and selling operations. There generally is. The gap of thirty-two hundred miles between these two important functions in the picture industry does not tend toward harmonious action, especially with so changeable a product as the picture and one so sensitive to public taste.

To our mind, however, the important thing is the entrance of the bank. This is essential to production effort; it is still more important because it has to do with the stability of the entire industry.

We have had several eras of finance; they are still operative.

There has been the era of financing production and distribution through the advance deposits of the exhibitor. We have the era of financing production through the distributor, whereby the distributor has advanced or later met the negative cost.

Neither one has been satisfactory. Neither is sound from an economic standpoint. Both have been makeshifts, necessary undoubtedly, in the swift growth of an industry furnishing a product of great popular consumption.

Some of the largest operations have been financed through Wall Street. These have been called banking operations. They have been of the promotion bank order however, in which stock was underwritten and offered to the public.

We are not criticizing any of these methods of finance. They have been followed by many industries, notably that of the automobile.

We cite them simply to point out the distinction of the present situation of the Los Angeles banks which are deposit banks. They will enter the industry, if at all, upon a strictly commercial basis.

They will finance pictures upon their market value, as nearly as this can be determined. The proven ability and experience of the producer, his resources, his business organization and management, his product, its quantity and quality, these will be weighed upon the banking scales.

It seems to us that production has become a banking proposition.

There are a good many producers today about whose ability to produce profit-making pictures there is not too much question. Proper business management is, of course, a prime consideration. Studio waste must go.

It has also been proven in the past and it is being shown clearly today that the picture, so far as public buying is concerned, is not subject to wide fluctuations, is not greatly affected by hard times. In the depression of 1910 motion pictures did not suffer. Today the public has not stopped buying them as is the case with most other commodities, except only in spots where severe industrial depression has existed.

The labor problem, a vital element in the situation of other industries, does not concern us to any considerable degree. The difference between the manufacturing cost of our product and the gross income is so wide as to bear no comparison with the case of the maker of hammers, who finds that eighteen of the twenty-five cents he receives for his article must be charged off to "labor cost."

There is a good, a mighty good, and solid foundation beneath this business.

THE big factor, however, is distribution. We mean the economic and efficient selling of the acceptable picture—to the exhibitor and through him to the public. The bank, it would seem, cannot concern itself with production without also seriously concerning itself with distribution, without, in fact, taking a hand in the adoption or reordering or creation of proper distribution channels.

The machinery of distribution, its reason for existence, its fundamental policy, its efficiency; the important question of advertising, so inseparable from the picture, the problem, highly important, too, of a fair and square rental policy; these are matters the bank must investigate and have to do with.

It is just for this reason that we welcome the commercial banker. Waste exists, as we all know. It exists upon a very large scale, and it is due not to the small leaks, but to a very few and very great economic faults. The bank, it would seem to us, will have the insight and the leverage to hasten the correction of these faults.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

What is a Fair Rental?

Here is the Exhibitor's Answer

What is the fair basis of renting a picture?

Flat price?

Straight percentage?

Or guarantee and percentage?

If flat rental, what is a fair price? If guarantee and percentage, what amount should be guaranteed?

Is a definite standard of values possible?

If not, how are individual cases to be decided? On seating capacity? Population? Admission price? Quality of clientele? Or otherwise?

THESE are problems, yet unanswered by the industry, which have been the subject of disputes since the earliest days of motion pictures. Very little really constructive effort has been made to obtain a solution, this probably for the reason that producers and distributors, generally, have been well satisfied apparently with results, and exhibitors, even if not satisfied, have hesitated to turn from the present plan for fear of running afoul something less advantageous.

In view of these conditions it is worthy of more than passing mention that one of the youngest distributing organizations in the industry has for the past few months been conducting an experiment which, whatever else may be the outcome, sheds light on exhibitor opinion regarding rentals.

This scheme has been called by various names, but the one which perhaps best fits it is the "Honor Plan." The fixing of the rental is left entirely to the exhibitor, who, however, is not asked to make a decision until after he has played the picture.

Such a plan, if fairly conducted, would seem to afford some idea of the exhibitor's point of view with respect to rentals. The distributor, in this case, does not require, or even request, a box office statement, or any explanation of the method of arriving at the rental which the exhibitor remits, nevertheless it finds, according to statements issued from its offices in New York, that approximately seventy per cent of the exhibitors either report box office receipts voluntarily, or write an explanation of the plan adopted for figuring the distributor's share of the proceeds. In a few cases the returns have been accompanied by affidavits.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has had access to some of these reports, conditional upon not making public the names of exhibitors or theatres or the amounts remitted, this information being held by the distributor as a confidential matter between it and its customers. On the part of the NEWS, the inquiry was undertaken with the understanding that it was not giving its endorsement to a selling scheme or policy, or to the productions offered, and that its interest was wholly that of an investigator of evidence respecting the exhibitor idea of the right method of determining what constitutes a fair rental.

Fifty Per Cent the Average

OBVIOUSLY, a variety of opinions are expressed, but the average of the returns examined, assuming that they are truthful statements, indicates remittances of approximately fifty per cent, usually figured on the gross, but occasionally on the net. There are, however, a number of plans adopted for figuring the percentage, and not all of these, though submitted as "fifty-fifty splits," by any means actually amount to that much.

A case in point is that of a Western exhibitor who writes: "In arriving at the above settlement we deducted from our gross receipts for overhead, posters and filler service and allowed you fifty per cent of the remainder for film rental, we standing the film rental tax and extra newspaper advertising out of our fifty per cent."

Much depends here, of course, on what the overhead is, what is paid for filler service and how much extra advertising is done. Inasmuch, however, as the distributor does not question these items, or request detailed information about them, a decision cannot be reached regarding the actual proportion of the gross receipts which was returned.

Another exhibitor—midwest city of 20,000 population—also has the equal division idea, but from a different angle. "This," he says, "is better than fifty per cent of our gross receipts. If we had been playing you fifty-fifty, you would have had display and newspapers to pay."

The two cases just cited doubtless would be considered very similar and yet if a basis for rentals was being sought in advance of the playing of a picture, it is easy to understand that there might be several difficulties in the way of these two men coming to terms. They themselves, by their divergent methods of figuring, would suggest the question: "What is a fair basis for determining rentals?"

In several instances the explanation is made that "this is fifty-fifty after expenses were paid," but, of course, a statement of this sort is decidedly indefinite. However, good faith is evidenced by such postscripts as the following: "I hope this is satisfactory; it is a very good showing for this town." In passing, it should be said that there are many such comments. Exhibitors very generally request when remitting for their first picture that they be advised if the amount sent is not considered satisfactory by the distributor.

Deduct the Snow Storm

"YOU can see what my receipts were," says one on submitting fifty per cent of the gross. "Bucked a basket game and a snow storm. A very good picture."

But not all of the exhibitors figure exclusively on a basis of gross receipts. "We are remitting," says one, "about thirty-five per cent of our gross receipts and more than fifty per cent of our net receipts. Is this satisfactory?"

In other words, this exhibitor allowed thirty-five per cent of the gross, deducted his expenses and then added fifty per cent of the remainder.

If exhibitor and distributor were negotiating terms in advance of playing a picture, differences of opinion existing even among exhibitors, as evidenced by these reports, would seem to open wide the doors for discussion and contention. In this case, however, the distributor is not interested in the method of arriving at the amount remitted; all that concerns it is the total figure.

The remittance in one case was reported by the theatre management to be seventy-seven pr cent. of gross receipts. Is that too much? Or is it too little?

What IS a fair rental?

The exhibitor asks and answers this latter question himself in the following comment: "I certainly believe your feature is worth more," he says. "You see, we are out all of our house expenses, but I have not the gall to offer you less for such a fine feature."

Here was an instance of the exhibitor placing an arbitrary value on the picture. Receipts were not up to expectations, and so he stands a loss equivalent to his cost of operating in order to insure what he considers a fair deal to the distributor. Nor are such instances by any means uncommon.

And this brings up another phase of the situation. Doesn't the attitude on the part of this exhibitor indicate that back in his mind somewhere is the doubt that the Honor Plan method of "play and pay" is fair to the producer because it obligates the producer to gamble with the exhibitor?

Receipts were affected in many cities and particularly in the smaller places, by unfavorable weather, bad roads, religious meetings, political rallies, school socials, opposition features especially obtained to offset competition, by dances, skating contests and even by epidemics.

What should the exhibitor pay under such circumstances? Is that part of the hazard of the business? Is it a risk which he should assume alone, or should it be divided by the distributor? In the latter case, what should be the basis of the division?

Here arises the possibility that some exhibitors might make a conscientious return on very bad nights, but arrange their divisions for good nights on some other basis. In other words, there is a chance that producer and distributor would be forced to gamble with exhibitors on the bad nights, but would not participate in the same ratio on the good nights.

Some Bend Backwards

OPINIONS differ here as materially as on kindred phases of the rental problem. Many exhibitors simply send a share of their gross receipts, automatically causing the distributor to share their adversity. Others, as in the case previously cited, feel constrained to make an allowance.

Here is a typical report from one of the smaller towns: "Had a bad snow storm and very few turned out. I am sending you all that was taken in and paying the express both ways on the film."

Another exhibitor, similarly handicapped, writes: "We had a bitterly cold night. We think the attendance was good for that kind of a night. We do not want a cent for this time." And, by way of proof, he submits a detailed statement showing that his whole net receipts have been returned as rental.

"A bad night. Picture worth more than I can afford to pay," says another who encountered similarly unfavorable conditions. "I am sending you what was the writer's profit and more." This was twenty-five per cent of the gross. Yet the same mail brought more than sixty-five per cent of the gross receipts from one exhibitor who explained that a "rainy night and entertainment at the High School" were operating against him.

An exhibitor in a Central state also met with this sort of opposition. "There was a big basket ball game, a dance and a big banquet in town that night," he reported. "Too much doing for one little town. I expected to have a full house. I am ashamed to send you your share on the picture."

One reported that he "lost money on show," explaining that "a small flu epidemic is keeping attendance down at all shows. If I paid on basis of what I made," he pointed out, "you would owe me, but it was no fault of the picture that the crowd was small."

Who should bear the burden in a case like that? Is it a fair proposition to ask the distributor to take the local risks of weather and competition as well as of production?

"A very fine picture and well liked" is the beginning of another comment. "We had a rainy night and very small crowd—and also had a home talent play by the school the night before. We have sent you the long end of the receipts, but," he adds, "we would have lost money on a picture bought any other way."

It is, perhaps, worthy of attention that although this man did not lose on the picture, neither did he profit because he returned an unusually large percentage of his receipts for the use of the film.

"Enclosed find statement of business done," says a report from a midwest exhibitor. "This shows a loss to me, but the picture was fine and pleased my patrons."

In passing it might be said that such reports, regarding unfavorably weather conditions and other forms of opposition, were almost entirely from the smaller towns and villages where such things are of greater moment than in the larger places.

The height of these misfortunes, it seems, was reached by the exhibitor who sent in the following: "Stormy night, measles, whooping cough, church social, Odd Fellows banquet and Lent the extent of our competition." His valuation of the picture was influenced by the opposition mentioned to the extent that his remittance was well over fifty per cent of his gross receipts. Should these factors have been considered by him in fixing a fair rental?

The Comedy Got the Money

IT would be misleading, however, to cite these instances without calling attention to the other extremes. In one instance a return is made which figures to be about five per cent of gross receipts, but the remitter explains that he was put to unusual expense in buying a comedy (for which, by the way, he paid more than he did for the feature picture).

There have been a few, but only a few, reports of "no rental earned." In most of these cases explanations are made which tend to show that the picture was exhibited against odds for which the distributor was in no way responsible.

From an analysis of one hundred reports, selected at random, and which, therefore, may or may not strike an average, it is shown that exhibitors answer the question, "What is a fair rental?" in this way:

Thirty-four per cent figure that the distributor is entitled to one-half of the gross receipts.

Sixteen per cent consider the distributors' share to be one-half of the receipts after making varying deductions, such as overhead, overhead and advertising, overhead and transportation, etc.

The remaining fifty per cent make returns according to their judgment of what the picture earned, or is worth, without regard to how this figures from a percentage standpoint. Many of these remittances are considerably better than half of the gross receipts.

As between these latter methods there is no apparent means of arriving at a common ground of computation, but naturally this is partly due to the nature of the Realart proposition. Not being asked to make an accounting, or to state their way of arriving at the right rental, exhibitors have not always felt called upon to offer explanations.

There have been many exhibitor comments, of course, upon the plan itself, but the acme of pessimism, according to J. S. Woody, Realart's general manager, was attained by the theatre manager who reported: "Very good picture, but film caught fire in machine and burned up before show was over."

Personal View Always Enters

REALART'S own opinion of evidence adduced by the Honor Plan with respect to methods of determining rentals is that there is no reasonable approach to agreement on the part of the exhibitors. This is indicated, it is contended, by reports from theatres in different towns where receipts and expenses were approximately the same, but resulted in very different returns to Realart.

Moreover, according to Mr. Woody, the same exhibitor rarely succeeds in preventing his personal opinion of a picture from influencing his remittance. Opportunity for study of this phase of the problem is presented because the distributor's offer includes five Mayflower special features, all of which, except those previously played in the city, must be run. It is asserted that remittances for a picture sometimes are less than for a previously run production which had smaller gross receipts.

A clue to the exhibitor's attitude in these instances often is found in some such general comment as: "Good business, but not as well liked as the previous picture." Here, of course, payment is based upon opinion of the production and not upon its drawing power.

Perhaps, as Mr. Woody suggests, the exhibitor in these cases credits the crowd to his theatre rather than to the picture and purposes penalizing the distributor slightly for not making all of the productions equally entertaining from his personal standpoint.

The best answer to the question of rental value, according to Realart, is to be found in the fact that upward of 100 letters have been received in a week from exhibitors who desired to know in advance what Realart's definition of a fair rental was. In many cases, the question has been repeated even after it was explained that the exhibitor was the sole judge.

A large amount of evidence is on file to show that under no circumstances could some exhibitors be induced to give playing dates until they had obtained a statement that a certain sort of settlement, usually involving a percentage, would be satisfactory.

There has, therefore, at least to the extent indicated, been a disposition on the part of exhibitors themselves to avoid being placed in the position of deciding what constitutes a fair rental, or even what a fair basis of determining rentals is.

Lichtman with Associated Producers

OSCAR A. PRICE, president of the Associated Producers, announced on Tuesday of this week, the appointment of Al Lichtman, formerly general manager of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to the general-managership of the Associated Producers organization to succeed F. B. Warren. Mr. Lichtman has assumed his new office.

At the home-office of Associated Producers, New York City, Mr. Lichtman issued the following statement:

"It is a source of great gratification to have become an integral part of an organization that stands for the good and great things that the Associated Producers are trying to accomplish.

"It has been my desire ever since I resigned from Famous Players-Lasky, either to go into the distribution of motion pictures for myself or to affiliate with an organization that stands for the best and biggest in the industry. This I have found in Associated Producers.

"It always has been my contention that motion pictures should be sold on merit alone—that is, that the exhibitor should be permitted to choose for himself the productions that best please his patrons and consequently bring more money to his box office.

"The members of Associated Producers and myself are working and shall work toward the same end: the preparation for the picture market of the best there is in screen material and its sale to exhibitors on a live and a let live policy. I want to so co-ordinate the interests of producer and exhibitor that there will not be the slightest ground for the charge that either party to the contract is not getting all that he is entitled to."

Mr. Lichtman said he was contemplating no immediate or sweeping changes in the personnel of the distributing organization, though he said he might later have an announcement to make concerning some new angles of selling policy. At the moment, he is devoting his entire time to getting a grasp on the mass of detail work that confronts him in his new office.
